Under the provision, the exception to the early withdrawal tax for certain distributions from an ESOP is extended for 2 years so that it applies to distributions made before January 1, 1992.

Effective date

The provision is effective for distributions after December 31, 1989.

8. SPECIAL RULES FOR UNDERCOVER OPERATIONS OF THE IRS (SEC. 6108 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 7608 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 provided an exemption for IRS undercover operations from certain Federal laws generally applicable to Federal agencies. Thus, the IRS is permitted to purchase property, acquire businesses, deposit money in banks, and reinvest the proceeds of an undercover operation in that operation, provided that the IRS Commissioner certifies that these activities are necessary for the conduct of an IRS undercover operation. These special rules are similar to the rules applicable to undercover operations of Customs, the FBI, and DEA.

IRS must also submit to the Congress an annual report providing information on undercover operations conducted under these special rules. Because the Anti-Drug Abuse Act was enacted on November 10, 1988, IRS has not yet issued the first required report to the Congress.

These special rules cease to apply after December 31, 1989.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to extend this provision for two years to permit the IRS to continue to conduct its undercover operations in a manner similar to other Federal law enforcement agencies. The committee also believes that continued Congressional oversight of these provisions is important; the two-year period before expiration will provide opportunity for the Congress to consider the effectiveness of this provision.

Explanation of provision

The application of the special rules for undercover operations of the IRS is extended for two years. Thus, these provisions will expire on January 1, 1992.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment, and extends these special rules for two years.

9. TWO-YEAR EXTENSION OF GENERAL FUND TRANSFERS TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT TIER II TRUST FUND OF AMOUNTS FROM TAXATION OF TIER II BENEFITS (SEC. 6109 OF THE BILL)

Present law

The railroad retirement program consists of a Tier I benefit structure which is generally equivalent in benefits and financing to the social security program, and a separately financed Tier II benefit structure, which is similar to private-sector pension plans. The Tier II benefits are financed primarily by payroll taxes. Tier II benefits are generally includible in income for tax purposes in the same manner as benefits received under any employer-maintained qualified pension plan. The Railroad Retirement Solvency Act of 1983 provides for the transfer from the general fund of the Treasury to the Railroad Retirement Trust Fund of an amount equal to revenues received from the taxation of Tier II benefits. This transfer to the Railroad Retirement Trust Fund applies only to benefits that are received prior to October 1, 1989.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the purposes of the Railroad Retirement Solvency Act of 1983 are furthered through the extension of the provision allowing for a transfer of amounts from the general funds of the Treasury to the Railroad Retirement Tier II Trust Fund.

Explanation of provision

The transfer of proceeds from the taxation of railroad retirement Tier II benefits from the general fund of the Treasury to the Railroad Retirement Trust Fund is extended for two additional years, to October 1, 1991.

Effective date

The provision is effective for benefits received prior to October 1, 1991.

10. CREDIT FOR NONCONVENTIONAL FUELS (SEC. 6110 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 29 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Nonconventional fuels are eligible for a production credit which is equal to $3 per barrel of BTU oil barrel equivalent. Those fuels which are eligible must be produced from a well drilled, or a facility placed in service, before January 1, 1991. Qualified fuels are eligible for the production credit through December 31, 2000.

Gas from a tight sands formation was eligible for the production credit under a special rule (sec. 29(c)(2)(B) as long as natural gas was subject to price controls, under section 107 of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

Reasons for change

The most recent information from geologists is that a significant production capacity for production of gas from tight sands formations can be developed. The committee believes that reinstatement of the section 29 incentives for all tight sands gas is desirable in order to accelerate increases in such production since U.S. reliance on imported sources of energy appears to be increasing. The committee also believes that a general two-year extension of the period for placing in service facilities and wells is desirable because of the growing importance of imported energy sources.

Explanation of provision

(1) Production of gas from a tight sands formation is eligible for the production credit even though the price of natural gas no longer is subject to price control. The production credit for gas produced from a tight sands formation is available for gas from wells drilled after December 31, 1989.

(2) The production credit for nonconventional fuels is extended to apply to wells drilled or facilities placed in service before January 1, 1992, instead of before January 1, 1991.

Effective date

The reinstatement of gas from tight sands formations is effective on January 1, 1990. Tight sands gas from wells drilled after December 31, 1989, also will be eligible for the production credit. The extension of the placed in service date for all qualified fuels is effective as of January 1, 1990.

11. LOW-INCOME RENTAL HOUSING TAX CREDIT (SECS. 6111 AND 6112 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 42 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Overview of Credit

Section 42 of the Code provides a tax credit that may be claimed by owners of residential rental property used for low-income housing. The credit is claimed annually, generally for a period of 10 years beginning either with the year a building is placed in service or the succeeding taxable year (the credit period).[1]

Determination of Credit Amount

For buildings placed in service in 1987, the costs of new construction and substantial rehabilitation that are not federally subsidized are eligible for a maximum 9-percent credit, claimed annually for 10 years. For buildings placed in service in 1987, the acquisition cost of existing buildings and the costs of new construction and substantial rehabilitation which are federally subsidized are eligible for a maximum 4-percent credit, also claimed annually for 10 years. For buildings placed in service after 1987, these credit percentages are adjusted to maintain a present value of 70 percent and 30 percent for the two types of credits, and are determined monthly for property placed in service in each month. A taxpayer's credit amount in any taxable year is the product of the appropriate credit percentage and the qualified basis in such year.

Credit Percentage

For buildings placed in service after 1987, the credit percentage is determined monthly, to achieve a present value of either 70 percent (most newly constructed and substantially rehabilitated buildings) or 30 percent (existing buildings and all federally-subsidized buildings) of the qualified basis. The present value is calculated as of the last day of the first year of the 10-year credit period. The discount rate used to determine the present value is 72 percent of the average of the annual applicable Federal rates (AFR) for mid-term and long-term obligations applicable for the month the building is placed in service.

The Treasury Department's monthly adjustments of the credit percentages are to be determined on a discounted after-tax basis, based on the average of the annual applicable Federal rates (AFR) for mid-term and long-term obligations for the month the building is placed in service. The after-tax interest rate is to be computed as the product of (1) the average AFR and (2) .72 (one minus the maximum individual Federal income tax rate). The discounting formula assumes each credit is received on the last day of each year and that the present value is computed as of the last day of the first year.

For buildings placed in service after 1987, however, the taxpayer (with the consent of the housing credit agency) may irrevocably elect to determine the credit percentage applicable to the building in advance of the building's placed-in-service date. Such an election will be binding for Federal income tax purposes on the taxpayer, the housing credit agency, and all successors in interest. The election must be made by the fifth day of the month following the close of the month in which a binding agreement is made between the taxpayer and the housing credit agency as to the housing credit dollar amount to be allocated to the building. In the case of a building financed with the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds for which no allocation from a housing credit agency is required, the election must be made by the fifth day of the month following the close of the month the bonds are issued.

The credit percentage for substantial rehabilitation expenditures is determined when the rehabilitation is completed and placed in service, but no later than the end of the 24-month period for which such expenditures are aggregated. These rehabilitation expenditures are treated as a separate new building for purposes of the credit.

Qualified basis

In general.—The qualified basis with respect to which the credit is computed is determined as the percentage of eligible basis in a qualified low-income building attributable to the low-income rental housing units. This percentage is the lesser of (1) the percentage of low-income units to all residential rental units or (2) the percentage of the floor space of the low-income units to the floor space of all residential rental units. In these calculations, low-income units generally are those housing units actually occupied by low-income tenants, whereas residential rental units are all housing units, whether or not occupied.

With respect to the new construction credit, the eligible basis of a building is determined at its placed-in-service date. With respect to the acquisition and substantial rehabilitation credits, the eligible basis of a building is determined at the end of the first taxable year of the credit period. This determination is made before the basis of the building is adjusted to take into account depreciation deductions allowable for such first taxable year.

Additions to qualified basis.—The qualified basis of a building may be increased subsequent to the initial determination only by reason of an increase in the number of low-income units or in the floor space of the low-income units. Credits claimed on such additional qualified basis are determined using a credit percentage equal to two-thirds of the applicable credit percentage allowable for the initial qualified basis. As described below under the description of the State credit ceiling, an allocation of credit authority must be received for credits claimed on additions to qualified basis, in the same manner as for credits claimed on the initial qualified basis, if the building has no unused credit authority that may be applied toward such increase. Unlike credits claimed on the initial qualified basis, credits claimed on additions to qualified basis are allowable annually on a straight-line basis for the portion of the required 15-year compliance period remaining after eligibility for such credits arises, regardless of the year such additional qualified basis is determined.

Eligible basis

In general.—Eligible basis consists of (1) the cost of new construction, (2) the cost of substantial rehabilitation, and (3) the cost of acquisition of existing buildings acquired by purchase (including the additions to qualified basis attributable to rehabilitation expenditures, if any, to such buildings incurred before the close of the first taxable year of the credit period the cost of which does not exceed $2,000 per low-income unit). Qualified basis is determined in the same fractional manner as for new construction or acquisition costs even if all rehabilitation expenditures are made only to low-income units. Only the adjusted basis of depreciable property may be included in eligible basis.

Generally, the eligible basis of a building is determined at the time the building is placed in service. For this purpose, rehabilitation expenditures (resulting in qualified basis in excess of $2,000 of per low-income unit) are treated as placed in service at the close of the period when rehabilitation expenditures are incurred. Such period is not to exceed 24 months. In the case of rehabilitation expenditures incurred in connection with the acquisition of an existing building (and which do not average at least $2,000 of qualified basis per low-income unit), capital expenditures incurred through the end of the first year of the credit period may be included in the original eligible basis. Rehabilitation expenditures need not, however, be incurred by the taxpayer claiming the credit; under certain circumstances, they may have been incurred by the seller of the building. Cf. Treas. Reg. sec. 1.167(k)-1(b)(1).

Only the adjusted basis of the building and certain common facilities (e.g., parking areas and recreational facilities) may be included in eligible basis. The adjusted basis is determined by taking into account the adjustments described in section 1016 (other than paragraphs (2) and (3) of sec. 1016(a), relating to depreciation deductions), including, for example, the basis adjustment provided in section 48(q) for any rehabilitation credits allowed under section 38. The cost of land is not included in adjusted basis. The basis of units whose cost per square foot is disproportionate to that of the low-income housing units by more than 15 percent of the average cost per square foot of the low-income units is excluded from eligible basis.

Acquisition of existing buildings.—The cost of acquisition of an existing building may be included in eligible basis and any rehabilitation expenditures to such a building incurred before the close of the first year of the credit period may at the election of the taxpayer also be included in eligible basis, without a minimum rehabilitation requirement. These costs may be included in eligible basis, however, only if the building or a substantial improvement to the building has not been previously placed in service within 10 years and if the building (or rehabilitated property within the building) is not subject to the 15-year housing credit compliance period.

A building that is transferred in a transaction where the basis of the property in the hands of the new owner is determined in whole or part by the adjusted basis of the previous owner (for example, by a gift of property or like-kind exchange) is considered not to have been newly placed in service for purposes of the 10-year placed-in-service requirement. Further, a building which has been acquired by a governmental unit or certain qualified 501(c)(3) or 501(c)(4) organizations is not treated as placed in service by that governmental unit or organization for purposes of the 10-year placed-in-service requirement, if the acquisition occurred more than 10 years from the date the building or a substantial improvement to the building was last placed in service. Further, a building acquired by foreclosure by a taxpayer other than a governmental unit or 501(c)(3) organization is not treated as newly placed in service by the taxpayer for purposes of the 10-year requirement if the foreclosure occurred more than 10 years from the date the building or a substantial improvement to the building was last placed in service and the property was resold within twelve months.

The Treasury Department may waive the 10-year requirement for any building substantially assisted, financed, or operated under the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) section 8, section 221(d)(3), or section 236 programs, or under the Farmers' Home Administration (FmHA) section 515 program (a federally-assisted building) when an assignment of the mortgage secured by property in the project to HUD or FmHA otherwise would occur or when a claim against a Federal mortgage insurance fund would occur.

Federal grants and other subsidies.—Eligible basis does not include the amount of any federal grant, regardless of whether such grant is includible in gross income. If any portion of the eligible basis attributable to new construction or to substantial rehabilitation expenditures is financed with Federal subsidies (e.g., tax-exempt bonds), the qualified basis is elgibile only for the 30-percent present value credit, unless such Federal subsidies are excluded from eligible basis.

A federal subsidy is defined as any obligation the interest on which is exempt from tax under section 103 or a direct or indirect Federal loan, if the interest rate on such loan is less than the applicable Federal rate. A Federal loan under the FmHA section 515 program is an example of such a Federal subsidy, as is a reduced interest rate loan attributable in part to a Federal grant. Tax-exempt financing or a below-market loan used to provide construction financing for a building will not be treated as a Federal subsidy if such loan is repaid and any underlying obligation (e.g., tax-exempt bond) is redeemed before the building is placed in service.

Minimum Set-Aside Requirement for Low-Income Individuals

Set-aside percentage requirements

In general.—Under the general minimum set-aside a residential rental project qualifies for the low-income housing tax credit only if (1) 20 percent or more of the aggregate residential rental units in the project are occupied by individuals with incomes of 50 percent or less of area median income (equivalent to the figure published by HUD under section 8 of the Housing Act of 1937 for very low-income families) or (2) 40 percent or more of the aggregate residential rental units in the project are occupied by individuals with incomes of 60 percent or less of area median income.[2] These income levels are adjusted for family size. All units comprising the minimum set-aside in a project must be suitable for occupancy and used on a nontransient basis, and are subject to the limitation on gross rent charged to residents of set-aside units.

Rent skewing set-aside.—A special set-aside may be elected for projects that satisfy a stricter requirement and that significantly restrict the rents on the low-income units relative to the other residential units in the building (the "rent skewing" set-aside). Projects qualify for this rule only if, as part of the general set-aside requirement, 15 percent or more of all low-income units are occupied by individuals having incomes of 40 percent (rather than 50 percent or 60 percent) or less of area median income, and the average rent charged to tenant in the residential rental units which are not low-income units is at least 300 percent of the average rent charged to low-income tenants for comparable units. Under this special rule, a low-income tenant who initially meets the 40-percent test will continue to qualify in the future as such, as long as the tenant's income does not exceed 170 percent (rather than the general 140-percent limit, described below) of the qualifying income limitation. Additionally, if a project to which this special set-aside requirement applies ceases to comply with the continuous compliance requirement because of increases in existing tenants' incomes, no penalties are imposed if each available low-income unit (rather than each available unit) is rented to tenants having incomes of 40 percent or less of area median income, until the project is again in compliance.

The owner of each project must irrevocably elect the minimum set-aside requirement (including the rent skewing set-aside described above) at the close of the first year of the credit period. In the case of a project consisting of a single building, the set-aside requirement must be met within 12 months of the date the building (or rehabilitated property) is placed in service, and complied with continuously thereafter for a period ending 15 years after the first day of the first taxable year in which the credit is allowable.

In the case of a multiple building project, buildings need not meet the minimum low-income set-aside requirement in the order that the buidings are placed in service. if within 12 months of the placed-in-service date of a prior building the project meets the set-aside requirement with respect to such first building and any subsequent buildings placed in service within the 12-month period, then such first building and included subsequent buildings are part of a qualified low-income project. Subsequent buildings not included in determining whether the project satisfies the set-aside requirement with respect to prior buildings have their own 12-month period within which they are required to be included in the set-aside determination for the project. Since application of this rule may result in buildings which are part of the same project having different credit periods, section 42(g)(5) permits the taxpayer to redefine the mix of buildings considered a part of the project for purposes of determining continued compliance with the set-aside requirement.

Continuous Compliance Required

The determination of whether a tenant qualifies as low-income for purposes of the minimum set-aside requirement is made on a continuing basis, both with regard to the tenant's income and the qualifying area income, rather than only on the date the tenant initially occupies the unit. An increase in a tenant's income relative to qualifying area income may result, therefore, in a unit ceasing to qualify as occupied by a low-income person. However, a qualified low-income tenant is treated as continuing to be such notwithstanding de minimis increases in his income. Under this rule, a tenant qualifying when initially occupying a rental unit will be treated as continuing to have such an income provided his income does not increase to a level more than 40 percent in excess of the maximum qualifying income, adjusted for family size. If the tenant's income increases to a level more than 40 percent above the otherwise applicable ceiling (or if the tenant's family size decreases so that a lower family income applies to the tenant), that tenant is no longer counted in determining whether the project satisfies the set-aside requirement. No penalty or reduction in basis is assessed in such an event, however, provided that each residential rental unit that becomes vacant (of comparable or smaller size to the units occupied by tenants who no longer satisfy the applicable income requirement) is rented to low-income tenants until the project is again in compliance.

Vacant units, formerly occupied by low-income individuals, may continue to be treated as occupied by qualified low-income individuals for purposes of the set-aside requirement (as well as for determining qualified basis) provided reasonable attempts are made to rent the units and no other units of comparable or smaller size in the project are rented to nonqualifying individuals. In no case is a unit considered to be occupied by low-income individuals if all of the occupants of such unit are students, no one of whom is entitled to file a joint income tax return.

Gross Rent Limitation

The gross rent paid by families in units on which a tax credit is claimed may not exceed 30 percent of the applicable area income qualifying as "low," adjusted for family size. Gross rent includes the cost of any utilities, other than telephone. If any utilities are paid directly by the tenant, the maximum rent that may be paid by the tenant is reduced by a utility allowance prescribed by the Treasury Department.

The gross rent limitation applies only to payments made directly by the tenant. For example, any rental assistance payments made on behalf of the tenant, such as through section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 or any comparable Federal, State or local rental assistance, are not included in gross rent for purposes of the 30-percent limit.

Qualified Low-Income Housing Projects and Qualified Low-Income Buildings

A qualified low-income building is a building which is subject to the 15-year compliance period and which is part of a qualified low-income project. A qualified low-income project is a project that meets the minimum set-aside requirement and other requirements with respect to the set-aside units at all times that buildings comprising the project are subject to the 15-year compliance period. A project may include multiple buildings having similarly constructed housing units, provided the buildings are located on the same tract of land, are owned by the same person for Federal income tax purposes, and are financed pursuant to a common plan of financing. Owner-occupied buildings with four or fewer units are ineligible for the credit.

Compliance Period and Penalty for Noncompliance

Qualified residential rental projects must remain as rental property and must satisfy the minimum set-aside requirement, described above, throughout a 15-year compliance period. Units on which credits are claimed, in addition to those meeting the minimum set-aside requirement on which a credit is allowable, must continuously comply with this requirement. The taxpayer may defer the beginning of the credit period of the taxable year following the taxable year the building is placed in service. This enables the deferral of the beginning of the 15-year compliance period. Within 90 days of the end of the first taxable year of the credit period, the taxpayer must make certain certifications to the Secretary of the Treasury regarding set-aside compliance and other matters.

Owners and operators of low-income housing projects on which a credit has been claimed may correct any noncompliance with the set-aside requirement within a reasonable period after the noncompliance is discovered or reasonably should have been discovered. If the taxpayer can correct the noncompliance in the manner required, there is no recapture.

If the qualified basis of a building for which a low-income housing credit was claimed is reduced (other than in the event of certain casualty circumstances) or if the property is disposed of without the posting of a bond satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, the accelerated portion of the credit for all prior years may be recaptured. There is no recapture of the credit for certain de minimis changes in qualified basis by reason of changes in the floor space of low-income housing units. For partnerships comprised of at least 35 partners, unless the partnership elects otherwise, no change in ownership will be deemed to occur provided that within any 12-month period, at least 50 percent (in value) of the original ownership is unchanged.

State Low-Income Housing Credit Authority Limitation

In general

Generally, all buildings eligible for the low-income housing credit must receive an allocation of credit authority from the State or local credit agency in whose jurisdiction the qualifying low-income housing project is located. In all cases, credit allocations are counted against a State's annual credit authority limitation for the calendar year in which the credits are allocated. Generally, credits subject to the State credit authority limitation include any credits attributable to expenditures not financed with tax-exempt bonds subject to the bond volume limitation.

The aggregate amount of such credits allocated within the State is limited by the State annual low-income credit authority limitation. The annual credit authority limitation for each State is equal to $1.25 for every individual who is a resident of the State. For purposes of the credit authority limitation, the District of Columbia and U.S. possessions (e.g, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa) are treated as States. No credit authority is provided for years after 1989.

In general, credits may be allocated only during the calendar year in which the building or rehabilitated property is placed in service. Three exceptions are provided to this general rule. First, credits may be allocated for additions to qualified basis which occur after the building is placed in service. Second, credits may be allocated in a later year pursuant to an earlier binding agreement made no later than the year in which the building is placed in service. Third, a building may be placed in service in the year in which the credit allocation is received or in either of the two succeeding years provided that the taxpayer's basis (land and depreciable property) in the project by the close of the calendar year in which the credit allocation is made by the housing credit agency is at least 10 percent of its reasonably expected basis in the project at the time the project is placed in service. This provision applies only to credit allocations for new construction, substantial rehabilitation expenditures eligible for the 70-percent present value credit, and existing buildings as to which a credit is allowable for substantial rehabilitation expenditures.

Transferability

A new owner of a building during its 15-year compliance period is eligible to continue to receive the credit as if the new owner were the original owner, using the same qualified basis and credit percentages and used by the original owner. In the case of transfers of an interest in credit property the credit is apportioned pro rata between the two parties. Rehabilitation expenditures on such property may qualify for a credit in the same manner as rehabilitation expenditures on other qualifying property. The accelerated portion of credits claimed in previous years will be recaptured upon a transfer, subject to the election of the original owner to post a bond. All dispositions of ownership interests in buildings are treated as transfers for purposes of recapture, except for a special rule for certain partnerships. There is no election for the new owner to assume the recapture liability for prior year credits.

Passive Loss Rules

Deductions from passive trade or business activities or rental activities, to the extent they exceed income from all such passive activities (exclusive of portfolio income), generally may not be deducted against other income. Similarly, credits from passive activities generally are limited to the tax attributable to the passive activities. Suspended losses and credits are carried forward and treated as deductions and credits from passive activities in the next year. Suspended losses from an activity are allowed in full when the taxpayer disposes of his entire interest in the activity.

These limitations apply to individuals, estates, trusts, and personal service corporations. A special rule limits the use of passive losses and credits with respect to portfolio income in the case of closely-held corporations.

Special rules

$25,000 allowance in the case of rental real estate activities.—A special rule is provided for passive losses and credits attributable to rental real estate activities. In the case of rental real estate activities, a taxpayer who is an individual is allowed to deduct up to $25,000 of passive losses (to the extent that they exceed income from passive activities) if the taxpayer actively participates in the rental real estate activity (and has at least a 10-percent interest in it). The $25,000 amount is phased out ratably as the taxpayer's adjusted gross income, with certain modifications, increases from $100,000 to $150,000.

$25,000 allowance for low-income housing and rehabilitation credits.—Under a special rule, the $25,000 allowance also applies to low-income housing and rehabilitation credits (on a deduction-equivalent basis), regardless of whether the taxpayer claiming the credit actively participates in the rental real estate activity generating the credit. In addition, the adjusted gross income phaseout range for the $25,000 amount for these credits is from $200,000 to $250,000 (rather than the generally applicable phaseout range of $100,000 to $150,000).

Restrictions on Use of Credit To Offset Tax

The low-income housing credit is subject to the rules of the general business credit (sec. 38), including the maximum amount of income tax liability that may be reduced by a general business credit in any one year. This limitation generally is equal to the excess (if any) of the taxpayer's net income tax over the greater of (1) the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax for the year, or (2) 25 percent of so much of the taxpayer's net regular tax liability as exceeds $25,000.

The rules for credit carryovers provide that unused credits for any taxable year may be carried back to each of the three preceding taxable years and then carried forward to each of the 15 following years. No portion of the low-income housing credit for any taxable year may be carried back to a taxable year ending before 1987 (sec. 39(d)(4)).

Effective Date

The credit generally is effective for buildings placed in service after December 31, 1986, other than property grandfathered from the depreciation rule changes made by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Buildings placed in service after December 31, 1989, may qualify for the credit only if they meet the credit carryover allocation rules. The authority of housing credit agencies to allocate low-income housing credits expires December 31, 1989.

Reasons for change

In General

The committee is concerned about the lack of affordable housing for people of low-income and considers it appropriate that the Federal Government play a significant role in the development of additional housing. The committee believes the low-income housing credit is a useful incentive for the increase in the housing stock available to low-income tenants. The permanent extension of the credit will provide certainty as to the availability of the credit. Low-income housing like other real estate projects require long lead times in its planning and development.

Given the limited amount of aggregate credit available, however, the committee considers it necessary to take steps to improve its efficiency to ensure that as much housing as possible is created with the credit and that credit projects effectively serve State and local housing needs. Many of the provisions adopted by the committeee are designed to further that goal.

The committee believes that the credit is the proper vehicle to encourage extended low-income use beyond the initial 15 year compliance period. Owners wishing to dispose of their property may convey the property for any amount of consideration subject to continued low-income use restrictions. If the owners are unable to effect such a transfer, there should be a mechanism to allow the allocating agency a reasonable period of time to find another qualified purchaser.

The committee recognizes that it may be necessary to reexamine the use of federal tax subsidies for the provision of low-income housing such as the low-income housing credit as other laws affecting the provision of low-income housing, and as the nation's housing needs change.

Increase in Affordable Housing

The committee considers it desirable for the credit to be used to increase the housing stock available to low-income tenants. It is concerned that the credit not be used simply to churn the existing housing stock. Limiting the credit to new construction and to existing buildings which are substantially rehabilitated serves as an incentive to the creation of new housing. Further, the committee is concerned that the definition of "substantial rehabilitation" under present law is inadequate to further the purpose of taking otherwise uninhabitable units and returning them to the available housing stock. At the same time, the committee realizes that a very serious problem exists with respect to low-income housing the owners of which will soon be eligible to prepay certain low-cost Federal loans and convert their housing to market rent use.

The committee recognizes that many factors influence the cost of providing a unit of rent-restricted housing for low-income individuals and that the costs attributable to these factors may vary by area. For example, some areas have high costs for land, while other areas have high utility costs or high construction costs. When an area experiences high costs for such factors and at the same time has a relatively low area median income, rental income generated (subject to the rent restriction requirements) may be insufficient to make provision of low-income units economically feasible without further subsidy. The committee believes it is important to facilitate utilization of the credit in such difficult to develop areas.

The committee is desirous that the low-income housing credit be allocated in a manner that ensures that housing will be available to those most in need. The committee is also concerned that certain States have been allocating credits simply on a first-come first-served basis. it considers the establishment of allocation criteria and priorities essential to target the credit to those projects which will most effectively serve State and local housing needs.

Improvement of Marketability and Administration

The committee recognizes the importance of certainty in making investment decisions. The committee believes it is appropriate to make changes to the calculation of the gross rent limitation to provide more certainty to investors. The committee also concludes that adjustments to the deep-rent skewing provisions are necessary.

The committee believes that encouraging the provision of low-income housing is an important goal of national housing policy. The Federal Government can foster this goal through several means, and, at this time, the committee believes that providing tax incentives to private investors to invest in low-income housing projects is the most appropriate way to achieve this aim. In this connection, the committee is concerned that the present law excludes some individuals from the pool of likely investors in low-income housing property.

Improved Administrability of the Credit and Other Issues

The committee is concerned that various features of present law, intended to be primarily administrative in nature, unnecessarily interfere with the most effective utilization of the credit. For example, the requirement of present law that a credit allocation be received on a building-by-building basis, rather than for the project of which such buildings are a part, has also resulted in difficulty in projecting exact credit availability and project cash flows. The committee believes that it is inappropriate to have one rule governing the date on which eligible basis is determined for new construction and a different rule governing the date on which eligible basis is determined for acquisition property. Present law unnecessarily requires the filing of certain credit forms just two weeks before the federal income tax returns of individual taxpayer investors are also due.

Explanation of provisions

Extension of the Credit

The bill makes the low-income housing credit (generally scheduled to expire December 31, 1989) permanent.[3]

Extended Low-Income Use Commitment

The bill provides that a taxpayer will only be eligible for a credit allocation if he or she enters into an extended low-income housing commitment with the housing credit agency.[4] The commitment must be binding on the taxpayer and all successors of the taxpayer with respect to the property for which the credit is allocated. The commitment must require that portion of the building occupied by low-income tenants (the applicable fraction) for each taxable year in the extended use period is not less than an amount specified in the commitment. The commitment must be recorded under State law as a restrictive covenant and must permit eligible low-income individuals the right to enforce the commitment in the courts of the State in which the property is located. The commitment must provide for an extended period of low-income use. The extended use period must extend at least 15 years beyond the close of the compliance period.

The bill provides two exceptions to the extended use requirement. First, if a building for which the credit has been allocated is acquired by foreclosure, the extended use period terminates on the date of such acquisition. Second, if after the fourteenth year of the compliance period the taxpayer submits a written request to the housing credit agency to find a person to acquire the taxpayer's interest in the low-income portion of the building, and if by the end of the fifteenth year of the compliance period the housing credit agency has been unable to present a buyer with a qualified contract who will continue to operate the low-income portion of the building as a qualified low-income building, the extended use period will terminate with the terminaton of the compliance period.[5]

For the purpose of the second exception, the bill defines a qualified contract as a bona fide contract to acquire not less than the applicable fraction, as specified in the commitment, multiplied by a minimum purchase price. The bill defines the first component of the minimum purchase price as adjusted investor equity. Adjusted investor equity is the aggregate amount of cash taxpayers invested with respect to the project increased by a cost of living adjustment for each calendar year since the project was placed in service.[6] The inflation adjustment is determined by changes in the consumer price index (CPI), but is never to exceed five percent. To adjusted investor equity is added the outstanding indebtedness (at the time of sale) secured by, or with respect to, the building and any other capital contributions not reflected in either adjusted investor equity or the outstanding indebtedness. An example of this latter amount would arise if it were necessary to replace a building's furnace and any loan taken to finance the furnace were not secured by the furnace or the building. Any cash distributions[7] from the project are subtracted from the above three components to arrive at the minimum purchase price.

The bill modifies the at risk rules applicable to certain nonrecourse financing provided by qualified nonprofit organizations to conform to the extended low-income use requirement by requiring that full repayment of such loans occur within 90 days after the earlier of the date the building ceases to be a qualified low-income building or the date which is 15 years after the end of the compliance period.

Determination of Credit Amount

Under the bill, no credit is allowable for the acquisition of an existing building unless a substantial rehabilitation standard is met. Generally, under this standard, rehabilitation expenditures must result in qualified basis equal to or greater than $3,000 per low-income unit. If the new substantial rehabilitation standard is satisfied, the substantial rehabilitation expenditures are eligible for the 70-percent present value credit (if not federally-subsidized) and the existing portion of the building is eligible for the 30-percent present value credit.

The rehabilitation expenditures must be on the low-income units or common areas substantially benefiting the low-income tenants (e.g., replacement of a boiler, improvements to plumbing and electrical systems). Rehabilitation expenditures are those which improve the habitability of the low-income units. Expenditures of a cosmetic nature qualify as rehabilitation only when ancillary to, and an integral part of, expenditures which improve the habitability of the low-income unit.

The bill provides that the determination of eligible basis for new buildings and substantial rehabilitation expenditures conform to that for acquisition property by allowing the determination to be made at the end of the first taxable year of the credit period. The determination of eligible basis is made before any adjustments to basis are made for depreciation allowable during the first taxable year.[8]

The bill provides that, in areas which are designated by the Secretary of HUD as difficult to develop, the eligible basis of a new building or the eligible basis of rehabilitation expenditures in the case of an existing building undergoing substantial rehabilitation be deemed to be 130 percent of eligible basis claimed for depreciation. This calculation of eligible basis would not be available with respect to federally-subsidized buildings.

The bill provides that no more than 20 percent of metropolitan areas be designated as difficult to develop and that no more than 20 percent of nonmetropolitan areas be designated as difficult to develop. The percentage limitation is based on the population of the designated metropolitan area relative to the population of all metropolitan areas, and similarly for nonmetropolitan areas.

In determining which areas are difficult to develop, the bill provides that the Secretary of HUD consider several factors. It may be costly to produce low-income housing in one area relative to the rest of the country because that area has higher land costs than the rest of the country. Alternatively, the costs of producing low-income housing in that area may be higher than elsewhere because that area has higher construction costs or higher utility costs than the rest of the country. A combination of the above factors may make it more costly to provide low-income housing in some areas than in others. In determining whether an area's costs are high relative to the rest of the nation, the Secretary of HUD may find it appropriate to use indices of land costs, construction costs, and utility costs. Alternately, the Secretary may find it appropriate to use private market rents (not subject to rent control or other restrictions) as indicative of the cost of providing rental housing units in a given area.

However, the committee recognizes that it is not costs alone that make an area difficult to develop, but rather the costs of providing a low-income housing unit compared to the rental income that low-income housing unit will generate. The Secretary of HUD should, therefore, compare an area's costs to an area's median income in reaching the determination that an area is difficult to develop. Consequently, it is possible that one area's costs of providing housing are low relative to similar costs nationwide, but the area's income is sufficiently low that the Secretary would designate the area as difficult to develop.

Eligible Basis

The bill modifies the 10-year rule by adding three categories of property eligible for waiver of the rule by the Secretary of the Treasury. First, the 10-year rule may be waived for a federally-assisted building if the mortgage on the building is eligible within one year of the application for waiver for prepayment under the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 or under the Housing Act of 1949 and either HUD or FmHA certifies that the building will be converted to market use

[3] The committee directs the Internal Revenue Service to monitor and promote compliance with the section 42 requirements.

[4] Such commitment must also exist between a taxpayer and the housing credit agency for any building which is to be financed with tax-exempt bonds on which the taxpayer intends to claim the credit even though the taxpayer may not be required to receive an allocation under the State annual credit ceiling.

[5] The bill allows that this second exception does not apply to the extent that either the commitment or State law contains more stringent requirements.

[6] The amount invested with respect to a project is measured by those amounts which are reflected in the adjusted basis of the project. For example, required annual fees for legal and accounting work are not amounts invested in the project.

[7] The committee intends that this amount not be limited to amounts actually paid to the taxpayer, but also includes any amounts available for distribution to the taxpayer. For example, a working capital reserve account would constitute funds available to be distributed to the taxpayer.

[8] Section 7872(c)(1)(D) does not apply to a transaction involving a below market loan if none of the principal purposes of the interest arrangements of the below market loan is to increase the amount of the credit allowable under section 42.

absent the waiver. If this waiver is granted, the mortgagor must agree in writing not to prepay the mortgage. Such property is eligible for credit allocation subject to the rehabilitation expenditures requirement, described above.

Second, the 10-year rule may be waived for a building acquired from a failed financial institution or from a receiver or conservator of such an institution if the Secretary of the Treasury determines (after consultation with the appropriate Federal agency or regulatory authority) that such acquisition is necessary to avert an expenditure of Federal funds by such Federal agency or regulatory authority. This waiver is to apply to properties owned by commercial banks, savings and loan institutions, and credit unions that are regulated or whose deposits are insured by a Federal agency, regulatory authority, or insurance program. For this purpose, a financial institution is failed if a conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian has been appointed for the financial institution (or, in the case of a foreign bank, a U.S. branch), pursuant to an adjudication or other official determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, the appropriate Federal banking agency, or other public authority. The expenditure to be averted is the amount: (1) which the Federal agency or regulatory authority (including any Federal insurance program) would be required to pay in connection with the failure of such financial institution, and (2) which would be reduced by the sale of a property where the price received for the property will be increased as a result of the property being eligible for low-income housing credits even though the 10-year holding period was not satisfied except by receipt of the waiver.

Third, the 10-year rule may be waived to facilitate the sale of a building if the mortgage on the building is held by HUD, or the building itself is owned by HUD (following foreclosure of a mortgage) or the Farmers Home Administration.

The bill also expands the definition of "federally-assisted building" to include any building that has more than four residential rental units originated, insured, or guaranteed by the Federal Government. In addition, the bill provides that the credit is not available to properties receiving assistance under the HUD section 8 moderate rehabilitation program.

Gross Rent Limitation

The bill provides certain changes in the rules regarding the calculation of the gross rent limitation. The deep-rent skewing rule is modified to provide that the rents charged for non-rent-restricted units need be only at least 200 percent of those charged for comparable rent-restricted units.

The bill also provides that, for purposes of both section 42 and the deep-rent-skewing rules of section 142(d) (relating to tax-exempt bonds for residential rental property), in the determination of the gross rent limitation applicable to rent-restricted units the incomes used are no longer to be adjusted for actual family size. Instead, each unit is presumed to house a certain number of people based upon the number of bedrooms in the unit. A studio apartment is presumed to house one person and each bedroom of a unit is presumed to house 1.5 persons.[9] However, for the purposes of determining whether a family qualifies as a "low-income" family eligible for a rent-restricted unit, the bill retains present law. That is, families renting rent-restricted units must have actual family incomes adjusted for family size which, at the irrevocable election of the taxpayer, are either not in excess of 60 percent of area median income or not in excess of 50 percent of area median income.

The determination of the gross rent limitation applicable to a three-bedroom unit is made as follows. A three-bedroom unit is assumed to house 4.5 persons (three bedrooms multiplied by 1.5 persons per bedroom). The section 8 very low-income figure for a family of 4 is added to the section 8 very low-income figure for a family of 5 and the result is divided by two to determine the very low-income figure for the presumed family size of 4.5. The applicable gross rent limitation is 30 percent of the resulting very low-income figure for the presumed family of 4.5. For example, if the very low-income figure for a family of four is $19,000, and the very low-income figure for a family of five is $21,000, the gross rent limitation for a rent-restricted three-bedroom unit is $6,000 per year (30 percent of $20,000). To qualify to rent this three-bedroom unit, a family of five must have an income less than or equal to $21,000, while a family of four must have an income less than or equal to $19,000.

The provision of supportive services does not disqualify a rental property (so long as none of the residents are exempted from the provision governing below market loans by reason of continuing care contracts with the facility). Supportive services are those designed to enable residents to remain independent and avoid placement in a hospital, nursing home or intermediate care facility for the mentally or physically handicapped. Any fees provided for supportive services which are paid by a governmental agency directly to the owner of building is included in gross rent. However, in this circumstance the gross rent limitation applicable to a qualifying low-income limit is increased by 20 percent.[10] The committee reiterates, however, its intent that no hospital, nursing home, sanitarium, dormitory, or trailer park, be treated as a qualified low-income project.

Qualified Low-Income Housing Projects and Qualified Low-Income Buildings

The bill provides that 80 percent of the qualified basis of an owner-occupied building with four or fewer units will be eligible for the credit if the acquisition or rehabilitation of the building occurs as part of a development plan sponsored by a State or local government or qualified nonprofit organization.

The bill provides that buildings located on disparate or scattered geographic sites may be deemed to be a single project both for purposes of credit allocation and compliance if 100 percent of the units are rent-restricted units occupied by tenants with qualifying income. As under present law, all of the buildings must be financed pursuant to a common plan of financing and owned by the same person for Federal income tax purposes.

Purchase Options

The bill provides that any determination as to whether Federal income tax benefits are allowable to a taxpayer with respect to a qualified low-income building is made without regard to certain purchase options exercisable at the end of the compliance period. These options must be held by a qualified nonprofit organization, limited equity cooperative or resident management group recognized by HUD that do not provide financing with respect to the building. The option price cannot be less than the sum of (1) the principal amount of all indebtedness secured by the building, with the exception of indebtedness incurred within the five years immediately prior to sale, and (2) all Federal, State, and local taxes attributable to such sale. In determining the Federal income (but not other) taxes attributable to the sale, the tax liability resulting from the agreement to pay taxes attributable to the sale will be taken into account.

State Low-Income Housing Credit Authority Limitation

In recognition of the fact that a State may not allocate or use all available credits in a given year, and that sometimes credits allocated may be returned (e.g., a building to which credits were allocated is never placed in service), the committee bill provides that all such unused and returned credits may be carried over for one year. Unused credits are defined as the difference between $1.25 multiplied by the State's population, and the State's aggregate credit allocations for that year. Returned credits are credits previously allocated to projects which do not become qualified projects within the year or any credits for which an allocation is cancelled by the mutual consent of the housing credit agency and the allocation recipient.

The committee anticipates that occasionally one or more States may fail to allocate their housing credits carried over from the preceding year. When this eventuality occurs, the bill provides that the Secretary may allocate the aggregate unused housing credit carryover among those States which fully allocated their State housing credit ceiling for the preceding year. The Secretary's allocation is to be a pro rata distribution, based on population, among those States which did not have any unused credit carryover in the preceding year and which request an additional credit allocation by May 1. A State is determined to have unused housing credit carryover if the amount of unused credits (as defined above) exceeds the difference of aggregate housing credit allocations for a given year and $1.25 multiplied by the population of the State for that year.

As a consequence of these carryover provisions, a State's annual housing credit ceiling is determined as the sum of the following: (1) $1.25 multiplied by the population of the State, (2) any unused credits from the immediately preceding year, (3) any returned credits, and (4) any unused housing credit carryover received from the Secretary after proper application.

The bill provides that the credit be allocated on a project basis, rather than on a building-by-building basis as under present law. The credit allocation is to be divided among the buildings in the project as they are placed in service. For purposes of the credit allocation, a taxpayer wishing to treat a building as part of a project must designate all the buildings which are to be part of the project by the end of the first year of the project period (i.e., by the end of the first calendar year in which an allocation could be made for the first building placed in service as part of such project). In the absence of such a designation by the taxpayer, the Secretary shall treat the project as consisting solely of one building. To receive a credit allocation for the entire project, rather than only those buildings placed in service during the year of the allocation, the taxpayer must still satisfy the present law rules for a carryover allocation, except that such carryover allocation need not be divided among the buildings at the time of the allocation.

[9] The committee intends that the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of HUD, issue regulations detailing the minimum living area which must constitute a bedroom and prohibiting general living or dining areas from being claimed as bedrooms for those units which are not studios.

[10] This provision does apply when the fees paid by a governmental agency explicitly include a capital cost or housing component.

The bill requires that the housing credit agency adopt an allocation plan containing selection criteria for ranking the various projects applying for credit allocations. The selection criteria must include project location (e.g., broad geographic distribution, designated targeted areas such as inner cities, Community Development Block Grant neighborhoods, distressed communities, pockets of poverty, and rural areas), housing needs characteristics (e.g., low vacancy rate, income mix of tenants within the project, and meeting State, regional, or local housing needs and priorities), project characteristics (e.g., whether the project increases the stock of low-income housing, whether substantial rehabilitation expenditures are needed by the project, energy conservation, quality of units, and type of financing), sponsor characteristics (e.g., nonprofit sponsorship and minority participation in development and management), participation of local tax-exempt organizations, encouragement of mixed-use housing, project financial feasibility and viability, and tenant populations with special housing needs (e.g., elderly, minority, handicapped, disabled, homeless, large families, and displaced). The committee intends that an allocation plan would not fail this requirement if it provides a set-aside of credit authority for particular types of projects or geographic areas.

Additionally, the agency may not allocate more credit to a project than it determines is necessary for the financial feasibility of the project and its viability as a qualified low-income housing project throughout the credit period. In making this determination, the agency shall consider the sources and uses of the funds, the available Federal, State, and local subsidies committed to the project, and the total financing planned for the project as well as the proceeds or receipts expected to be generated by reason of tax benefits.

The bill requires that housing credit agencies provide notice and opportunity to comment to the chief executive officer of the locality in which the project is located. In addition, the Committee anticipates that the housing credit agency will require developers to list financial information in their credit applications. Such information would include a breakdown of sources and uses of funds sufficiently detailed to enable the agency to ascertain where and what costs will be incurred and what will comprise the total financing package, including the various subsidies and the anticipated syndication or placement proceeds that will be raised. Whether or not includible in eligible basis, the following cost information should be required before allocation of the credit: site acquisition costs, site preparation costs, construction costs, construction contingency, general contractor's overhead and profit, architect and engineer's fees, permit and survey fees, insurance premiums, real estate taxes during construction, title and recording fees, construction period interest, financing fees, organizational costs, rent-up and marketing costs, accounting and auditing costs, working capital and operating deficit reserves, and syndication and legal fees and other costs. Actual data must be made available upon request of the allocating agency after the project has been placed in service. Costs, including developer fees, should be examined by the agency for reasonableness. The Committee also contemplates that agencies require the submission of pro forma financial statements setting forth the anticipated project cash flows.

The bill requires that the housing credit agency approval process take a form similar to that required by section 147(f)(2) with respect to the approval of the issuance of tax-exempt private activity bonds. Such approval may not occur until after a public hearing with reasonable public notice and an opportunity for those interested to present their views. The referendum provisions of section 147(f)(2) are not applicable.

Passive Loss Rules

The bill modifies the application of the passive loss restrictions on the low-income housing credit by removing the adjusted gross income limitations on the $25,000 deduction-equivalent allowance of credits with respect to rental real estate activities. Thus, up to a $25,000 deduction-equivalent amount of credits is available to an individual under the provision, regardless of his adjusted gross income.[11]

Effective dates

The bill is generally effective for determinations made under section 42 with respect to housing credit dollar amounts allocated from State housing credit ceilings for calendar years after 1989.[12] For projects not subject to the credit allocation limits, the provisions generally apply to buildings placed in service after December 31, 1989.

The provision which removes the adjusted gross income limitation for low-income housing credits under the passive loss rule is effective in taxable years ending after December 31, 1989, for property placed in service after December 31, 1989. In addition, if the property is held through a partnership or other passthrough entity, the taxpayer's interest in the partnership of other passthrough entity must have been acquired after December 31, 1989.

The new 10-year rule waiver provisions are effective on the date of enactment.

12. MODIFICATION OF REHABILITATION TAX CREDIT UNDER PASSIVE LOSS RULE (SEC. 6112 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 469(I) OF THE CODE)

Rehabilitation Tax Credit in General

An income tax credit is provided for certain expenditures incurred in rehabilitation of certified historic structures and certain nonresidential buildings placed in service before 1936. The amount of the credit is determined by multiplying the applicable rehabilitation percentage by the basis of the property that is attributable to qualified rehabilitation expenditures. The applicable rehabilitation percentage is 20 percent for certified historic structures and 10 percent for qualified rehabilitated buildings (other than certified historic structures) that are nonresidential and that were originally placed in service before 1936.

A building is eligible for the 20-percent credit only if it is substantially rehabilitated and is listed in the National Register or is certified by the Secretary of the Interior as being of historical significance to the registered historic district in which it is located. A building is eligible for the 10-percent credit only if it is substantially rehabilitated and meets a structural requirement relating to the percentage of its external and internal walls that are retained in place upon completion of the rehabilitation.

The basis of any property eligible for the rehabilitation credit is reduced by the full amount of the allowable credit. Thus, no cost recovery allowance or depreciation deduction is allowed for rehabilitation expenditures that are considered funded by the rehabilitation credit.

In addition, the rehabilitation credit is subject to recapture if the rehabilitated building is disposed of or otherwise ceases to be qualified investment property at any time during the five year period beginning after the year the property is placed in service.

Restrictions on Use of Credit to Offset Tax

The rehabilitation credit is subject to the rules of the general business credit, including the maximum amount of income tax liability that may be reduced by a general business credit in any one year. This limitation generally is equal to the excess (if any) of the taxpayer's net income tax over the greater of (1) the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax for the year, or (2) 25 percent of so much of the taxpayer's net regular tax liability as exceeds $25,000. Thus, the credits may not offset the taxpayer's alternative minimum tax.

Unused credits generally may be carried back 3 taxable years and then forward 15 years (to the extent permitted by other applicable limitations, if any).

Passive Loss Restrictions on Credit Use

In general

Under the passive loss rule, deductions from passive trade or business activities or rental activities generally may not be deducted against other income, to the extent such deductions exceed income from all such passive activities (exclusive of portfolio income). Similarly, credits from passive activities generally are limited to the tax attributable to the passive activities. Suspended losses and credits are carried forward and

[11] The bill also removes the adjusted gross income limits on the deduction-equivalent amount of rehabilitation credits with respect to rental real estate activities. Thus, under the two provisions of the bill, the $25,000 deduction-equivalent allowance of present law is retained, but no adjusted gross income limits apply under the $25,000 rule for either low-income housing credits or rehabilitation credits.

[12] The committee intends that should it subsequently decide to subject the credit to a "sunset" date, it believes it is appropriate to conform the treatment of newly constructed property which is substantially financed with tax-exempt bonds to other newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated property in regard to when the credit may be claimed. While generally the credit may be claimed only for property placed in service in the year the credit allocation is received, an exception exists for newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated property which is not substantially financed with tax-exempt bonds. This exception permits credits to be claimed for property placed in service within two years after a credit allocation was received, if 10 percent of estimated project costs were incurred in the year in which the allocation was made. To conform, newly constructed property which is substantially financed with tax-exempt bonds should be permitted to claim the credit for buildings placed in service within two years after the bonds were issued, if at least 10 percent of estimated project costs were incurred by the close of the calendar year in which the bonds were issued.

treated as deductions and credits from passive activites in the next year. Suspended losses from an activity are allowed in full when the taxpayer disposes of his entire interest in the activity. The rule applies to individuals, estates, trusts, and personal service corporations. A special rule limits the use of passive activity losses and credits with respect to portfolio income in the case of closely held corporations.

$25,000 allowance in the case of rental real estate activities.—A special rule is provided for passive activity losses and credits attributable to rental real estate activities. In the case of rental real estate activities, an individual may deduct up to $25,000 of passive activity losses (to the extent they exceed income from passive activities) if the individual actively participates in the rental real estate activity (and has at least a 10 percent interest in it). The $25,000 amount is phased out ratably as the taxpayer's adjusted gross income, with certain modifications, increases from $100,000 to $150,000.

$25,000 allowance for low-income housing and rehabilitation credits.—Under a special rule, the $25,000 allowance also applies to low-income housing and rehabilitation credits (on a deduction equivalent basis), regardless of whether the individual claiming the credit actively participates in the rental real estate activity generating the credit. In addition, the adjusted gross income phaseout range for the $25,000 amount for these credits is $200,000 to $250,000 (rather than the generally applicable phaseout range of $100,000 to $150,000).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that preservation and rehabilitation of existing historic buildings and nonresidential buildings first placed in service before 1936 should be encouraged. The Federal Government can foster this goal through several means, and at this time, the committee believes that providing tax incentives to private investors to engage in rehabilitation activities is an appropriate way to achieve this aim.

In this regard, the committee is concerned that present law excludes some individuals from the pool of likely investors in rehabilitation property. The committee bill modifies the otherwise applicable restrictions on availability of the rehabilitation credit to upper-income individuals, with the aim of expanding the investment in these types of projects, while retaining all other applicable limitations.

Explanation of provision

The bill modifies the application of the passive loss restrictions to the rehabilitation tax credit by removing the adjusted gross income limitations on the $25,000 deduction equivalent allowance of the credits with respect to rental real estate activities. Thus, up to a $25,000 deduction equivalent amount of rehabilitation credit is available to an individual under the provision regardless of his adjusted gross income.*

The bill otherwise retains present law with respect to the rehabilitation credit.

Effective date

The provision is effective in taxable years ending after December 31, 1989, for property placed in service after December 31, 1989. In addition, if the property is held through a partnership or other passthrough entity, the taxpayer's interest in the partnership or other passthrough entity must have been acquired after December 31, 1989.

13. RESEARCH AND EXPERIMENTATION TAX CREDIT (SEC. 6113 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 41 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Incremental Credit

General rule.—A 20-percent tax credit is allowed for qualified research expenditures incurred by a taxpayer in carrying on a trade or business. Except for certain university basic research payments, the credit applies only to the extent that the taxpayer's qualified research expenditures for the current taxable year exceed the average amount of the taxpayer's yearly qualified research expenditures in the "base period," meaning the preceding three taxable years.

The credit is scheduled to expire after December 31, 1989.

Base limitation.—The amount of base-period research expenditures is treated as equal to at least 50 percent of the taxpayer's qualified research expenditures for the current year.

Trade or business limitation.—Research expenditures of a taxpayer are eligible for the credit only if paid or incurred in a particular trade or business already being carried on by the taxpayer.

Eligible expenditures.—Research expenditures eligible for the 20-percent incremental credit consist of (1) "in-house" expenditures by the taxpayer for research wages and supplies used in research; (2) certain time-sharing costs for computer use in research; and (3) 65 percent of amounts paid by the taxpayer for contract research conducted on the taxpayer's behalf.

Expenditures attributable to research which is conducted outside the United States do not enter into the credit computation. In addition, the credit is not available for research in the social sciences, arts, or humanities, nor is it available for research to the extent funded by any grant, contract, or otherwise by another person (or governmental entity).[1]

Aggregation rules and changes in business ownership.—To prevent artificial increases in research expenditures by shifting expenditures among commonly controlled or otherwise related persons, research expenditures of the taxpayer are aggregated with research expenditures of certain related persons for purposes of computing any allowable credit.

Special rules apply for computing the credit when a business changes hands, under which qualified research expenditures for periods prior to the change of ownership generally are treated as transferred with the trade or business which gave rise to those expenditures.

University Basic Research Credit

In addition to the 20-percent incremental credit, there is a 20-percent tax credit for certain corporate expenditures for university basic research. This credit applies to the excess of (1) 100 percent of corporate cash expenditures (including grants or contributions) paid for university basic research over (2) the sum of (a) the greater of two fixed research floors plus (b) an amount reflecting any decrease in nonresearch giving to universities by the corporation as compared to such giving during a fixed-base period, as adjusted for inflation.[2]

This credit also is scheduled to expire after December 31, 1989.

Relation of Credit to Section 174 Deduction

For taxable years beginning after 1988, the amount of any deduction allowable to a taxpayer under section 174 or any other provision for qualified research expenditures is reduced by an amount equal to 50 percent of the taxpayer's research credit determined for that year.

Reasons for change

The committee concluded that it is appropriate to increase the research credit's incentive effect by providing taxpayers with a permanent credit for undertaking research, thereby eliminating the uncertainty resulting from temporary extensions of the credit.

In extending the research credit, the committee wished to respond to the criticism that the incentive effect of the present-law research credit was diminished as a result of the method of computing the taxpayer's base amount. Critics have noted that although an increase in research expenditures resulted in a taxpayer receiving a larger credit for that year, it also resulted in higher base period amounts (and therefore smaller credits) in the following three years. As a consequence, the present-law credit's marginal incentive effect provided in the first year was largely offset in the following three years. The committee, therefore, modified the method of calculating a taxpayer's base amount in order to enhance the credit's incentive effect. The committee did wish, however, to retain an incremental credit structure in order to maximize the credit's efficiency by not allowing (to the extent possible) credits for research that would have been undertaken in any event.

Although the committee believes it is important to readjust the base amount annually in a way which does not undercut the incentive effect of the credit (which occurs when a firm's base is adjusted solely by reference to its own prior levels of research spending), the committee also determined it was appropriate that the base adjustments reflect firm-specific factors. By adjusting each taxpayer's base to its own experience, the committee wanted to make the credit widely available at the lowest possible revenue cost.

Because businesses often determine their research budgets as a fixed percentage of gross receipts, it is appropriate to index each taxpayer's base amount to average growth in its gross receipts. By so adjusting each taxpayer's base amount, the committee believes the credit will be better able to achieve its intended purpose of rewarding taxpayers for research expenses in excess of amounts which would have been expended in any case. Using gross receipts as an index, firms in fast-growing sectors will not be unduly rewarded if their research intensity, as measured by their ratio of qualified research to gross receipts, does not correspondingly increase. Likewise, firms in sectors with slower growth will still be able to earn credits as long as they maintain research expenditures commensurate with their own sales growth.

* The bill also includes certain low-income housing credit provisions, including a provision removing the adjusted gross income limits on the deduction equivalent amount of low-income housing credits with respect to rental real estate activities. Thus, under the bill, the $25,000 (deduction equivalent) allowance of present law is retained but no adjusted gross income limits apply under the $25,000 rule for either low-income housing credits or rehabilitation credits.

[1] The 1986 Act provided statutory rules defining qualified research for purposes of the incremental credit as research undertaken to discover information that is technological in nature and that pertains to functional aspects of products. Also, the 1986 Act expressly excluded certain types of expenditures from eligibility for the credit, including post-production research activities, duplication or adaptation costs, and surveys, studies, and certain other costs.

[2] The amount of credit-eligible basic research expenditures to which the university basic research credit applies does not enter into the computation of the incremental credit-eligible basic research expenditures—i.e., the amount to which the university basic research credit does not apply—enters into the incremental credit computation.

Adjusting a taxpayer's base by reference to its gross receipts also has the advantage of effectively indexing the credit for inflation and preventing taxpayers from being rewarded for increases in research spending that are attributable solely to inflation.

In redesigning the credit, the committee also determined that the credit's base limitation should be increased to reduce disparities among taxpayers in the amount of credit (as a percentage of total qualified research) they receive. By phasing in an increase in the base limitation, no taxpayer will earn credits for taxable years beginning after 1994 which exceed five percent of its total qualified research spending for that year.

The committee further decided that it is appropriate to extend the availability of the credit to start-up firms which, although not presently conducting a particular trade or business, plan to use the results of their research in the active conduct of a future trade or business.

In view of the significant modifications to the research credit, the committee concluded that it would be useful to periodically reevaluate the credit. To assist in evaluation, the committee directed the Treasury Department to conduct a study every five years in order to report whether revenue losses attributable to the research credit are consistent with those projected at the time of enactment (or, in the case of later studies, those projected at the time of the previous study), to evaluate whether the rules for computing the base for start-up firms are appropriate in view of actual trends in qualified research expenditures and gross receipts of those firms, and to review available evidence on the effectiveness of the credit in stimulating additional research expenditures.

The committee recognizes that the research credit is the equivalent of a Federal payment to the taxpayer. Thus, because the taxpayer does not pay for research to the extent of the credit, the taxpayer's deduction under section 174 for research expenses should be reduced by the amount of the research credit claimed, as in the case of other tax credits provided for by the Code.

Explanation of provisions

Incremental Credit: Sales Ratio R&E Tax Credit

A 20-percent tax credit is allowed to the extent that a taxpayer's qualified research expenditures for the current year exceed its base amount for that year. The credit is made permanent.

The base amount for the current year is computed by multiplying the taxpayer's "fixed-base percentage" by the average amount of the taxpayer's gross receipts for the four preceding years.

Fixed-base percentage

Existing firms.—If a taxpayer both incurred qualified R&E expenses and had gross receipts[3] during each of at least three years from 1984 to 1988, then its "fixed-base percentage" is the ratio that its total qualified R&E expenses for the 1984-88 period bears to its total gross receipts for this period (subject to a maximum ratio of .16, as described below).

Start-up companies.—If a taxpayer did not both incur qualified R&E expenses and have gross receipts during each of at least three years between 1984-1988, then for each of its first five taxable years after 1989 in which it incurs qualified R&E expenses, the taxpayer is assigned a fixed-base percentage of .03.

After its first five taxable years after 1989 in which it incurs qualified R&E expenses, a start-up firm's fixed-base percentage is computed as follows: (1) for the firm's sixth year, its fixed-base percentage is equal to one-sixth of its research-to-gross receipts ratio for its fourth and fifth years; (2) for the firm's seventh year, its fixed-base percentage is one-third of its ratio for its fifth and sixth years; (3) for the firm's eighth year, its fixed-base percentage is one-half of its ratio for its fifth through seventh years; (4) for the firm's ninth year, its fixed-base percentage is two-thirds of its ratio for its fifth through eighth years; (5) for the firm's tenth year, its fixed-base percentage is five-sixths of its ratio for its fifth through ninth years; and (6) after a firm's tenth year, its fixed-base percentage is its actual research-to-gross receipts ratio for five years selected by the firm from its fifth through tenth years.

Maximum fixed-base percentage.—In no event will a taxpayer's fixed-base percentage exceed .16.

Base limitation

As under current law, a taxpayer's base may not be less than a certain percentage of current-year qualified R&E expenditures. The base limitation percentage for all firms is 50 percent for taxable years beginning in 1990; 55 percent for taxable years beginning in 1991; 60 percent for taxable years beginning in 1992; 65 percent for taxable years beginning in 1993; 70 percent for taxable years beginning in 1994; and 75 percent for taxable years beginning in 1995 or later.

Trade or business limitation

A taxpayer is treated as meeting the trade or business requirement with respect to in-house research expenses if, at the time such in-house research expenses are incurred, the principal purpose of the taxpayer in making such expenditures is to use the research in the active conduct of a future trade or business of the taxpayer or certain related taxpayers.

Consistent treatment of R&E expenses

Qualified research expenses taken into account in computing a taxpayer's fixed-base percentage are to be determined on a basis which is consistent with the determination of qualified research expenses for the current year.[4] Thus, if a taxpayer includes (or excludes) certain expenditures in determining its qualified research expenses for the current year, it must provide the same treatment for all such expenditures incurred during any year taken into account in computing the taxpayer's fixed-base percentage, regardless of whether the period for filing a claim for credit or refund has expired for any year taken into account in computing the fixed-base percentage.[5]

Treasury Department Study

The Treasury Department is required to conduct a study during each 5-year period beginning on January 1, 1990, to determine whether revenue losses from the credit are consistent with the projections, to evaluate whether the rules for computing the base for start-up firms are appropriate in view of actual trends in qualified research expenditures and gross receipts of those firms, and to analyze the effectiveness of the credit in promoting research.

Eligible Expenditures

The expenditures eligible for the credit are the same as under present law.

Aggregation Rules and Changes in Business Ownership

The rules relating to aggregation of related persons and changes in business ownership are the same as under present law, with the modification that when a business changes hands, qualified research expenses and gross receipts for periods prior to the change of ownership are treated as transferred with the trade or business which gave rise to those expenditures and receipts for purposes of recomputing a taxpayer's fixed-base percentage.

In addition, the bill provides that a foreign affiliate's gross receipts which are not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States do not enter into the computation of the credit.

University Basic Research Credit

The university basic research credit is permanently extended.

Relation of Credit to Section 174 Deduction

The amount of any deduction allowable to a taxpayer under section 174 or any other provision for qualified research expenditures is reduced by an amount equal to 100 percent of the taxpayer's research credit determined for that year.

The bill clarifies that research expenses are deductible under section 174 only to the extent that they are reasonable under the circumstances.[6]

[3] The Treasury Department is authorized to prescribe regulations providing that de minimis amounts of qualified R&E expenses and gross receipts may be disregarded (including under the start-up company rules described infra).

[4] The Treasury Department is granted authority to prescribe regulations to prevent distortions in calculating a taxpayer's qualified research expenses or gross receipts due to a change in accounting methods used by the taxpayer between the current year and a year taken into account in computing the taxpayer's fixed-base percentage.

[5] No inference is intended whether current law requires a taxpayer, in calculating its credit amount for a particular year, to determine its base amount by adjusting qualified research expenses for an earlier base-period year for which an assessment of a deficiency or refund of an overpayment is barred by the statute of limitations.

[6] Thus, the bill provides for a rule contrary to the holding in Driggs v. United States, 706 F. Supp. 20 (N.D. Tex. 1989). The committee intends that the reasonableness requirement under section 174 be parallel to the reasonable allowance requirement for salaries and other compensation under section 162(a)(1), in that amounts purportedly paid for research may be recharacterized as disguised dividends, gifts, loans, or other similar payments. The committee does not intend that the reasonableness requirement under section 174 be used to question whether or not research activities themselves are of a reasonable type or nature.

The provisions are effective after December 31, 1989.

14. BUSINESS ENERGY TAX CREDITS FOR SOLAR, GEOTHERMAL, AND OCEAN THERMAL PROPERTY MADE PERMANENT (SEC. 6114 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 46(B)(2) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Three nonrefundable business energy tax credits are allowed for certain types of energy property; these tax credits are scheduled to expire after December 31, 1989. The credits (the rates and the property to which they pertain) are:

(1) Business solar—10% credit;
(2) Geothermal—10%; and
(3) Ocean thermal—15%.

Under section 38, these (and other) tax credits may not be used to offset more than 25 percent of regular tax liability above $25,000 or the tentative minimum tax for the taxable year.

The expiration date for these credits was extended for one additional year, i.e., from December 31, 1988, to December 31, 1989, in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988. Earlier, these tax credit rates were extended through 1988 in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it is essential to continue to provide incentives for the development of alternative energy sources which do not rely upon fossil fuel formations.

Explanation of provision

The energy tax credits for solar energy, geothermal, and ocean thermal property are extended permanently, at the current rate.

Effective date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1990.

15. MORTGAGE REVENUE BONDS AND MORTGAGE CREDIT CERTIFICATES

a. Extension of qualified mortgage bonds and mortgage credit certificates (sec. 6115 of the bill and sec 143 of the code)

Present law

Qualified Mortgage Bonds

In general

Mortgage revenue bonds qualifying for tax-exemption under section 103 of the Code ("qualified mortgage bonds") are bonds the net proceeds of which are used to finance the purchase, or qualifying rehabilitation or improvement, of single-family, owner-occupied homes located within the jurisdiction of the issuer of the bonds.

Eligible purchasers

In general, eligible purchasers must have not owned a residence within the three prior years and must have incomes below 115 percent of the median income for the area or State where the residence is located. For families consisting of less than three persons, the income limitation is 100 percent of the area or State median income.

Purchase price limitations

The acquisition cost of a residence financed with qualified mortgage bonds may not exceed 90 percent (110 percent in targeted area) of the average purchase price applicable to the residence.

Recapture

All or part of the subsidy provided by qualified mortgage revenue bond financing or mortgage credit certificates (described below) is recaptured on dispositions of assisted housing which occur within 10 years of purchase by mortgagors whose incomes increased substantially since purchase of their homes. The maximum amount recaptured is 1.25 percent of the original balance of the loan for each year the loan is outstanding, or 50 percent of the gain realized on the disposition, whichever is less. For sales in years six through 10, the 1.25 percent per year is phased out. This recapture provision only applies to loans originated, and mortgage credit certificates issued, after December 31, 1990.

Limitations on volume, arbitrage and unspent proceeds

Mortgage revenue bonds are subject to the general per capita volume limitation on private purpose obligations. Issuers of mortgage subsidy bonds generally must issue mortgages at rates that cannot exceed the rate of interest on the bonds by more than 1.125 percentage points. In general, bond proceeds not used to make mortgages and mortgage principal payments must be used to redeem outstanding bonds.

Sunset

The authority of State and local governments to issue tax-exempt mortgage subsidy bonds is scheduled to terminate on December 31, 1989.

Mortgage Credit Certificates

In general

Qualified governmental units may elect to exchange qualified mortgage bond authority for authority to issue mortgage credit certificates (MCCs) (sec. 25). MCCs entitle homebuyers to nonrefundable income tax credits (not to exceed $2,000 per year) for a specified percentage of interests paid on mortgage loans on their principal residences. Once issued, an MCC remains in effect as long as the residence being financed continues to be the certificate-recipient's principal residence. MCCs are generally subject to the same eligibility and targeted area requirements as qualified mortgage bonds.

Sunset

Mortgage credit certificates are scheduled to sunset with respect to nonissued mortgage subsidy bonds elected after December 31, 1989.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the qualified mortgage bond and mortgage credit certificate program should be permanently extended without modification. Substantive revisions were made to the program in the Technical Corrections and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (TAMRA). Permanent extension will ensure that the program can meet its goals without interruption.

Explanation of provision

Qualified mortgage bonds and the mortgage credit certificates program is permanently extended (bonds issued and MCCs issued pursuant to elections to trade-in State bond volume limitations, after December 31, 1989).

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

b. Mortgage credit certificates time limit suspension (sec. 6115 of the bill and sec. 25 of the Code)

Present law

Generally, a qualified issuer may either issue Mortgage Revenue Bonds (MRBs) or exchange MRB authority for authority to issue Mortgage Credit Certificates (MCCs). After it has exchanged the authority the issuer can proceed with the actual issuance of the MCCs. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 imposed new restrictions, including tighter targeting, on MRBs and MCCs. The statutory language made these restrictions effective for MCCs issued after August 15, 1986. The Conference Committee Report, on the other hand, provided that these restrictions were effective with respect to bond authority exchanged for authority to issue MCCs after August 15, 1986. The General Explanation of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 noted that a technical correction would be necessary to correct the statutory langauge to conform to the legislative intent. This technical correction to apply the 1986 Act restrictions to exchanges of bond authority and not issuances of MCCs after August 15, 1986 was enacted in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988.

Code section 25(e)(3)(B) renders a MCC invalid unless the mortgagor incurs debt by the close of the second calendar year after the exchange the authority. The time limit under this section was not suspended by the 1986 Act.

Reasons for change

Because of the drafting error, an issuer that had exchanged authority but had not issued MCCs prior to August 15, 1986 was technically subject to the 1986 Act restrictions. The issuer was forced to wait for enactment of the technical correction before it could issue MCCs that did not meet the 1986 Act restrictions. The delay in the enactment of the technical correction until 1988 allowed the operation of Code section 25(e)(3)(B) to preclude use of authority exchanged before 1986 and to severely limit availability of authority exchanged during 1986 on or before August 15, 1986.

Code sec. 25(e)(3)(B) renders a MCC invalid unless the mortgagor incurs debt by the close of the second calendar year after the exchange the authority. Under this provision, all exchanges of authority in 1985 were invalidated on December 31, 1987 and were unavailable to issuers when the technical was passed several months later. Similarly, 1986 exchanges of authority on or before August 15, 1986 were only valid if debt was incurred by December 31, 1988. Because the technical correction allowing issuance of MCCs was not enacted until October 1988, utilization of these MCCs was severely hampered: i.e., the two-year time period of Code section 25(e)(3)(B) began to run on the exchange but absence of the technical correction delayed or precluded the issuance of MCCs which in turn delayed or precluded the mortgagor from incurring debt.

Explanation of provision

The provision provides that the two-year time period allowed in Code section 25(e)(3)(B) commences running on the date of enactment of this technical correction for bond authority exchanged before August 15, 1986, but not issued as of that date.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Subtitle B. Corporate Provisions

1. LIMIT DIVIDENDS RECEIVED DEDUCTION WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN NONTAXED INCOME OF CONSOLIDATED SUBSIDIARIES (SEC. 6201 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 246 OF THE CODE)

Present Law

A distribution to a shareholder is generally treated as a dividend to the extent of the distributing corporation's current or accumulated earnings and profits. Corporate recipients of dividends generally are entitled to a dividends received deduction equal to at least 70 percent of the dividend. (An 80-percent or 100-percent deduction is permitted if the recipient has sufficent ownership of the stock of the distributing corporation.) The dividends received deduction serves to reduce substantially or eliminate multiple taxation with respect to income earned and corporate-level tax paid by distributing corporations on distributions to corporate shareholders.

If a group of corporations files a consolidated return, taxable income is determined by reference to the income and deductions of all members of the group and is, in substance, computed as if the group operated as a single corporation. No income is separately attributed to minority owners of a subsidiary that joins in filing a consolidated return. Thus, for example, income of a subsidiary bears no corporate-level tax if its parent corporation and other members of the group have losses sufficient to offset that income, even though the subsidiary may have taxable income economically attributable to minority ownership. If the minority owner and the parent or other group members had been joint venturers with respect to the subsidiary's business, then the income attributable to minority ownership could not be sheltered by losses of other members of the group but would be fully taxed to the minority owners.

In order to be eligible to file a consolidated return, a subsidiary generally must be related to the rest of the group through the group's ownership of at least 80 percent of the vote and value of all classes of subsidiary stock. However, stock described in section 1504(a)(4) (generally, nonvoting preferred stock that does not participate in corporate growth to any significant extent) is not counted for this purpose. Thus, minority shareholders holding nonvoting perferred stock may be entitled to virtually all the subsidiary's earnings without preventing consolidation. In this situation, the earnings to which the preferred shareholders are entitled can be sheltered by the losses of other members of the group without limitation. The subsidiary can pay these non-taxed earnings to the minority corporate shareholders as dividends eligible for the 70-percent dividends received deduction. Such earnings thus bear no corporate-level tax to the distributing corporation and bear a maximum tax to the recipient corporation of only 10.2 percent (34 percent of the 30 percent that is taxable after the dividends received deduction).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the dividends received deduction serves to mitigate multiple level corporate taxation where it applies. Under present law, groups filing consolidated returns can use that privilege effectively to shelter earnings attributable to minority investors in a subsidiary with losses or credits attributable to other corporate entities in which those minority shareholders do not have an economic interest. The committee is concerned that the dividends received deduction is available with respect to distributions made to such minority shareholders where those distributions have not borne a corporate level tax.

When the minority ownership is in the form of stock that is not taken into account for purposes of determining eligibility for consolidation, so that there is no limitation on the percentage of value of the subsidiary that may be owned by such minority shareholders, the opportunity to take advantage of the consolidated return rules and the dividends received deduction in this manner is particularly great. The consolidated group may in effect sell the benefit of its consolidated net operating losses or credits through the availability of the dividends received deduction for distributions to minority shareholders. For example, such a sale occurs when minority shareholders accept a lower pre-tax return in the form of a dividend from the subsidiary than they otherwise would accept if they had directly invested in the assets of the subsidiary, due to the after-tax benefit of the dividends received deduction.

The Current satutory prohibitions against loss trafficking (e.g., section 382) have not generally been applied to cover the transfer of the benefits of net operating losses through the use of the dividends received deduction.

Accordingly, the committee believes that it is appropriate to limit the availability of the dividends received deduction in certain situations.

Explanation of provision

The bill disallows the dividends received deduction for a portion of dividends paid out of current earnings and profits with respect to stock described in section 1504(a)(4) (generally, nonvoting preferred stock that does not participate in corporate growth to any significant extent) in certain circumstances.

The provision applies only to dividends paid from a subsidiary of an affiliated group of corporations filing a consolidated return.

The amount of dividends with respect to which the dividends received deduction is disallowed is determined by applying a fraction, the numerator of which is the consolidated loss offset and the denominator of which is the distributing corporation's separately computed taxable income. The fraction is applied to the lesser of a) the amount of dividends on stock described in section 1504(a)(4) paid out of current earnings and profits or b) the consolidated loss offset.

The consolidated loss offset with respect to a distributing subsidiary corporation includes specific items of any other member of the same affiliated group as the distributing corporation, which items are treated as used to offset the separately computed taxable income of such corporation. The items included are: any net operating loss or net operating loss carryover under section 172; any loss that is treated as a loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset, or capital loss carryover under section 1212; and the deduction equivalent of any excess credit or credit carryover other than the foreign tax credit.

Separately computed taxable income is the taxable income of the distributing corporation computed as if it were not a member of an affiliated group.

The Treasury Department is authorized to exempt taxpayers from the limitation to the extent taxpayers can establish that the distributions in question were made out of earnings that were taxed to the distributing corporation or the consolidated group of which it is a member.

The Treasury Department is also authorized to provide antiabuse rules. It is expected that regulations would prevent avoidance of the rules through the contribution of built-in loss assets or other direction of losses to the subsidiary by other members of the group. It is also expected that regulations would prevent avoidance of the rules through delaying distributions until later years or through the use of tiered subsidiaries or similar devices.

Except as the Treasury Department may otherwise provide, it is expected that regulations will provide that the separate taxable income of any distributing corporation for purposes of this provision shall include the separate taxable income of any other member of the group to the extent any current earnings and profits of the distributing corporation is directly or indirectly attributable to such income. Such regulations will be effective as of the effective date of this provision. Current earnings and profits of the distributing corporation would be directly or indirectly attributable to such income, for example, where such earnings and profits arise because of a dividend or other distribution out of taxable income of another corporation, or where such earnings and profits arise because undistributed earnings of another corporation are reflected in the current earnings and profits of the distributing corporation by reason of the applicable investment adjustment rules of the consolidated return regulations.

The bill provides the Treasury Department authority to require the issuer to report to holders and the Internal Revenue Service when the dividends received deduction is not allowable under this provision with respect to part or all of the dividends paid on stock.

The provision is generally effective for distributions after October 2, 1989. However, it does not apply to distributions with respect to subsidiary stock issued on or before that date, or issued after that date pursuant to a binding written contract in effect on that date and at all times thereafter before such stock is issued, so long as certain transactions described below do not occur.

Otherwise grandfathered stock ceases to be grandfathered if the issuing corporation ceases to be a member of the affiliated group of which it was a member at the time the stock was issued (or at the time the contract to issue such stock became binding), or becomes a member of any group, unless such event occurs in a transaction that would not result in the recognition of any deferred intercompany gain under the consolidated return regulations by reason of the acquisition of the entire group.* Grandfathered stock also ceases to be grandfathered if such stock is retired or purchased by the issuer or by any member of the affiliated group of which the issuer is a member, unless the retirement is pursuant to an obligation to reissue under a binding written contract (which may be evidenced by the terms of the stock that has been issued by the corporation) in effect on October 2, 1989 and at all times thereafter until such stock is reissued.

Auction rate preferred stock is treated for this purpose as issued when the contract requiring the auction became binding and is not considered issued at the time of each auction conducted pursuant to such commitment. The contract requiring the auction for this purpose is the contract (which may be evidenced by the terms of the stock that has been issued by the corporation) committing the corporation to provide for the conduct of auctions with respect to the stock. Thus, auction rate preferred stock that was issued on or before October 2, 1989, or after that date in accordance with the terms of a binding written contract to issue such stock in effect on that date and at all times thereafter until such stock is issued, does not cease to be grandfathered merely because auctions pursuant to the terms of such original issuance or pursuant to the terms of such binding contract are conducted after October 2, 1989.

For purposes of these transition rules, stock that has been issued but has never been held by a person not a member of the group is not considered to have been issued.

2. DEFER INTEREST DEDUCTION ON CERTAIN HIGH-YIELD ORIGINAL ISSUE DISCOUNT (OID) OBLIGATIONS UNTIL INTEREST IS PAID (SEC. 6202 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 163 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Original issue discount (OID) is the excess of the stated redemption price at maturity over the issue price of a debt instrument. The issuer of a debt instrument with OID generally accrues and deducts the discount, as interest, over the life of the obligation even though the amount of such interest is not paid until the debt matures. The holder of such a debt instrument also generally includes the OID in income on an accrual basis.

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned about the frequent use of high-yield, long-term OID instruments and instruments that make payments in instruments of the issuer (e.g., so-called payment-in-kind" (PIK) bonds) and the effect these instruments may have on the amount of debt in the corporate sector of economy. The committee believes that the interest deduction permitted for these instruments, even though no cash is paid, encourages their use in highly-leveraged financial structures. The committee believes that the tax benefit from the deduction prior to payment is particularly strong when the issuer is subject to the corporate income tax.

The committee believes that the amount of long-term high-yield OID and PIK instruments issued by corporations will be reduced if the interest deduction on such instruments is postponed until the interest is paid.

Explanation of provision

In General

Under the bill, a C corporation may not deduct (or otherwise take into account [1] any portion of OID on an applicable high yield discount obligation until such portion is actually paid. Payments in the form of stock or obligations of the issuer would not be considered paid for this purpose. The bill does not change the present law rule allowing interest to be deducted no earlier than the date on which it accrues. See sec. 461(g). Nor does it change the requirement that the holder include such interest in income as it accrues.

Definition of Applicable High Yield Discount Obligation

An applicable high yield discount obligation is a debt instrument that meets three requirements. First, the maturity date of the instrument must be more than five years from the date of issue.

Second, the yield to maturity on the instrument must equal or exceed the sum of the applicable Federal rate (AFR) for the calendar month in which the obligation is issued [2] plus five percentage points. The Secretary of the Treasury may be regulation apply a higher rate if the taxpayer establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that such rate is based on the some principles as the AFR and is appropriate for the term of the instrument. This authority may be exercised so as to allow a rate that more exactly establishes the average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States at the same time the obligation was issued and for the same maturity as the obligation. Cf. Prop. Reg. sec. 1.1274-6(a)(3).

Third, the instrument must have significant OID. An instrument has significant OID if the aggregate amount that would be includible in gross income with respect to the instrument before the close of any accrual period ending more than five years after the date of issue exceeds the sum of (1) the aggregate amount of interest to be paid under the instrument before the close of such accrual period and (2) the product of the issue price of such instrument and its yield to maturity. For these purposes, amounts required to be paid on the last day of the accrual period are treated as required to be paid before the close of the accrual period.

Example 1.—An instrument with a twenty year maturity and an issue price of $100, pays $33.61 annually beginning in year six and $210.03 (plus $33.61 of interest) at maturity, producing a yield to maturity of 16 percent. The instrument has significant OID because the aggregate amount that would be includible in gross income with respect to the instrument before the close of at least one accrual period ending more than five years after the date of issue exceeds the sum of (1) the aggregate interest to be paid under the instrument before the close of the period and (2) the product of the issue price of the instrument and its yield to maturity. For example, the aggregate amount that would be includible in income with respect to the instrument as of the accrual period ending six years after issuance, $143.64 ($110.03 plus $33.61), exceeds the sum of the aggregate interest to be paid with respect to the instrument, $33.61, plus the product of the issue price and the yield to maturity, $16.

Example 2.—The facts are the same as Example 1, except that the instrument pays $110.03 in year five, $16 per year thereafter, and $100 (plus $16 of interest) at maturity. The instrument does not have significant OID because the aggregate amount that would be includible in gross income with respect to the instrument before the close of each accrual period ending more than five years after the issue date does not exceed the sum of (1) the aggregate interest to be paid under the instrument before the close of the period and (2) the product of the issue price and the yield to maturity. For instance, the aggregate amount that would be includible in income with respect to the instrument as of the accrual period ending six years after issuance, $126.03 ($110.03 plus $16), is less than the sum of the aggregate interest to be paid with respect to the instrument, $126.03, plus the product of the issue price and the yield to maturity, $16.

Special rules

For purposes of determining whether a debt instrument is an applicable high yield discount obligation, any payment made under the instrument shall be assumed to be made on the last day permitted under the instrument. In addition, any payment to be made in the form of another obligation or stock of the issuer or a related person (within the meaning of Code sec. 453(f)(1)) shall be assumed to be made when such obligation or stock is required to be paid or redeemed in cash or property other than such an obligation or stock.

Information requirements

The Secretary of the Treasury is granted regulatory authority to require that information be set forth on the applicable high yield obligation. For example, the Secretary of the Treasury may require that the instrument disclose the fact that the instrument is an applicable high yield obligation and other information, such as the tax treatment of the obligation. However, the Treasury Secretary shall not require that information be set forth on instruments not publicly offered prior to disposition by the first buyer. In addition, the issuer of publicly offered applicable high yield obligations is required to furnish such information as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Failure of an issuer to set forth information required to be set forth on a debt instrument or to furnish information required to be furnished is subject to the same penalties as such failures with regard to OID instruments. See Code sec. 6706.

Regulatory authority

Under the provision, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to prescribe such regulations as may be appropriate to carry out the purpose of the provision. These regulations may include modifications in the provision in the case of varying rates of interest, put or call options, indefinite maturities, contingent payments, assumptions of debt instruments, conversion rights, or other circumstances. Such regulations may, for example, provide rules for the Federal income tax treatment of debt instruments payable in foreign currency or stock of the issuing corporation.

In the case of debt instruments providing for a variable rate of interest (within the meaning of Prop. Reg. sec. 1.1275-5) issued before the issuance of regulations, the committee expects that regulations to be issued by the Treasury Department will provide that the determination of whether an obligation is an applicable high yield discount obligation will be made by treating the debt instrument as if it provided for a fixed interest rate corresponding to the rate established by the variable rate on the issue date. The committee also expects that similar rules would apply where the instrument provides for different variable rates for different accrual periods.

In the case of debt instruments providing for contingent interests, the committee expects that the regulations to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury may take into account the expected amount of any such contingent payments in determining whether an obligation is an applicable high yield obligation. Cf. Code sec. 1272(a)(6).

The committee expects that the regulations to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury would prevent avoidance of the purpose of the provision through the use of issuers other than C corporations, agreements to borrow amounts due under the debt instrument, or other arrangements. Such regulations may, for example, address the taxation of obligations collateralized by corporate debt that would constitute applicable high yield discount obligations if issued directly by a C corporation.[3] The committee expects that such regulations also would address situations in which a C corporation, in effect, issues applicable high yield discount obligations by issuing an obligation bearing stated interest while entering into an agreement understands that such regulations would be retroactive in appropriate circumstances.

[1] For example, for purposes of section 263(f), interest would not be taken into account until paid.

[2] For these purposes, the AFR is determined without reference to the lowest 3-month rate provided by section 1274(d)(2).

Effective date

In General

The provision would be effective for instruments issued after July 10, 1989. An assumption by a taypayer of an instrument issued by another person is treated as a new issuance by the taxpayer for purposes of this rule.

Instruments Issued as Interest

The provision would not apply to any instrument that is issued pursuant to the terms of a debt instrument issued before July 11, 1989, or which is otherwise excepted from the provision under the transition relief described below. Thus, if the terms of a debt instrument provide for the payment of interest in the form of additional instruments, the provision does not apply to the additional instruments (e.g., the issuance of a payment-in-kind obligation after July 10, 1989, as interest on a payment-in-kind obligation issued before July 11, 1989).

Instruments Issued in Connection With Certain Acquisitions

In General

In addition, the provision does not apply to an instrument issued after July 10, 1989, that meets three requirements. The three requirements are: (1) the completion of, or commitment to consummate, an acquisition, (2) the determination to issue an obligation to which the provision would otherwise apply, and (3) the establishment of a sufficient connection between the acquisition and the use of such obligation as financing for the acquisition.

Acquisition requirement

In order to meet the first requirement, the issuer (or a related party) must have: (1) made an acquisition before July 11, 1989, (2) made an acquisition after July 10, 1989, pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on July 10, 1989, and at all times thereafter, or (3) made an acquisition after July 10, 1989, pursuant to a tender offer that was filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission on or before July 10, 1989. An acquisition includes an acquisition of stock (including the stock of the acquirer) or assets.

In order to meet the second requirement, the issuer must have made a determination to issue an obligation to which the provision would otherwise apply. A determination to issue such an obligation will be considered made if certain terms of the obligation are evidenced in written documents that (1) were transmitted before July 11, 1989, between the issuer and any governmental bodies or prospective parties to the issuance or acquisition, and (2) are customarily used for the type of financing or acquisition involved.

Required terms.—For this purpose, the terms of the instrument that must be evidenced in the transmitted documents are: (1) the fact that the instrument will be issued with significant OID, (2) the maximum maturity terms of the instrument, and (3) issue price of the instrument or the maximum amount of proceeds to be raised by the issuance of such instrument. The required terms of the instrument will not be considered to be sufficiently evidenced if the issuer has an option to amend or extend the required terms of the instrument or has an option to covert an instrument to which this provision does not apply to an instrument to which this provision does apply.[4]

The requirement that the fact that the instrument will be issued with significant OID will not be considered to be met if, before July 11, 1989, the issuer evidences a determination to issue instruments that provide for the annual payment of at least a portion of the yield and the instruments, as ultimately issued, do not provide for such payments.

If the maturity term of the instrument is not determined before July 11, 1989, such term will be considered to be determined so long as the actual maturity term of the instrument, when issued, does not exceed ten years.

Appropriate evidentiary documents.—Documents which can be used to evidence the determination to issue the otherwise disqualified obligation include: (1) the closing documents, the binding written contract, or the tender offer relating to the acquisition requirement described above; (2) a registration statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission by the prospective issuer that describes a public offering of OID or PIK instruments; (3) a loan commitment provided by a lending institution to the prospective issuer of the OID or PIK instrument; or (4) a private placement memorandum circulated to prospective investors on behalf of the prospective issuer. Evidence of the required terms of the otherwise disqualified obligation may be determined from a document even if such obligation is not the principal subject of such document.

For this purpose, prospective parties to the acquisition include those parties with a significant financial interest in the transaction (other than as agents of the acquirer). Thus, potential sellers of the stock or assets being acquired and potential lenders that provide temporary or permanent financing with respect to the acquisition would be considered to be prospective parties to the acquisition. However, such written documents as internally generated computer outputs which contemplate the issuance of OID or PIK instruments in connection with an acquisition or memoranda or letters that are exchanged between a prospective acquirer or issuer and the acquirer's agent generally would not be considered to be transmitted with a prospective party to the acquisition.

Connection Requirement

In order to meet the third requirement, an obligation must be issued in connection with the required acquisition. This required connection is properly established if the documents that evidence the determination to issue the obligation contain a reference to the use of such obligation as financing for the acquisition.

The connection requirement is not met if the instrument actually issued does not have reasonably the same required terms (as described above) that were evidence on or before July 10, 1989. Thus, if the amount of proceeds actually raised by the issuance of the obligations exceeds the amount determined on or before July 10, 1989, in the identifying written document or documents by more than a de minimis amount, the entire issuance will be treated as obligations to which this provision applies (assuming all other requirements are met). In addition, the maturity term of the instrument as issued or the amount of the proceeds raised by the issuance of the instruments may be less than the length of the maturity term or the amount of proceeds that were identified before July 11, 1989, without disqualifying the instrument for transitional relief.

Instruments Issued in Refinancings

Furthermore, this provision would not apply to an instrument issued to refinance an obligation to which this provision does not apply if the following four conditions are met: first, the maturity date of the refinancing instrument may not be later than the maturity date of the refinanced instrument; second, the issue price of the refinancing instrument may not exceed the adjusted issue price of the refinanced instrument (as determined at the time of the refinancing); third, the stated redemption price at maturity of the refinancing instrument may not be greater than the stated redemption price at maturity of the refinanced instrument; and fourth, the interest payments required under the refinancing instrument before maturity may not be less than (and may not be paid later than) the interest payments required under the refinanced instrument.

Instruments Issued Pursuant to Certain Bankruptcy Proceedings

Finally, this provision would not apply to an instrument that is issued after July 10, 1989, pursuant to a reorganization plan in a Title 11 or similar case (as defined in sec. 368(a)(3) of the Code) so long as the required terms (as described above) of the instrument, as issued, do not exceed the required terms of the instrument as specified in the last reorganization plan filed before July 11, 1989, in such case.

3. REPEAL NONRECOGNITION TREATMENT WHEN SECURITIES ARE RECEIVED IN SECTION 351 TRANSACTIONS (SEC. 6203 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 351 OF THE CODE)

Present law

No gain or loss is recognized if property is transferred to a corporation by one or more persons solely in exchange for stock or securities in such corporation and immediately after the exchange such person or persons are in control of the corporation (sec. 351). Accordingly, a transferor may transfer appreciated property to a corporation in exchange for stock and debt obligation of the corporation that is a security, without recognition of gain.

Different rules apply for debt obligations that are not considered to be "securities" under section 351. Such other debt obligations are treated as "boot." A transferor who receives boot is taxed on the lesser of the amount of the boot or the gain realized

[3] The regulations might, for instance, treat the collateralized debt as an applicable high yield discount obligation, at least when the C corporation participates in the collateralization. Such participation might be deemed to have occurred if the first buyer engages in collateralization shortly after purchasing the debt instrument.

[4] For example, assume that before July 11, 1989, a taxpayer had issued preferred stock that could be converted by the taxpayer, at any time, into an obligation to which this provision would otherwise apply. Should the taxpayer exercise the conversion option, the newly issued obligations would not be protected from the application of this provision even though the preferred stock from which it was converted was issued before July 11, 1989.

on the exchange generally as if the transferred property had been sold (However, no loss is recognized.)

Under the corporate reorganization provision, if a taxpayer transfers property in a reorganization and receives securities with a principal amount in excess of any securities surrendered, such excess is treated as boot. Such a taxpayer must recognize gain, if any, to the extent of the boot received in the exchange.

The receipt of any debt obligation constituting boot generally qualifies for installment sale treatment. Under the installment sale rules, taxpayers generally take into account gain on the installment method but must pay interest on the deferred tax liabilty in certain circumstances.[1] However, the installment method is not available in certain circumstances (for example, if the property transferred is stock or securities traded on an established market, or in the case of certain transfers between related parties). In addition, in certain circumstances, a taxpayer will accelerate gain if the installment note is pledged as security for an indebtedness (sec. 453A).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that a transferor who receives securities in a section 351 transaction does not continue an investment in the transferred assets to the extent of the securities received. In such instances, it is more appropriate to characterize the transaction as a taxable sale (to the extent of the securities received) rather than a tax-free exchange. The committee therefore believes that securities received in a section 351 transaction should be treated as boot. Such treatment would generally conform the tax consequences of the receipt of securities in a section 351 transaction to the tax consequences accorded securities received in a transaction qualifying as a tax-free reorganization.

Explanation of provision

Securities received in a section 351 transaction are treated as boot. The provision does not apply, however, to: (1) any exhange that is pursuant to a plan of reorganziation in which the securities are subject to section 354 (or so much of section 356 as relates to section 354); or (2) any exchange where the stock or securities received in the exchange are distributed in a transaction to which section 355 (or so much of section 356 as relates to section 355) applies.

Effective date

The provision applies to transfers after October 2, 1989, unless the transfer was pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on that date and at all times thereafter before such transfer.

In addition, the provision applies to transfers made by C corporations after July 11, 1989, other than (1) transfers where (i) the transferor, immediately after the transfer, owns stock in the transferee that meets the 80-percent vote and value test of section 1504(a)(2) (excluding stock described in sec. 1504(a)(4)) and (ii) the transfer was not part of a plan to reduce the transferor's interest in the transferee (or a successor corporation) below the 80-percent vote or value level, and (2) transfers pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on July 11, 1989 and at all times thereafter before such transfer.

4. PROVISIONS RELATING TO REGULATED INVESTMENT COMPANIES

a. Require mutual funds to distribute 98 percent of ordinary income (sec. 6204(a) of the bill and sec. 4982 of the Code)

Present law

In order to avoid a penalty excise tax, a regulated investment company (RIC), commonly called a "mutual fund," generally must distribute before January 1 of any year at least 97 percent of its ordinary income earned during the prior calendar year and 98 percent of its capital gain net income for the 12-month period ending on October 31 of that year (Code sec. 4982). The penalty excise tax is equal to 4 percent of the excess (if any) of the required distribution for the calendar year over the actual distributed amount for such year.

Reasons for change

The penalty excise tax is intended to limit the use of RICs to achieve deferral of taxable income to shareholders, with certain de minimis rules to allow for the difficulty in determining the exact amounts of capital gain and ordinary income. The committee determined that mutual funds could reasonably be expected to estimate 98 percent of their ordinary income. By reducing the de minimis amounts to levels warranted by actual experience, the provision eliminates unnecessary deferral.

Explanation of proposal

Under the bill, the distribution required to avoid the penalty excise tax is increased to 98 percent of ordinary income.

Effective date

The provision is effective for calendar years ending after July 10, 1989.

b. Denial of deduction for transferable mutual fund load charges if shareholder does not hold share for more than six months (sec. 6204(b) of the bill and sec. 852 of Code)

Present law

A shareholder's basis in shares purchased in a regulated investment company (RIC), commonly called a "mutual fund," is the cost of acquiring the shares. This cost includes an expense such as a sales fee or "load charge" incurred in connection with the purchase. Thus, upon sale or exchange of the shares, the shareholder's gain is reduced, or loss is increased, by the amount of such expense (Code secs. 1011 and 1001).

If a RIC shareholder receives an exempt-interest dividend and sells his shares without holding them for more than six months, his loss on the sale is denied to the extent of the dividend. Likewise, if a RIC shareholder receives a capital gain dividend and sells his shares without holding them for more than six months, his loss on the sale is denied to the extent of the dividend (sec. 851(b)(4)).

Reasons for change

For some RICs that belong to a family or series of funds, a load charge is imposed when shares of a fund are purchased, but an additional load charge is waived if the shares are received in exchange for those of another fund within the family or series. In that situation, a shareholder can purchase shares of a fund, exchange them for shares of a fund for which the load charge is waived, and claim that loss is increased, or gain reduced, by an amount equal to the load charge. Thus, present law encourages a shareholder who plans to purchase shares in one particular fund within a family of funds to first purchase shares in a different fund in the family and immediately exchange the purchased for the desired shares in order to claim a capital loss equal to the load charge.

The committee believes that a load charge should not enter into the calculation of gain or loss until the shareholder has borne significant economic risk with respect to the underlying shares. A six-month holding period ensures that the shareholder bears such risk and reduces the possibility that a shareholder will engage in unnecessary purchase of mutual fund shares in order to recognize a capital loss.

In addition, the committee believes that a six-month holding period shows recognition for the fact that a shareholder benefits from a load charge so long as he holds shares in the family of funds.

Explanation of provision

If a taxpayer (1) incurs a load charge in acquiring mutual fund shares and thereby obtains a reinvestmment right, (2) disposes of those shares within six months, and (3) acquires shares in a mutual fund for which the otherwise applicable load charge is reduced by reason of the reinvestment right, then the original load charge increases the taxpayer's basis in the original shares only to the extent that the otherwise applicable load charge for the second acquisition is not reduced. Such charge is treated as incurred with respect to the shares purchased pursuant to the reinvestment right and increases basis in the reinvested shares if the shares are held for more than six months.

A person receiving mutual fund shares in a nonrecognition transaction succeeds to the treatment under the provision of the person who previously owned the shares. For example, assume H incurs a load charge in acquiring mutual fund shares and thereby obtains a reinvestment right, and holds the shares for two months before giving them to W. If W exchanges the shares for those of another fund and the otherwise applicable load charge is reduced, W's basis in the original shares is increased by the load charge incurred by H only if W holds the exchanged shares for more than four months.

A load charge is any sale or similar charge incurred by a person in acquiring shares of a regulated investment company, but does not include a charge incurred by reason of the reinvestment of a dividend. A reinvestment right is any right to acquire shares of one or more mutual funds with the payment of a reduced load charge. The term reinvestment right includes a privilege that may be modified without the consent of the shareholder.

The provision applies to load charges incurred after October 3, 1989, in taxable years ending after such date.

c. Require mutual funds to include dividend income on the ex-dividend date (sec. 6204(c) the bill and sec. 852 of the Code)

Dividends from stock owned by a regulated investment company (RIC), commonly called a "mutual fund," are includible in the company's income when received. (See Rev. Rul. 78-117, 1978-1 C.B. 214)

Reasons for change

As a general matter, inclusion of dividends in income on the ex-dividend date results in more accurate measurement of income than inclusion when received. In addition, such inclusion works no additional recordkeeping burdens on a RIC, which includes dividends in income on the ex-dividend date for accounting purposes. Accordingly, the committee believes it appropriate that RICs include dividends in income on the ex-dividend date.

[1] The basis consequences to the transferee in a section 351 transaction are determined under section 362 of the Code. That section provides that the basis of property received by the corporation is the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor, increased in the amount of gain recognized to the transferor on such transfer.

Explanation of provision

The bill requires that a mutual fund include a dividend received by it in income when the stock becomes ex-dividend with respect to the dividend. If a RIC acquires stock after such date and acquires the right to receive the dividend, the RIC must include the dividend in income on the date of acquisition.

Effective date

The provision is effective for dividends on stock becoming ex-dividend after date of enactment.

5. REDUCE BUILT-IN GAIN AND LOSS THRESHOLD FOR SECTIONS 382 AND 384 (SEC. 6205 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 382(H)(3)(B) AND 56(G)(4)(H) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Sections 382 and 384 of the Code restrict the use of built-in losses and built-in gains of a corporation when there are certain changes in the control of a corporation. These rules apply only if the net unrealized built-in loss or built-in gain exceeds 25 percent of the fair market value of the assets of the corporation.

Under the minimum tax adjusted current earnings regime, built-in losses are limited, without a threshold, if there is a change of ownership under section 382 (Code sec. 56(g)(4)(H)).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the 25-percent threshold requirement of sections 382 and 384, which is a rule of administrative convenience, is too generous. The committee concluded that the threshold requirement should be reduced and that no threshold is justified if the amount of the built-in gain or built-in loss is substantial.

The committee believes that once an effective threshold is adopted for regular tax purposes that does not permit significant amounts of built-in losses to avoid the limitation, it is appropriate to extend the same threshold to the minimum tax as a rule of administrative convenience.

Explanation of provision

The restrictions in sections 382 and 384 on the use of built-in gains and built-in losses of a corporation will apply if the built-in loss or built-in gain exceeds the lesser of (1) 15 percent of the fair market value of the assets of the company or (2) $25 million.

A corresponding threshold is provided for built-in losses under the minimum tax adjusted current earnings regime.

Effective date

The provision generally is effective for ownership changes and acquisitions after October 2, 1989, in taxable years ending after such date. The provision, however, does not apply to any ownership change or acquisition pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on or before October 2, 1989, and at all times thereafter before such ownership change or acquisition.[1] However, in the case of a reorganization described in subparagraph (G) of section 368(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended, or an exchange of debt for stock in a title 11 or similar case, as defined in section 368(a)(3) of such Code, the provision would not apply to any ownership change or acquisition if a petition in such case was filed with the court before October 3, 1989.

[1] The committee understands that, under present law, a written binding contract to acquire stock may be treated as exercised and thus result in an ownership change.

6. REQUIRE BASIS REDUCTION FOR NONTAXED PORTION OF DIVIDENDS ON SELF-LIQUIDATING STOCK (SEC. 6206 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1059 OF THE CODE)

Present law

In general, corporations are entitled to a deduction equal to 70 percent of the dividends received from a domestic corporation. An 80-percent dividends received deduction is allowable if the corporate shareholder owns 20 percent or more of the stock of the domestic corporation and a 100-percent dividends received deduction is allowable if the corporate shareholder owns at least 80 percent of the stock of the domestic corporation.

A corporate shareholder's basis in stock is reduced by the portion of a dividend eligible of the dividends received deduction if the dividend is "extraordinary." In general, a dividend is extraordinary if the amount of the dividend equals or exceeds 10 percent (5 percent in the case of preferred stock) of the shareholder's adjusted basis in the stock and the shareholder has not held the stock, subject to a risk of loss, for at least 2 years prior to the date the amount of payment of the dividend is declared, announced, or agreed to, whichever is the earliest (sec. 1059).

Reasons for change

Corporate shareholders may received dividends eligible for the dividends received deduction in circumstances where the dividends more appropriately should be characterized as a return of capital. In many of these cases, the dividends are not subject to the "extraordinary dividend" rules of present law, so the holder's basis in the stock is not reduced as it should be economically. Thus, the holder can sell the stock and create an artificial capital loss in an amount approximately equal to the return-of-capital dividends. The committee believes that basis reduction in such cases is appropriate to accurately reflect the true economic effect of these types of transactions.

Explanation of provision

The provision treats dividends with respect to certain preferred stock as extraordinary dividends under section 1059 (regardless of holding period), thus requiring reduction in stock basis. The provision applies to dividends with respect to preferred stock if (1) when issued, such stock has a dividend rate which declines (or reasonably can be expected to decline) in the future, (2) the issue price of such stock exceeds its liquidation rights or its stated redemption price, or (3) such stock is otherwise structured to enable corporate shareholders to reduce tax through a combination of dividend received deductions and loss of the disposition of the stock.

Stock and dividends subject to the provision include instruments treated as stock under any provision of law. Dividends subject to the provision include dividends deemed received under section 305 or any other provision.

In determining whether a dividend rate declines, or whether the stock would otherwise be subject to the provision, the effect of section 305 or other provisions of law on the timing and amount of the dividend shall be taken into account. The provision is not intended to apply to (i) dividends on preferred stock whose dividend rate declines due to an unforeseen economic downturn in the issuer's business, or (ii) dividends on floating rate or auction rate preferred stock whose dividend rate declines solely in response to changes in prevailing market conditions.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe regulations that would apply this rule to dividends with respect to stock other than preferred stock in appropriate cases.

Effective date

The provision applies to stock issued after July 10, 1989, unless issued pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on July 10, 1989, and at all times thereafter before the stock is issued.

7. MODIFY EXCESS LOSS ACCOUNT RECAPTURE RULES TO PREVENT SHIFTING OF BASIS TO DEBT (SEC. 6207 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1503(E) OF THE CODE)

Present Law

Under the consolidated return regulations, in general, a parent corporation must reduce its basis in the stock of a subsidiary with which it files a consolidated return by the amount of distributions the parent receives from the subsidiary and the amount of any deficit in earnings and profits of the subsidiary. Similarly, a parent corporation increases its basis in the stock of a subsidiary by the amount of contributions to the subsidiary and earnings and profits of the subsidiary. In general, when distributions and losses from the subsidiary exceed the contributions to and earnings of the subsidiary, an "excess loss account" is created. This amount is generally included in the income of the parent on certain dispositions of the stock of the subsidiary.

Under the present consolidated return regulations, a parent corporation that has an excess loss account in the stock of a subsidiary can, on disposition of the subsidiary's stock, elect to apply the excess loss account to reduce the basis of other stock or debt held by the parent in the subsidiary after the disposition.

Reasons for Change

The committee believes that when deductions creating an excess loss account have been taken with respect to an equity investment that is disposed of, it is not appropriate to permit deferral of gain recognition by shifting the recapture liability to a debt investment. The committee is also aware that some taxpayers have attempted to manipulate the rules of present law to accomplish sales of a subsidiary for a debt obligation in transactions which defer the recognition of gain.

Explanation of Provision

The provision modifies the excess loss account recapture rules to prevent the reallocation of the excess loss account to reduce the basis of debt in the subsidiary held by the parent corporation after a disposition. Thus, on disposition of the stock of a subsidiary corporation, gain attributable to an excess loss account must be recognized rather than deferred through a reduction in the basis of debt held by the parent corporation in the subsidiary.

The provision is not intended to affect the ability of taxpayers to diminish the amount of an excess loss account by contributions to capital (including contributions of indebtedness) or to prevent taxpayers from taking a loss for indebtedness of a subsidiary (to the extent otherwise permitted) if such debt becomes worthless.

The Treasury Department is directed to reexamine in certain cases the consolidated return rules permitting reallocation of the excess loss account to reduce the basis of other stock held by the parent corporation in the subsidiary corporation.

Effective date

The provision generally is effective for dispositions after July 10, 1989, in taxable years ending after such date. The provision, however, does not apply to any disposition pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on July 10, 1989, and at all times thereafter before such disposition.

8. CLARIFY TREASURY REGULATION AUTHORITY RELATING TO DEBT/EQUITY (SEC. 6208(a) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 385 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The characterization of an investment in a corporation as debt or equity for Federal income tax purposes generally is determined by reference to numerous factors that are deemed to reflect aspects of the economic substance of the investor's interest in the corporation. There presently is no definition in the Internal Revenue Code or the income tax regulations which can be used to determine whether an interest in a corporation constitutes debt or equity for Federal income tax purposes. Such a determination is made under principles developed in case law. Courts have approached the issue of distinguishing debt and equity by analyzing and weighing the relevant facts and circumstances of each case. Generally, there has been a tendency to characterize an instrument entirely as debt or entirely as equity. Some cases, however, have treated certain instruments as part debt and part equity. See, e.g., Farley Realty Corporation v. Commissioner, 279 F.2d 701 (2d Cir. 1960).

In 1969, Congress granted the Secretary of the Treasury the authority to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to determine whether an interest in a corporation is to be treated as stock or as indebtedness for Federal income tax purposes (sec. 385). The regulations were to prescribe factors to be taken into account in determining, with respect to particular factual situations, whether a debtor-creditor relationship or a corporation-shareholder relationship existed. Proposed regulations under section 385 were issued in 1980 and 1981, although they were withdrawn in 1983. To date, no additional regulations have been issued.

Reasons for change

Instruments often possess some debt-like and some equity-like characteristics and thus cannot readily be classified under present-law principles either wholly as debt or wholly as equity. The committee believes that the Treasury Department should be accorded the opportunity to separately characterize different portions of such instruments as debt or equity. In addition, the committee believes that it is important that the Treasury Department provide guidance to taxpayers on debt-equity issues in an expeditious manner.

Explanation of provision

Section 385 is amended to allow the Treasury Department to characterize an instrument having significant debt and equity characteristics as part debt and part equity. For example, such treatment may be appropriate in circumstances where a debt instrument provides for payments that are dependent to a significant extent (whether in whole or in part) on corporate performance, whether through equity kickers, contingent interest, significant deferral of payment, subordination, or an interest rate sufficiently high to suggest a significant risk of default.

The Treasury Department will continue to be authorized, although not required, to issue comprehensive debt-equity regulations under section 385. However, the Treasury Department is directed to increase the issuance of IRS published rulings on debt-equity issues.

No inference is intended that the Internal Revenue Service cannot characterize an instrument as part debt and part equity under present law.

Effective date

The Treasury Department's regulatory authority under this provision to characterize an instrument as part debt and part equity applies only on a prospective basis. Such authority can be exercised only with respect to instruments issued after public guidance is published whether by regulation, ruling, or otherwise, stating the position of the Treasury Department with respect to the characterization of such instruments.

9. REQUIRE REPORTING TO THE IRS OF CERTAIN ACQUISITION AND RECAPITALIZATION TRANSACTIONS (SEC 6208(B) OF THE BILL AND SECS. 6043 AND 6652 OF THE CODE)

Present law

There is no requirement under present law that the parties to an acquisition or recapitalization transaction report information to the Treasury Department or the Internal Revenue Service with respect to such transaction, except as incident to the filing of Federal income tax returns.

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned that it is difficult for the Internal Revenue Service to audit acquisition and recapitalization transactions effectively because the information relevant to such transactions is disaggregated among the returns of different taxpayers. In addition, taxpayers may not identify particular items on their returns as relating to an acquisition or recapitalization transaction or may not identify the specific transaction involved.

The committee believes that requiring the reporting of certain information with respect to acquisition and recapitalizations will improve compliance with the tax laws and will enable the IRS to audit taxpayers more effectively with respect to such transactions.

Explanation of provision

In General

The Treasury Department is directed to require information reporting, in general, when: (1) one or more persons acquire control of a corporation in a transaction (or series of related transactions) or (2) there is a recapitalization of a corporation or other substantial change in the capital structure of a corporation. Control for this purpose means the ownership of stock possessing at least 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote, or at least 50 percent of the total value of shares of all classes of stock. Control is determined in accordance with the provisions of section 304(c)(1), including the attribution provisions applicable to that section.

The committee intends that a substantial change in the capital structure of a corporation include transactions whereby a substantial portion of the equity of a corporation is replaced with debt. Such transactions could include, for example, leveraged distributions made by a corporation with respect to its stock, leveraged stock redemptions, or a corporation's issuance of debt to its shareholders. The Treasury Department is expected to issue guidance concerning what transactions will be considered as resulting in a substantial change in the capital structure of a corporation. The committee intends a recapitalization to include reorganizations under section 368(a)(1)(E). Other transactions that have the effect of a significant change in capital structure (for example, by replacing a significant amount of equity with debt) are also intended to be within the scope of the Treasury authority, without regard to whether they are in the form of a taxable or tax-free transaction.

If reporting is required with respect to a transaction (or series of related transactions), the corporation that is acquired or recapitalized or otherwise undergoes a change in its capital structure will be required to make a return at the time and in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The information to be reported includes the identity of the parties to the transaction, the fees involved, any changes in the capital structure of the corporation, and such other additional information as the Treasury Department may require to be reported with respect to such transaction.

The committee expects the Treasury Department to issue guidance in this area promptly to enable taxpayers to file information returns with respect to transactions covered by this provision.

Penalties

Non-compliance with the reporting requirement is subject to penalties of $500 per day for each day that the information return is overdue, up to a maximum penalty of $100,000. In addition, the criminal penalty provisions of present law apply (see Code secs. 7203, 7206 and 7207).

De minimis rules and other rules of convenience

The committee intends that the Treasury Department will exempt small transactions from any reporting requirement hereunder. For these purposes, the committee considers an acquisition in which the total consideration involved is less than $10 million to be a small transaction. The committee considers a recapitalization or other substantial change in the capital structure of a corporation involving less than a $10 million distribution or involving less than $10 million in value of the stock or debt of the corporation to be a small transaction. The Treasury Department is specifically authorized, however, to exempt certain larger transactions from the reporting requirement if the Treasury Department determines such an exemption to be appropriate.

The Treasury Department is specifically authorized to develop other rules that would exempt particular categories of transactions from the reporting requirement if compliance would be unduly burdensome and exemption from the reporting requirements would not be inconsistent with the purposes of this provision.

Effective date

The provision is effective for transactions after March 31, 1990.

10. TREASURY STUDY OF "DEBT VS. EQUITY" AND INTEGRATION ISSUES (SEC. 6208(C) OF THE BILL)

Present law

Interest on debt is generally deductible by the issuer and is includible in the income of the holder. In the case of tax-exempt or foreign holders, however, the interest is not taxable with the result that neither the issuer nor the holders pay any tax on income with respect to amounts distributed as interest.

The U.S. income tax system is not integrated, i.e., corporations and their shareholders are generally treated as separate taxable entities. Thus, income earned by a corporation and distributed to shareholders may be taxed twice: once at the corporate level when earned and again at the shareholder level when such income is distributed to shareholders.

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned with the differing Federal income tax treatment of debt and equity and with economic distortions resulting from the failure to integrate the individual and corporate tax systems. The committee concluded that a Treasury Department study of "debt vs. equity" and integration issues would be helpful to the Congress in its continuing evaluation of the Federal income tax system.

Explanation of provision

The Treasury Department is required to study whether the present law distinctions between debt and equity are meaningful and whether there are cases in which it would be appropriate to recharacterize currently deductible interest expense, in whole or in part, as nondeductible dividends or vice versa.

The Treasury Department also is required to study the policy and revenue implications of proposals that would integrate the corporate and individual income tax systems, including a deduction for dividends paid by a corporation and a shareholder credit or exclusion for such dividends.

In addition, the Treasury Department is directed to consider the policy and revenue implication of the current tax treatment of corporate distributions with respect to debt and equity owned by tax-exempt entities and foreign persons.

The Treasury Department is required to report its findings and recommendations to the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance no later than one year following the date of enactment. In the course of making the study, the committee encourages the Treasury Department to consult with the Federal Reserve Board and other Federal agencies, as appropriate.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

11. REQUIRE CORPORATE ESTIMATED TAX PAYMENTS ON TAX LIABILITIES FOR CERTAIN S CORPORATION INCOME (SEC. 6209 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 6655 OF THE CODE)

Present law

In general, an S corporation is not subject to tax on its taxable income. Rather, taxable income of an S corporation flows through to its shareholders in a manner similar to a partnership. However, there are limited instances when an S corporation is subject to tax. These instances include: (1) the recognition of a built-in gain within 10 years of the date that a former C corporation elected S corporation status (sec. 1374(a)); (2) the receipt of passive investment income in excess of 25 percent of total annual gross receipts if the corporation has earnings and profits from a year in which it was not an S corporation (sec. 1375(a)); and (3) the recapture of investment tax credits claimed during a taxable year in which the corporation was not an S corporation (sec. 1371(d)).

Although situations exist for which an S corporation is liable for income tax, present law does not require the corporation to make estimated tax payments. Instead, the tax must be paid no later than the unextended due date of the S corporation tax return.

Reasons for change

The items for which S corporations are subject to income tax are generally items for which C corporations are subject to income tax. Thus, S corporations should be generally subject to the estimated tax payments for those items in the same manner as C corporations.

The bill provides that an S corporation is required to make estimated tax payments if it has tax attributable to: (1) the recognition of built-in gains under section 1374(a);[1] (2) the receipt of excess passive investment income under section 1375(a); or (3) the recapture of investment tax credits pursuant to section 1371(d).[2] The rules contained in section 6655 for estimated tax payments by corporations will generally apply.

For purposes of the portion of required estimated tax payments attributable to built-in gains and investment tax credit recapture, an S corporation will not be able to utilize the exceptions which allow estimated tax payments to be based on the corporation's prior year tax (secs. 6655(d)(1)(B)(ii) and 6655(d)(2)(B)). The prior year's tax exception will be available to all S corporations (including "large" S corporations) with respect to the portion of required estimated tax payments attributable to excess passive income (even if there was no tax attributable to excess passive income in the prior year). In all situations, exception (sec. 6655(e)).

The provision is effective for estimated tax payments due for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

12. LIMITATION ON CARRYBACKS OF CERTAIN NET OPERATING LOSSES OF C CORPORATIONS (SEC. 6210 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 172 OF THE CODE)

Present law

A corporation that incurs net operating losses (NOLs) generally can carry the NOLs back 3 taxable years and forward 15 taxable years (sec. 172). Carrying the NOLs back against prior taxable income allows a corporation to recognize currently the benefit of those losses by obtaining a refund of Federal income taxes paid in prior years.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the ability of corporations to carry back NOLs that are created by certain debt-financed transactions is contrary to the purpose of the NOL carryback rule. Specifically, the purpose of the rule is to allow corporations to smooth out the swings in taxable income that result from business cycle fluctuations and unexpected financial reverses. The committee believes that when a corporation is involved in certain debt-financed transactions, the underlying nature of the corporation is substantially altered. In addition, the committee believes that the interest expense associated with such transactions does not have a sufficient nexus with prior period operations to justify a carryback of NOLs attributable to such expense. Therefore, the committee believes that it is inappropriate to permit a corporation to carry back an NOL generated by such a transaction to a year prior to the year in which such transaction occurred.

Explanation of provision

In General

The ability of C corporations to obtain refunds of taxes paid in prior years by carrying back NOLs is limited in cases where the losses are created by interest deductions allocable to certain corporate equity-reducing transactions.

Corporate Equity Reduction Transaction

A corporate equity reduction transaction ("CERT") means either a major stock acquisition or an excess distribution. A major stock acquisition is an acquisition by a corporation (or any group of persons acting in concert with such corporation) of at least 50 percent of the vote or value of the stock of another corporation. All acquisitions made during any 24-month period are aggregated for these purposes. A major stock acquisition does not include an acquisition where the acquiring corporation has made a section 338 election, or, except to the extent provided in regulations, an acquisition of stock of another corporation which, immediately before the acquisition, was a member of an affiliated group (within the meaning of section 1504(a)), other than the common parent of such group.

An excess distribution is the excess of the aggregate distributions and redemptions made by a corporation during the taxable year with respect to its stock (other than stock described in section 1504(a)(4)), over 150 percent of the average of such distributions and redemptions for the preceding 3 taxable years. The amount of distributions and redemptions made by a corporation during a taxable year are reduced by consideration (other than stock) received in exchange for stock (other than stock described in section 1504(a)(4)) issued by the corporation during such year. Notwithstanding the above, a distribution or redemption (or series thereof) is not treated as an excess distribution if it does not exceed 10 percent of the value of the corporation's outstanding stock (other than stock described in section 1504(a)(4)) measured at the beginning of the corporation's taxable year.

Limitation of Net Operating Loss Carryback

If a C corporation has an NOL in the taxable year in which it is involved in a CERT or in the following 2 taxable years, the corporation may be limited in its ability to carry back some portion of the loss. A C corporation is treated as being involved in a CERT if it is either the acquired or acquiring corporation, or successor thereto (in the case of a major stock acquisition) or the distributing or redeeming corporation, or successor thereto (in the case of an excess distribution). Any portion of an NOL that cannot be carried back due to the operation

[1] The provision also applies to tax that is attributable to certain capital gains of S corporations pursuant to sec. 1374 as effective before the changes made by the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

[2] No inference is intended as to the proper estimated tax treatment for any item for any prior year or for any item for any taxpayer other than an S corporation.

of this provision may be carried forward to the corporation's future taxable years, as otherwise provided under present law.

The portion of the corporation's NOL carryback that is limited is the lesser of (1) the corporation's interest expense that is allocable to the CERT, or (2) the excess of the corporation's interest expense in the loss limitation year over the average of the corporation's interest expense for the 3 taxable years prior to the taxable year in which the CERT occurred. If the lesser of these two amounts is less than $1 million, the provision does not apply.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to specify the method of allocating a corporation's interest expense to a CERT. Until regulations are promulgated, however, a corporation's indebtedness is allocable to a CERT to the extent that the corporation's indebtedness could have been reduced if the CERT had not occurred, in the manner prescribed under section 263A(f)(2)(A)(ii) (without regard to clause (i) thereof). The interest expense associated with such allocable indebtedness is equal to a pro rata portion of the corporation's total interest expense.

For purposes of determining whether a corporation's interest expense exceeds the prior 3-year average, it is expected that regulations would provide that increases attributable solely to fluctuations in interest rates would not be taken into account.

If a corporation has an NOL in any of the 2 taxable years succeeding the taxable year in which the CERT occurred, a portion of the corporation's NOL carryback may still be limited under the provision. Specifically, the limitation for each of the 2 years is the lesser of (1) the corporation's interest expense for the current year that is allocable to the CERT that occurred in the prior year, or (2) the excess of the corporation's interest expense for the current year over the average of the corporation's interest expense for the 3 taxable years prior to the taxable year in which the CERT occurred. The provision does not apply, however, if the amount determined above is less than $1 million.

A special rule provides that if an unforeseeable, extraordinary and adverse event occurs during a loss limitation year but after the CERT, the corporation's indebtedness first is allocated to unreimbursed costs paid or incurred in connection with the event, in the same manner as indebtedness is allocated to a CERT under the bill. Any remaining indebtedness is then allocable to the CERT. In addition, interest expense on indebtedness allocated to such an event is not taken into account for purposes of determining whether the corporation's interest expense in the loss limitation year exceeds the average for the 3-year period prior to the CERT.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe regulations that would exempt transactions from application of the provision where corporate equity has not been replaced by debt. In addition, the Secretary is authorized to prescribe regulations for applying the provision where more than 1 corporation is involved in a CERT.

Examples

The operation of the provision may be illustrated by the following examples.

(1) Profitable corporation P, a calendar year C corporation, is capitalized with $150 million of debt and $50 million of equity. P's annual interest expense has been $15 million for the past 3 years. P has paid a 1% annual dividend to its shareholders, or an average of $.5 million, for each of the past 3 years. On January 1, 1990, P borrows $50 million and distributes the proceeds to its shareholders. Due to increased interest deductions of $5 million, P incurs an NOL in 1990 of $4 million.

P was involved in a CERT in 1990 because P made an excess distribution to its shareholders (i.e., the $50 million distribution exceeds 150% of the average $.5 million dividend). The portion of P's $5 million NOL that is limited under the provision is the lesser of (1) P's interest expense that is allocable to the CERT ($5 million), or (2) the excess of P's interest expense in 1990 ($20 million) over P's average interest expense for the past 3 years ($15 million), or $5 million. Thus, P would not be able to carry back the $4 million NOL to any taxable year prior to 1990. In addition, if P has NOLs in 1991 and 1992 due to interest deductions allocable to the 1990 CERT, a similar computation would be made in each of those years and P may be limited in its ability to carry back the losses to pre-1990 taxable years. If P has income in subsequent years, however, P would be able to use the NOLs to offset that income.

(2) Same facts as in Example (1), except that P does not incur any additional borrowing in 1990. Rather, P distributes $50 million from its own reserves to its shareholders. P's annual interest expense remains at $15 million following the distribution. Since the distributed funds no longer generate corporate earnings, however, P incurs an NOL in 1990 of $3 million.

P was still involved in a CERT in 1990 because P made an excess distribution to its shareholders. The portion of P's $3 million NOL that is limited under the provision is the lesser of (1) P's interest expense that is allocable to the CERT ($5 million), or (2) the excess of P's interest expense in 1990 ($15 million) over P's average interest expense for the past 3 years ($15 million), or zero. Thus, P's NOL carryback is not limited under the provision, and P would be able to carry back the $3 million loss to its pre-1990 taxable years, subject to any other restrictions of present law.

In addition, if P's interest expense in the loss limitation year had exceeded the prior 3-year average solely due to an increase in interest rates, it is expected that regulations would exempt P from the provision.

Effective date

The provision applies to CERTs occurring after August 2, 1989, in taxable years ending after that date.

In determining whether a CERT has occurred after August 2, 1989, the following is not taken into account: (1) acquisitions or redemptions of stock, or distributions with respect to stock, occurring on or before August 2, 1989; (2) acquisitions or redemptions of stock after August 2, 1989, pursuant to a written binding contract (or tender offer filed with the SEC) in effect on August 2, 1989 and at all times thereafter before such acquisition or redemption; or (3) any distribution with respect to stock after August 2, 1989 which was declared on or before August 2, 1989.

If any of the 3 taxable years that comprise the average against which interest expense in a loss limitation year is compared, ends on or before August 2, 1989, a corporation may use the interest paid or accrued (determined on an annualized basis) during the taxable year that includes August 3, 1989 on indebtedness outstanding on August 2, 1989, rather than the 3-year average.

13. SMALL BUSINESS EXEMPTION FROM RECOGNITION OF GAIN OR LOSS ON LIQUIDATING SALES OR DISTRIBUTIONS (EXEMPTION FROM REPEAL OF THE GENERAL UTILITIES doctrine) (sec. 6211 of the bill and sec. 336 of the Code)

Gain or loss is generally recognized by a corporation on a liquidating sale or distribution (including a deemed sale occurring when stock of a corporation is acquired and an election is made to treat the transaction as an asset sale). This rule was added to the Code by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Prior to the 1986 Act, gain was generally recognized for nonliquidating sales or distributions but not for liquidating sales (including sales involving the acquisition of the corporation). In addition, certain nonliquidating distributions to long-term individual shareholders were not taxed prior to the 1986 Act. The 1986 Act generally conformed the tax treatment for liquidating sales and distributions to the treatment accorded in nonliquidating sales or distributions by requiring the corporation to recognize gain in all cases.

The 1986 Act provided transition relief for certain small corporations. Corporations eligible for this relief were granted two additional years, until December 31, 1988, in which they could distribute assets, liquidate, or convert to subchapter S status without recognizing a corporate level gain except for gain on ordinary income assets or capital assets held less than six months, or gain from certain conduit transactions with ineligible corporations.

Eligible corporations were those in existence on August 1, 1986, and whose value on the later of that date or the date of adoption of a plan of liquidation did not exceed $10 million, provided that on August 1, 1986 and at all times thereafter, more than 50 percent (by value) of the stock of such corporation was owned by a qualified group. A qualified group consisted of 10 or fewer individuals who at all times during the five year period ending on the date of adoption of the plan of liquidation (or during the life of the corporation, if shorter) owned more than 50 percent of the value of the corporate stock. Corporations whose value exceeded $5 million were eligible only for partial relief and the relief was phased out entirely for corporations whose value exceeded $10 million.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the relief from corporate level taxation for small corporations that expired at the end of 1988 should be reinstated.

Explanation of provisions

The bill generally makes permanent the 1986 Act relief from recognition of corporate level gain by small corporations. Relief under the bill applies to any small corporation (whether or not in existence on August 1, 1986) and applies if at least 50 percent (by value) of the stock of the corporation is held by 10 or fewer qualified shareholders each of whom has held his or her stock for at least 5 years (or is treated as having held such stock for such period under attribution rules). As under the 1986 Act transition rule, ordinary income property and short term capital gain property are not eligible for relief. Conforming changes are made to the definition of short term capital gain property to reflect changes in the definition that have occurred since 1986.

As under the 1986 Act transition rules, relief is provided to small corporations for certain nonliquidating distributions and conversions to subchapter S status. Similarly, relief is provided where a section 338 election is made by the acquiror of a small corporation.

As under the 1986 Act transition rules, the bill also provides relief from shareholder level tax pursuant to section 333 of the Code.

The bill provides relief only for corporations whose value does not exceed $10 million; however only partial relief is provided for corporations whose value exceeds $5 million. In determining the value of the corporation, the bill requires that the amount of redemptions, distributions, or corporate contractions occurring in the prior five years, other than reasonable regular dividends or other expenses paid in the ordinary course of business, be included in such value.

The provision is effective for transactions occurring after December 31, 1988.

14. TREATMENT OF SAFE HARBOR LEASES OF MEMBERSHIP ORGANIZATIONS (SEC. 6212 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 277 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Deductions of Membership Organizations

In the case of a membership organization which is operated primarily to furnish services or goods to its members, deductions arising from providing such services or goods to its members are allowed only to the extent of income derived from providing such services or goods to its members (sec. 277). In essence, the rule prohibits losses incurred from transactions with members to offset income derived from transactions with nonmembers.

Safe Harbor Leases

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (P.L. 97-34) provided a set of rules that were intended to be a means of transferring tax benefits that are structured in the form of a lease. Under these rules (known as the "safe harbor lease rules"), certain transactions involving tangible personal property were treated as lease for Federal income tax purposes regardless of their nontax economic substance. If the transaction met the safe harbor requirements, the lessor in the agreement was treated as the property owner for Federal income tax purposes and was entitled to cost recovery deductions and investment credits. Under these rules, by entering into a nominal sale and safe-harbor leaseback, a person who acquired and used the property could have, in effect, sold some of the tax benefits associated with the property to a corporation, while retaining all other economic benefits and burdens of ownership. The safe harbor lease rules were repealed by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (P.L. 97-248).

Reasons for change

It has come to the attention of the committee that a number of electricity generating cooperatives which are subject to section 277 have entered into safe harbor lease transactions under which these cooperatives, in effect, sold tax benefits. In such transactions, the cooperative, in form, first sells the property to a corporation in exchange for an interest bearing note and cash equal to all or a portion of the value of the tax benefits from the property and then leases the property back from that corporation for a rental that equals to payments on the note.

Under the form of the transaction, the cooperative has interest income and rental expense from the transaction. The Internal Revenue Service has taken the position that the interest income is income not derived from transactions with members while the rental expense must be allocated between income derived from members and nonmembers. As a result, a cooperative that does most of its business with members is treated as receiving amounts of interest income which can be offset only by the relatively small amount of rental expense allocable to nonmember business, resulting in significant additional tax liability to the cooperative.

The committee believes that the substance of a safe harbor lease transaction, and not its form, should govern the tax treatment. Consequently, the committee believes that safe harbor lease transactions should not result in higher levels of taxation than would occur if the benefit of the safe harbor lease was made in the form of a grant from the Federal Government. The committee believes, however, that the safe harbor lease should not result in avoidance of taxation by the cooperative of its income from nonmembers. Accordingly, the committee believes that the interest income and the rental expense arising from safe-harbor leases should be allocated between members and nonmember income.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the interest income and rental expense from the sale and leaseback of the property under a safe harbor lease are to be first netted and the difference allocated between members and nonmembers in proportion to the business done with each group.

Effective date

The provision is effective for all open taxable years.

Subtitle C. Employee Benefit Provisions

1. REPEAL OF SECTION 89 NONDISCRIMINATION RULES (SECS. 6301 AND 6302 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 89 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, nondiscrimination rules apply to employer-provided health benefits and group-term life insurance plans (sec. 89). In addition, section 89 requires that certain types of employee benefit plans meet minimum qualification requirements (e.g., that the plan be in writing and that plan participants be notified of plan provisions). Prior to the enactment of section 89 in the Tax Reform Act of 1986, prior law applied other nondiscrimination rules to group-term life insurance plans, cafeteria plans, and self-insured health plans.

Under present law, if the employer has separate lines of business or maintains separate operating units, each separate line of business or operating unit may be tested separately under the nondiscrimination rules relating to qualified plans by taking into account only those employees in that line of business or operating unit.

Reasons for change

While most employee compensation is taxable income to the employee, employer-provided health coverage generally is excludable from the gross income of the employee receiving the coverage. The annual cost to the Federal Government of this tax-favored treatment is estimated to be $32.6 billion for fiscal year 1990. This cost is projected to increase to $50.8 billion for fiscal year 1994.[1]

In enacting the Tax Reform Act of 1986, the Congress determined that the substantial revenue cost related to employer-provided health insurance coverage is justified only if the tax benefits fulfill important public policy objectives. Increasing health coverage among rank-and-file employees who otherwise would not purchase or could not afford such coverage was identified as a primary policy objective underlying the exclusion for employer-provided health care coverage. Conversely, the Congress believed that the cost to the Federal Government of tax-favored employer-provided accident and health coverage is not justified if such coverage disproportionately benefits highly compensated employees. In order to achieve this objective, nondiscrimination rules were enacted to permit the full exclusion from income of employer-provided health benefits only if the benefits are provided to required numbers of nonhighly compensated employees and the level of benefits provided to highly compensated employees on average does not disproportionately exceed the average benefits provided to rank-and-file employees.

The committee believes that nondiscrimination in the provision of employer-provided health coverage remains an important policy objective, and that the significant tax expenditures for employer-provided health coverage is justified only if such coverage does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees. However, the committee believes that the present-law nondiscrimination rules, or similar rules, are not at this time an appropriate way of achieving this objective. The present-law rules are overly complex and unduly burdensome on employers and therefore the committee believes it is appropriate to repeal the present-law section 89 rules.

In general

The provision repeals present-law section 89, and generally reinstates the rules applicable before its enactment. Generally, prior law contained nondiscrimination rules relating to employer-provided self-insured medical reimbursement plans (sec. 105(h)), cafeteria plans (sec. 125), and group-term life insurance plans (sec. 79(d)). These prior law rules are reinstated under the provision. The committee recognizes that the nature of these benefits may differ from the nature of retirement benefits. Therefore, it is expected that the Secretary will, where appropriate, interpret the rules relating to these benefits in a different manner than those rules that apply in the area of qualified retirement plans, even where the statutory requirements with respect to such benefits are similar.

Separate lines of business or operating units

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 directed the Secretary to issue guidance on certain pension requirements, including the requirements relating to separate lines of business (sec. 414(r)). Under present law, until the Secretary issues guidance on which taxpayers may rely with respect to such rules, an employer's compliance with its reasonable interpretation of the requirement, based on the statute and its legislative history, if made in good faith, constitutes compliance with the requirement.

Under the provision, in the case of any plan year of a qualified retirement plan that begins on or before the date the Secretary or his delegate issues guidelines and begins issuing determinations under section

[1] See, Joint Committee on Taxation, Estimates of Federal Tax Expenditures for Fiscal Years 1990-1994, JCS-4-89 (February 28, 1989).

414(r)(2)(C), an employer shall be treated as operating separate lines of business if the employer reasonably determines that it meets the requirements of section 414(r) (other than paragraph (2)(C) thereof). The committee intends that the Secretary will, upon the issuance of guidance relating to separate lines of business, grant a reasonable period of time for employer to comply with the guidance.

As under present law, it is generally intended that a line of business or operating unit include all employees necessary for the preparation of property for sale to customers. Whether lines of business or operating units are separate is a facts and circumstances determination requiring examination of each particluar situation. Differences and similarities between the services provided and products produced by claimed lines of business or operating units are among the factors to be considered.

It is intended that separate lines of business may be established under the reasonable good faith standard under certain circumstances, for example, in the case of operations that are vertically integrated and that traditionally are operated by unrelated entities. For example, a vertically integrated oil company may be able to treat its retail marketing operations as a line of business separate from its production and refining operations because the marketing of petroleum products is traditionally conducted by independent individual operators rather than by integrated companies.

Similarly, horizontally integrated businesses may be treated as maintaining separate lines of business where the employer produces or markets different products (e.g., different types of agricultural crops) through separate business units. Of course, in all cases, all requirements of the separate line of business rules must be satisfied (e.g., sec. 414(r)(2)).

Effective date

The provision is effective as if included in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

2. MODIFICATION OF RULES RELATING TO EMPLOYEE LEASING AND DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS (SEC. 6303 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 414 AND 219 OF THE CODE)

Present law

For purposes of specified pension requirements, a leased employee is treated as the employee of the person for whom the leased employee performs services (the "recipient"). A leased employee is generally defined as any person who is not an employee of the recipient if (1) such services are provided to the recipient under an agreement between the recipient and the organization providing the person's services (the "leasing organization"), (2) the person performs such services for the recipient (or for the recipient and related persons) on a substantially full-time basis for at least 1 year, and (3) such services are of a type historically performed, in the business field of the recipient, by employees.

In addition, under present law, an employee may exclude certain benefits received under an employer-provided dependent care assistance program if certain requirements are satisfied (sec. 129).

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned that the statute and proposed Treasury regulations relating to leased employees are overly broad. The committee believes that under present law, these rules treat as leased employees certain individuals who were not intended to be so treated.

The committee is also concerned with the rules relating to dependent care assistance programs. The committee believes that the present-law rules with respect to such programs are overly harsh in that all employees are subject to taxation if an employer discriminates in favor of the highly paid. It is the intention of the committee that only those highly paid who receive discriminatory benefits should be required to include dependent care assistance in taxable income.

Under the provision, the present-law historically performed test is repealed and replaced with a new rule defining who must be considered a leased employee. This change is made because the proposed regulations under the leased employee rules (sec. 414(n)) are overly broad in defining who may be a leased employee. Under the provision, the proposed regulations are no longer valid.

Under the provision, an individual is not considered a leased employee unless the individual is under the control of the recipient organization. The determination of whether an individual is controlled by the employer is based on all the facts and circumstances. Among the factors that are relevant in this determination are whether the recipient organization: (1) prescribes the individual's work methods; (2) supervises the individual; (3) sets the individual's working hours; and (4) sets the individual's level of compensation. Other factors that may be considered include those that are relevant for determining whether the employer is responsible for employment taxes on the compensation paid to the individual. The Secretary may designate other relevant factors. It is not necessary that all these factors indicate that the individual is under the control of the employer in order to find that such individual is a leased employee. Nor is it necessary that the recipient organization be responsible for employment taxes in order to find that the individual is a leased employee because, if the recipient organization is liable for employment taxes, the individual is an employee of the organization who generally must be taken into account. The provision does not alter the definition of a common-law employee, nor the rules that such employees are to be taken into account unless specifically excluded.

The provision clarifies present law in that support staff of professional service organizations continue to be treated as leased employees (to the extent they are not already considered employees because they are common-law employees). A professional service organization is an organization providing professional services in the field of health, law, engineering, architecture, accounting, actuarial services, financial services, consulting, or in such other fields as the Secretary may prescribe. This clarification with respect to the support staff of professional service organizations is not intended to create an inference with respect to the support staff of organizations other than professional service organizations.

Under the provision, persons who perform services incidental to the sale of goods or equipment or incidental to the construction of a facility are generally not leased employees. This rule does not extend to the operation (including supervision over such operation) of the goods, equipment, or completed facility.

In those specific situations where the Internal Revenue Service has ruled that service relationships do not involve "leased employees" under the test of present law requiring the services to be of a type historically performed, in the business field of the recipient, by employees, the recipients of those rulings may continue to rely on them as not involving support staff of professionals or the performance of services under the control of the recipient.

In addition, under the provision, the nondiscrimination rules under section 129(d) as that section was amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1986 continue to apply to dependent care assistance programs but are modified in the following respects. First, if a plan fails to meet the requirements of section 129(d), only highly compensated employees must include benefits under the program in gross income. Second, if a dependent care assistance program fails the 55-percent benefits test, then highly compensated employees must include in gross income only that amount of benefit in excess of that level of benefit that would meet the benefits test. Finally, under the provision, the 55-percent benefits test can be applied on a separate line of business basis (sec. 414(r)).

Effective date

Under the provision, the revised definition of leased employee is effective for years beginning after December 31, 1983.

With respect to dependent care assistance programs, the provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 1988.

3. PROVISIONS RELATING TO EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS (ESOPS) (SEC. 6311 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 133 AND NEW SEC. 4978B OF THE CODE)

Present law

ESOPs in General

An employee stock ownership plan (ESOP) is a qualified stock bonus plan or a combination of a stock bonus plan and money purchase pension plan that meets certain requirements and under which employer securities are held for the benefit of employees. Present law generally prohibits loans between a qualified plan and a disqualified person (sec. 4975). An exception to this rule is provided in the case of an ESOP.

If employer securities are acquired by an ESOP with loan proceeds, the ESOP is referred to as a leveraged ESOP. The ESOP may borrow directly from a financial institution (typically with a guarantee from the employer), or the employer may borrow from a financial institution and in turn lend the funds to the ESOP which then uses them to acquire employer securities. The employer securities are typically pledged as security for the loan. The employer makes contributions to the ESOP which are then used to repay the acquisition loan. Shares that are acquired with an acquisition loan are allocated to the accounts of ESOP participants as the loan is repaid.

In general, the type of employer securities that may be held by an ESOP are (1) common stock of the employer that is readily tradable on an established securities market, or (2) if there is no such common stock, common stock issued by the employer having a combination of voting power and dividend rights at least equal to that class of common having the greatest voting power and that class of common having the greatest dividend power. Noncallable preferred stock is treated as employer securities if such stock is convertible into stock that meets the requirements of (1) or (2), whichever is applicable.

ESOPs are required to pass through to plan participants certain voting rights with respect to employer securities. If the employer has a registration-type class of securities, the ESOP is required to permit each participant to direct the plan as to the manner in which employer securites allocated to the account of the participant are entitled to vote. If the employer does not have a registration-type class of securities, the plan is required to permit each participant to direct the plan as to the manner in which voting rights are to be exercised only with respect to certain enumerated corporate issues, such as the approval or disapproval of any corporate merger or consolidation, recapitalization, reclassification, and similar transactions as prescribed by the Secretary.

Partial Interest Exclusion for ESOP Loans

A bank, an insurance company, a corporation actively engaged in the business of lending money, or a regulated investment company may exclude from gross income 50 percent of the interest received with respect to a "securities acquisition loan" used to acquire employer securities for an ESOP (sec. 133). A "Securities acquisition loan" is generally defined as (1) a loan to a corporation or to an ESOP to the extent that the proceeds are used to acquire employer securities for the ESOP, or (2) a loan to a corporation to the extent that the corporation transfers an equivalent amount of employer securites to the ESOP and such securities are allocable to accounts of ESOP participants within 1 year of the date of the loan (an "immediate allocation loan").

Reasons for change

The present-law tax incentive for ESOPs were designed to encouarge employers to establish ESOPs and to encourage individuals to sell employer securities to ESOPs. The committee is concerned that, in some cases, the significant tax benefits accorded ESOP transactions are not being passed through to plan participants. The committee is also concerned that the use of the tax benefits has extended beyond the intended purpose of the benefits, and that the revenue loss associated with the tax benefits has increased beyond the originally anticipated loss, without a corresponding benefit to employees. For example, the committee is aware that some companies would simply restructured existing employee benefit programs to take advantage of the ESOP tax benefits, with little or no change in benefits to employees despite the significant tax savings realized by the employer.

At this time, the committee has been particularly concerned about the use of the partial interest exclusion. The committee believes that this tax benefit should be limited to cases in which the ESOP owns a significant portion of the employer. A requirement that the ESOP own a significant portion of the employer will help to ensure that the revenue loss associated with the provision is accompanied by a significant benefit to employees.

The committee also believes that ESOP participants should be accorded treatment similar to that of other stock owners. In particular, the committee believes that where special tax benefits are involved, ESOP participants should have full voting rights.

The provision limits the circumstances in which the partial interest exclusion applies. In general under the provision the partial interest exclusion does not apply to a securities acquisition loan unless (1) immediately after the acquisition of the securities acquired with the loan the ESOP owns at least 30 percent of each class of outstanding stock of the corporation issuing the employer securities or 30 percent of the total value of all outstanding stock of the corporation, (2) the term of the loan does not exceed 15 years, and (3) each participant is entitled to direct the plan as to the manner in which shares allocated to the participant's account that were acquired with a section 133 loan are to be voted. These requirements apply to transfers of stock with respect to an immediate allocation loan as well as other types of securities acquisition loans. The requirement that the term of the loan does not override other requirements relating to ESOPs such as the rules under section 4975.

The 30-percent requirement is designed to ensure that the ESOP holds a substantial percentage of the company's stock. After the sale of the stock to the ESOP, the ESOP must generally hold the employer securities for at least 3 years. An excise tax is imposed on the employer sponsoring the ESOP if, within 3 years after the acquisition of the employer securities with a loan to which section 133 applies, the ESOP disposes of employer securities and the total number of employer securities held by the ESOP is less than the total number held after the acquisition or the value of the employer securities held by the plan after the disposition is less than 30 percent of the value of the outstanding securities. The excise tax does not apply to certain distributions, such as distributions to plan participants and distributions with respect to certain corporate reorganizations.

An excise tax is also imposed if the ESOP disposes of the employer securities before the securities are allocated to accounts of participants and the proceeds from such disposition are not so allocated.

The amount of each excise tax is 10 percent of the amount realized on the disposition. The excise tax rules are similar to those that apply in situations where there has been a sale of stock to an ESOP that entitles the seller to defer recognition of gain on the sale (sec. 1042) or an estate tax deduction (sec. 2057).

The voting requirements of the provision apply to all shares acquired with the loan to which the partial interest exclusion applies. This requirement applies to all issues and applies regardless of whether the employer has a registration-type class of securities. In addition, if the shares are convertible preferred stock, the participants must be entitled to direct the voting of such stock as if the preferred stock had the voting rights of the common stock of the employer having the greatest voting power.

The provision would generally be effective with respect to loans made after June 6, 1989, including (except as provided below) loans made after June 6, 1989, to refinance loans made on or before June 6, 1989. The provision would not apply to any loan (1) pursuant to a binding written commitment to make a securities acquisition loan in effect on June 6, 1989, and at all times thereafter before the loan is made, (2) the proceeds of which are used to acquire employer securities pursuant to a written binding contract (or tender offer registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission) in effect on June 6, 1989, and at all times thereafter before such securities are acquired, (3) to the extent made to finance the acquisition of employer securities by an ESOP pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and one or more employers which was agreed to on or before June 6, 1989, and ratified before such date or within a reasonable period thereafter and which agreement sets forth the material terms of the acquisition (which requirement may be met if the agreement sets forth the material terms of the ESOP), or (4) with respect to which a filing was made with an agency of the United States on or before June 6, 1989, which specified the aggregate principal amount of the loan or debt obligations, and (a) such filing specifies that the loan is intended to be a securities acquisition loan (as defined in sec. 133) and is for registration required to permit the offering of such loan, or (b) such filing is for approval required in order for the ESOP to acquire more than a certain percentage of the stock of the employer. The grandfather in item (4) relates only to governmental filings required in order for the ESOP debt to be issued or the employer securities to be acquired by the ESOP and, thus, for example, does not apply to requests for a determination letter from the Internal Revenue Service that the ESOP is a qualified plan.

In addition, the provision would not apply to loans made after June 6, 1989, to refinance loans made on or before such date (or to refinance loans described in the preceding paragraph), if (1) such refinanced loan meets the requirements of section 133 (as in effect before the amendments made by the provision (2) the outstanding principal amount of the loan is not increased, and (3) the term of such loan does not extend beyond the later of (a) the last day of the term of the original securities acquisition loan, or (b) the last day of the 7-year period beginning on the date the original securities acquisition loan was made.

The refinancing rules described above also apply in the case of a securities acquisition loan that consists of a loan to the employer with a corresponding loan to the ESOP (a "back-to-back" or "mirror" loan) (see sec. 133(b)(3)), if the loan is restructured so that the loan is directly from the financial institution to the ESOP with a guarantee from the employer rather than a loan from the employer.

The committee understands that ESOP loan transactions are not identical, and that the course of events leading up to the conclusion of a transaction differs from case to case. Thus, with respect to the grandfather rule for loans made pursuant to a written binding commitment, the committee recognizes that whether there is a written binding loan commitment depends on all the facts and circumstances and that the existence of such a commitment can be demonstrated in a variety of ways.

It is not necessary that the final loan documents be executed by the parties in order to demonstrate the existence of a written binding loan commitment. The existence of such a commitment can be demonstrated, for example, by any combination of documents which include some or all of documentation of the lender, written communications by the borrower or the borrower's agent (e.g., an investment banker or a broker), and documentation of the borrower showing that the loan was approved by the lender and that the offer to make the loan was received by the borrower. No one particular document is necessary to qualify for the grandfather.

The documentation would have to include the principal terms of the loan, such as the principal amount, interest rate or spread or formula pursuant to which the interest rate will be set, and maturity of the loan. It is intended that the grandfather will not fail to be met if the loan commitment is for a specified amount and the borrower borrows less than the full amount. In addition, the grandfather will not fail to be met merely because the interest rate is to be set in accordance with rates prevailing at the time the loan is made, or because the only modification in the loan terms is a reduction in the interest rate that occurs before the loan is made. The grandfather will also not fail to be met merely because a loan commitment that met the conditions of the grandfather had an expiration date and the commitment was extended before the expiration date without change in the material terms of the commitment.

The written binding commitment grandfather applies to all types of securities acquisition loans. Thus, for example, immediate allocation loans, as well as other types of securities acquisition loans, would be grandfathered under the provision if a binding written commitment to make a securities acquisition loan existed on June 6, 1989, and at all times thereafter before the loan is made.

4. TRANSFER OF EXCESS PENSION PLAN ASSETS TO PAY CURRENT RETIREE HEALTH BENEFITS (SECS. 6321-6330 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 420 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, pension plan assets may not revert to an employer prior to the termination of the plan and the satisfaction of all plan liabilities. Any assets that revert to the employer upon such termination are included in the gross income of the employer and are subject to a 15-percent excise tax (sec. 4980).[1]

Subject to certain limitations, an employer may under present law make deductible contributions to a defined benefit pension plan up to the full funding limitation. The full funding limitation is generally defined as the excess, if any, of (1) the lesser of (a) the accrued liability under the plan or (b) 150 percent of the plan's current liability, over (2) the lesser of (a) the fair market value of the plan's assets, or (b) the acturial value of the plan's assets. Special deduction rules apply in the case of contributions to plans established before January 1, 1954, as a result of an agreement between employee representatives and the Government of the United States during a period of Government operation of a major part of the productive facilities of the industry in which such employer is engaged (sec. 404(c)).

Under present law, a pension plan may provide medical benefits to retirees through a section 401(h) account. These medical benefits, when added to any life insurance protection provided under the plan, are required to be incidental or subordinate to the retirement benefits provided under the plan. Under Treasury regulations, the medical benefits are considered incidental or subordinate to the retirement benefits if, at all times, the aggregate of employer contributions (made after the date on which the plan first includes such medical benefits) to provide such medical benefits and any life insurance protection does not exceed 25 percent of the aggregate contributions made after such date, other than contributions to fund past service credits.

The assets of a pension plan may not be transferred to a section 401(h) account without disqualifying the pension plan and subjecting the amounts transferred to income tax and the excise tax.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to provide a temporary rule allowing employers to transfer assets set aside for pension benefits to a section 401(h) account for retiree health benefits as long as the security of employees' pension benefits is not thereby threatened.

Explanation of provision

Permitted Transfer of Certain Excess Assets

Under the provision, a transfer of certain assets is permitted from the pension assets in a defined benefit pension plan to the section 401(h) account that is a part of such plan. The assets transferred are not includible in the gross income of the employer and are not subject to the excise tax on reversions. The defined benefit pension plan does not fail to satisfy the qualification requirements (sec. 401(a)) or violate the present-law requirement that medical benefits under a section 401(h) account be subordinate to the retirement benefits under the plan solely on account of the transfer or by reason of other actions permitted under the provision. Except as expressly provided by the provision, the provision does not override any present-law requirement under section 401(h).

The transfer of assets to a section 401(h) account may be made only once in any taxable year of the employer. Transfers may be made in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989, and before December 31, 1994.

Under the provision, accrued retirement benefits under the plan are required to be nonforfeitable (i.e., vested) as if the plan had terminated immediately before the transfer. Participants whose benefits are to vest under this provision include all those who separate from service prior to the transfer but in the year in which the transfer occurs. The benefits of such participants are to vest as if the plan had terminated immediately prior to the separation.

The amount of excess pension assets that may be transferred and used for retiree health benefits is limited to the amount reasonably estimated to be the amount the employer will pay for qualified current retiree health liabilities. "Excess pension assets" are those assets in excess of those necessary to meet the full funding limitation. That is, excess pension assets are those in excess of the lesser of (1) 150 percent of the plan's current liability, or (2) the accrued liability (including normal cost) under the plan (as determined under sec. 412(c)(7)).

The amount transferred under this provision is treated as a contribution except that no deduction is available with respect to the transfer. Under the provision, for purposes of determining the maximum deductible contribution to the defined benefit pension plan, the amounts transferred under this provision are considered in determining whether the plan is at the full funding limitation.

Qualified current retiree health liabilities are defined as the amount of retiree health benefits (including administrative expenses) expended by the employer or reasonably estimated to be paid by the employer during the employer's taxable year in which such transfer occurs and with respect to those employees who have retired on or before the date of the transfer. In determining the maximum amount that may be transferred, the employer is to consider earnings that will be attributable to such assets subsequent to the transfer. The maximum amount of qualified current retiree health liabilities is also reduced to the extent that the employer has previously made a contribution to a section 401(h) account or a welfare benefit fund (e.g., voluntary employees' beneficiary association (VEBA)) relating to the same liabilities. No deduction is allowed with respect to amounts expended by the employer and subsequently reimbursed from the section 401(h) account.

The retired employees who may be taken into account in calculating qualified current retiree health liabilities are limited to those who are eligible for retirement benefits under the defined benefit pension plan containing the separate account. Retiree health benefits of key employees (sec. 416(i)(1)) may not be considered for purposes of determining qualified current retiree health liabilities and may not be paid out of transferred assets.

In estimating current retiree health liabilities, an employer is required to assume that the medical benefits provided during the taxable year of the transfer will have the same cost as the average cost of medical benefits provided to covered retirees for the preceding taxable year. Therefore, for example, medical cost inflation, changes in the level of utilization, or changes in coverage provided or funded through the account cannot be taken into account unless such changes occur prior to the date of the transfer.

Transferred amounts are required to benefit all participants in the pension plan who are entitled upon retirement to receive retiree medical benefits (other than key employees) through the section 401(h) account.

A special rule applies with respect to an employer's taxable year beginning in 1989. Under this rule, an employer may transfer to a section 401(h) account the amount expended by the employer for qualified retiree health benefits during the employer's 1989 taxable year. The transfer may be made after the end of the 1989 taxable year and before the time for filing the employer's tax return for such year (including extensions). The employer may make a single transfer for both 1989 and 1990 qualified current retiree health benefits. Alternatively, an employer may make 2 transfers in the employer's 1990 taxable year, if one of the transfers is made to reimburse 1989 qualified current retiree health liabilities. Solely for purposes of this special rule, the maximum amount of assets that may be transferred for 1989 liabilities shall not be reduced by a contribution to any VEBA in 1989 to fund retiree health benefits for participants in the section 401(h) account. Of course, no deduction is allowed with respect to such contributions to the extent the employer is reimbursed under this provision.

If an employer transfers assets under the special rule for 1989, the benefits of participants who separate from service in 1989 are to vest as if the plan had terminated immediately prior to the separation from service.

An employer that makes a transfer to a section 401(h) account under the provision is to maintain the level of employer-provided retiree health expenditures for covered employees of the section 401(h) account at a minimum dollar level for the taxable year in which the transfer occurs and the following 4 taxable years. The minimum level is equal to the highest average employer cost per employee for retiree health benefits for the pension plan participants in the 2 years preceding the year of the transfer. The minimum dollar level is to be determined by looking at all employer-provided retiree health benefits of the retired participants (and their beneficiaries) of the plan funded through the section 401(h) account that receives the transfer. Thus, all retiree health benefits provided to such individuals are considered, not only those benefits provided through the section 401(h) account. The level of benefit required under this rule is not reduced solely because the employer transfers a lesser amount of assets than the maximum permitted under this provision.

The employer is to recalculate the minimum dollar level if there is a subsequent transfer of assets during the 5-year period for which the rule is in effect. In the event of such a subsequent transfer, the 5-year period is extended so that the rule applies for the taxable year of the subsequent transfer and for the following 4 taxable years. In addition, if at the time of the subsequent transfer, the minimum dollar level determined at that time would be higher than that level determined at the time of the preceding transfer, then the higher level of benefit shall apply for the duration of the new 5-year period.

The amounts transferred to the section 401(h) account are required to be paid out for, or to reimburse the previous payment of, qualified current retiree health liabilities. Amounts that are not expended from the account within the taxable year of the employer in which the transfer occurs are to be returned at the end of such year to the general assets of the plan.

The employer is not entitled to a deduction when amounts are transferred into the section 401(h) account or when such amounts (or income on such amounts) are used to pay retiree health benefits. No deduction or contribution is allowed the employer for the provision of retiree health benefits (whether directly, through a section 401(h) account, or a welfare benefit fund) except to the extent that the total of such payments for qualified current retiree health liabilities exceed the amount transferred to the section 401(h) account (including any income thereon).

Special Rule for Certain Negotiated Plans

The provision provides that certain surplus assets in specified retirement plans may be transferred to retiree health benefit plans. Assets so transferred are not includible in the income of the employer, nor are they subject to the excise tax on reversions. A plan qualifies as a transferor plan under the proposal if it is a plan described in section 404(c) or a continuation of such a plan and participation in the plan is substantially limited to individuals who retired before January 1, 1976. A plan qualifies as a transferee plan under the provision if it is a plan described in section 404(c) or a continuation of such a plan and it provides health benefits to retirees and beneficiaries of the industry that maintained the transferor plan.

In addition, the provision provides that any employer that had an obligation to contribute to a plan that qualifies as a transferee plan under the provision as of January 1, 1988, (including a contingent obligation to contribute) shall have a continuing obligation to contribute to the plan.

Requirement That Medical Benefits Be Incidental or Subordinate

Under the provision, the medical benefits described in section 401(h) are considered subordinate to the retirement benefits only if the aggregate of actual contributions (made after the date on which the plan first includes such medical benefits) to provide such medical benefits and any life insurance protection does not exceed 25 percent of the aggregate contributions actually made after such date (rather than the cost related to benefit accruals) other than contributions to fund past service credits. This rule does not apply to a transfer of excess assets permitted under the temporary rule described above.

Under this rule, for example, if a section 401(h) retiree medical benefits plan was established at a time when the plan was fully funded (as determined under section 412), the employer is precluded from making contributions to fund the section 401(h) account unless and until the plan falls below the full funding limit. This is because the permissible level of contributions is measured by actual contributions to the pension plan after the date the retiree medical benefits plan is established.

Internal Revenue Service General Counsel Memorandum, 39785, issued on April 3, 1989, is rejected to the extent it concludes that contributions to a section 401(h) account may be based on plan costs rather than actual contributions to the plan.

No inference is intended as to whether a contribution to a section 401(h) account prior to the effective date of this proposal met the requirement that the medical benefits be subordinate to the retirement benefits of the plan where the determination as to whether such requirement was met was based on plan costs rather than on actual contributions to the plan.

Effective Date

The proposal is generally applicable to years beginning after December 31, 1989. However, no transfer under the general rule is allowed with respect to any year beginning after December 31, 1994.

The special rule applicable to certain negotiated plans is effective on the date of enactment, except that the continuing obligation to contribute is effective as of January 1, 1988.

The proposal relating to the subordination requirement (i.e., the 25-percent rule) for purposes of determining the permissible contribution to a section 401(h) account is effective with respect to contributions paid to the plan after October 3, 1989.

5. MODIFICATION OF FULL FUNDING LIMITATION (SEC. 6331 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 412 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, subject to certain limitations, an employer may make deductible contributions to a defined benefit pension plan up to the full funding limitation. The full funding limitation is generally defined as the excess, if any, of (1) the lesser of (a) the accrued liability under the plan (including normal cost) or (b) 150 percent of the plan's current liability, over (2) the lesser of (a) the fair market value of the plan's assets, or (b) the actuarial value of the plan's assets (sec. 412(c)(7)). For plan years beginning before January 1, 1988, the 150 percent of current liability limitation did not apply.

The Secretary may, under regulations, adjust the 150-percent figure contained in the full funding limitation to take into account the average age (and length of service, if appropriate) of the participants in the plan (weighted by the value of their benefits under the plan). In addition, the Secretary is authorized to prescribe regulations that apply, in lieu of the 150 percent of current liability limitation, a different full funding limitation based on factors other than current liability. The Secretary may exercise this authority only in a manner so that in the aggregate, the effect on Federal budget receipts is substantially identical to the effect of the 150-percent full funding limitation.

Reasons for change

To date, the Secretary has not exercised the authority granted with respect to modifying the 150-percent full funding limitation. The committee believes such a modification is warranted in certain circumstances in order to permit employers with younger work forces to make increased contributions to their defined pension benefit plans to provide for anticipated future benefit accruals. However, in light of the committee's commitment to deficit reduction, such a modification is appropriate only if accomplished in a revenue neutral manner. Thus, the provision directs the Secretary to increase the full funding limitation in situations where employees are more likely to accrue significant benefits in the future, and to decrease the full funding limitation in situations where fewer future accruals are likely to occur (i.e., plans with a greater percentage of retirees), provided that it has no effect on Federal budget receipts.

Explanation of provision

In General

The provision allows certain employers to elect to apply the present-law full funding limitation without regard to the 150 percent of current liability limitation. The Secretary is required under the provision to adjust the full funding limitation for all plans (other than those subject to such an election) in response to employer elections under the provision so that the provision has an negligible effect on Federal budget receipts.

Employers Eligible To Elect Alternative Full Funding Limitation

An employer may elect to use the alternative full funding limitation if (1) as of the first day of the plan year in which the election is made the accrued liability of participants accruing benefits under all defined pension benefits plans of the employer (and controlled group members) is at least 90 percent of the aggregate total accrued liability under all such plans; (2) no defined benefit pension plan maintained by the employer (or by any controlled group member) is a top-heavy plan (within the meaning of section 416(g)) for the plan year in which such election is made and the immediately preceding 2 plan years; and (3) the plan has more than 100 participants at all times during the plan year in which the election is made and the immediately preceding 2 plan years.

If the accrued liability ratio described above falls below 90 percent for any plan year for which the election is in effect, the alternative full funding limitation is phased out for the remainder of the period for which the election is in effect under rules to be prescribed by the Secretary. If a plan becomes a top-heavy plan or fails to meet the 100-participant requirement during any plan year in the period for which the election is in effect, the alternative full funding limitation ceases to apply. In addition, if the 90-percent requirement, top-heavy restriction, or 100-participant restriction is violated during the election period, the employer is precluded from making a subsequent election to use the alternative full funding limitation for 10 plan years following the election period.

Requirements With Respect to Election of Alternative Limitation

The election to use the modified full funding limitation is subject to the following requirements:

(1) the election is to apply for a 5-plan year period beginning with the first plan year for which the election is effective;

(2) the election is to be made by application to the Secretary filed 60 days prior to the first day of the plan year immediately preceding the first plan year for which the election is effective;

(3) the election application is to include actuarial information (for each plan to be covered by the election) indicating the full funding limitation that will apply under each year of the period for which the election is in effect, and the full funding limitation that would apply in each of the years covered by the period in the absence of an election (in each case, based on reasonable estimates) as well as such other information as may be required by the Secretary; and

(4) the election is to be made for all defined benefit pension plans maintained by the controlled group of which the employer is a part.

An election may be made for successive 5-plan year periods upon application to the Secretary in accordance with the above criteria. If the employer does not choose to make a subsequent election after the expiration of any 5-plan year period, the employer may not make an election under the provision until 10 plan years after the expiration of such 5-plan year period.

An employer that makes an election may not be granted a minimum funding waiver for the period beginning after the election is made and ending at the expiration of the 5-plan year period. The Secretary may prescribe additional rules and requirements with respect to whether an employer is eligible to make an election.

In determining whether the accrued liability with respect to a participant may be aggregated with the accrued liability of other participants in order to meet the 90-percent requirement (i.e., whether the participant is accruing benefits under the plan), only active employees who have accrued benefits in the current year may be considered. Specifically, the Secretary is to issue guidance with respect to determining when a participant has accrued a benefit in the current year. Under such guidance, for example, for purposes of this provision, a participant in a plan where the employer has frozen accruals will not be considered to accrue benefits in the current year. In addition, a participant is not considered to accrue benefits solely because the participant's accrued benefit is increased by reason of a cost-of-living increase or similar feature in the plan.

It is intended that the Secretary limit the availability of this provision where one or more plans of the employer have been terminated or amended in a manner that significantly increases the likelihood that the employer will be eligible to make an election under this provision (e.g., where a plan has undergone a termination/re-establishment or a spin-off/termination within the preceding 10 plan years).

Required Adjustment of Full Funding Limitation

The provision requires the Secretary to adjust the full funding limitation applicable to other defined benefit pension plans on an annual basis in response to the elections under this provision so that the provision has a negligible affect on net Federal budget receipts.

Any adjustment to the full funding limitation required to be made under the provision is to be made with respect to all plans (other than those subject to the alternative limitation) and by reducing the full funding limitation with respect to participants who are not accruing benefits under the plan. This modification is made by substituting, with respect to these participants, a percentage between 140 percent and 150 percent for "150 percent" in the 150-percent full funding limitation. Thus, the full funding limit will be applied to the plan by multiplying the current liability attributable to active participants accruing benefits by 150 percent and by multiplying the current liability attributable to other participants by a percentage between 140 and 150 percent as determined by the Secretary.

To the extent that net Federal budget receipts require additional adjustments to the full funding limitation, the full funding limitation is to be adjusted by multiplying the accrued liability of the plan (sec. 412(c)(7)(A)(i)(II)) for all participants in the plan by a percentage less than 100 percent, but in no event by reducing this liability below 140 percent of current liability (as current liability is defined for purposes of the full funding limitation).

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

6. REPEAL OF LIMITATION ON ABILITY OF TAX-EXEMPT EMPLOYERS TO MAINTAIN CASH OR DEFERRED ARRANGEMENTS (SEC. 6341 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 401(K) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, if a tax qualified profit-sharing or stock bonus plan meets certain requirements, then an employee is not required to include in income any employer contributions to the plan merely because the employee could have elected to receive the amount contributed in cash. (sec. 401(k)). Tax-exempt organizations are generally prohibited from establishing qualified cash or deferred arrangements, except for certain plans that were in existence on July 12, 1986.

Reasons for change

Under present law, many tax-exempt entities are not permitted to maintain elective deferral arrangements for their employees. The committee believes that tax-exempt entities should be permitted to maintain cash or deferred arrangements for their employees on the same basis as other employers.

Explanation of provision

The provision allows tax-exempt organizations to maintain cash or deferred arrangements for their employees. As under present law, the limitation on the amount that may be deferred by an individual participating in both a cash and deferred arrangement and a tax-sheltered annuity (or other elective deferral arrangement) applies.

Effective date

The provision is effective with respect to plans established after December 31, 1989.

7. MODIFY GEOGRAPHIC LOCALE LIMITATION ON VOLUNTARY EMPLOYEES' BENEFICIARY ASSOCIATIONS (VEBAS) (SEC. 6342 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 501(C)(9) OF THE CODE)

Present law

A voluntary employees' beneficiary association ("VEBA") that provides for the payment of life, sick, accident or other similar benefits to its members, their dependents or designated beneficiaries may qualify for exemption from income taxation if certain requirements are met (sec. 501(c)(9)). Under Treasury regulations, one of these requirements is that the members have an employment-related common bond determined by reference to objective standards.

Under the regulations, employees of one or more employers engaged in the same line of business in the same geographic locale will be considered to have an employment-related bond. The Internal Revenue Service has taken the position that the geographic locale requirement is not met if membership in a VEBA is available on a nationwide basis to employees whose sole common bond is their employment with unaffiliated employers that are members of a nationally-based trade association.

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned that the geographic locale restriction may have unintended results where, for example, employers in the same line of business maintain places of business in an area where employees may reasonably be expected to work in more than one state. Therefore, the committee believes that a limited expansion of the geographic locale rule is warranted as long as the VEBA does not have too wide an area.

Explanation of provision

The provision adopts the position taken in the Treasury regulations requiring that the membership of a VEBA consist of individuals who become entitled to participate by reason of their being employees and whose eligibility for membership is defined by reference to objective standards that constitute an employment-related common bond among such individuals. In addition, employees of one or more employers engaged in the same lines of business in the same geographic locale will be considered to share an employment-related common bond. The committee does not intend the provision to alter the present-law rules relating to the membership of labor unions or employees of affiliated employers and their participation in VEBAs. Nor are other rules relating to VEBAs affected.

The provision clarifies that the geographic locale requirements may be met by a VEBA that provides benefits to employees in a clearly geographic region that may include more than one state. A VEBA will meet the geographic locale requirement if it provides benefits to the employees who are located in no more than 3 contiguous states. Thus, the provision adopts the position of the Internal Revenue Service that an exempt multiple employer VEBA may not provide benefits to employees over a wide geographic area.

The committee does intend to limit the authority of the Secretary to permit a VEBA to operate in a wider geographic locale even if the area of operation exceeds the 3-state limitation described above.

Effective date

The provision is effective for years beginning on or after October 3, 1989. No inference is intended with respect to the application of the geographic locale restriction under present law.

29-059 O-90-33 (Pt. 17)

8. EXCISE TAX ON REVERSIONS OF QUALIFIED PLAN ASSETS (SEC. 6343 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 4980 OF THE CODE)

A nondeductible 15 percent excise tax is imposed on employer reversions from qualified plans (sec. 4980).

Reasons for change

The excise tax on reversions was originally enacted because Congress believes that it was appropriate to limit the tax incentives available to an employer that maintains a pension plan. Congress recognized that contribution to such plans, as well as the earnings on such contributions, are intended to provide for the retirement benefits of plan participants. To the extent that amounts in such plans are not used for retirement purposes, Congress believes that the tax treatment of reversions should recognize that the tax on earnings on pension funds is deferred and, thus, the benefits of this treatment should be recaptured. In many cases, a 15-percent excise tax is not sufficient to recapture the tax benefits received. Therefore, the committee believes it is appropriate to increase the excise tax to better approximate the tax benefits of the income deferral.

Explanation of provision

The provision increases the 15-percent excise tax to 20 percent.

Effective date

The provision generally applies to reversions occurring after October 3, 1989. The provision does not apply to a reversion after such date if (1) with respect to plans subject to title IV of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), a notice of intent to terminate required under such title was provided before October 4, 1989, or (2) with respect to plans subject to title I of ERISA, a notice of intent to reduce future accruals required under section 204(h) of ERISA was provided to participants in connection with the plan termination with respect to which the reversion is received before October 4, 1989.

9. QUALIFIED TRANSPORTATION BENEFITS (SEC. 6344 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 132 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, gross income does not include a fringe benefit that qualifies as a de minimis fringe (sec. 132). In general, a de minimis fringe is any property or service the value of which (after taking into account the frequency with which similar fringes are provided by the employer to the employer's employees) is so small as to make accounting for it unreasonable or administratively impracticable. Under Treasury regulations, employer-provided transit passes, tokens, farecards, etc., are considered a de minimis fringe if the employer-provided value of the benefit does not exceed $15 per month. This exclusion does not apply to the provision of any benefit to defray public transit expenses incurred for personal travel other than commuting. If the benefit exceeds $15 per month, then the total value of the benefit is includable in income.

Under prior law, certain employer-provided transportation between an employee's residence and place of work was excludable from gross income. This exclusion expired for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to provide a limited tax subsidy for employer-provided commuting transportation that fosters the use of mass transit and van-pooling. The committee also believes that the tax treatment of such benefits should be covered under a single tax provision.

Explanation of provision

Under the provision, gross income does not include a fringe benefit that qualifies as a qualified transportation fringe. In general, a qualified transportation fringe is (1) transportation in a commuter highway vehicle between the employee's residence and place of employment and (2) any transit pass. The maximum exclusion for transit passes provided or subsidized by the employer is $15 per month. Up to $15 per month is excludable even if the total value of the benefit exceeds $15 per month.

The exclusion is available only if the benefit is provided under a separate written plan of the employer and the benefits satisfy the nondiscrimination rules applicable to no-additional-cost services and qualified employee discounts (sec. 132(h)). In addition, the plan must provide that the benefit is provided in addition to (and not in lieu of) any compensation otherwise payable to the employee. The exclusion is not available to self-employed individuals.

A transit pass includes any pass, token, farecard, voucher, or similar item entitling a person to transportation on mass transit facilities (whether or not publicly owned). A commuter highway vehicle is a highway vehicle the seating capacity of which is at least 7 adults (not including the driver) and at least 80 percent of the mileage use of which can reasonably be expected to be for purposes of transporting employees between their residences and their place of employment and on trips during which the number of employees transported for such purpose is at least one-half of the adult seating capacity of the vehicle (not including the driver). Transportation is considered provided by the employer if the transportation is furnished in a commuter highway vehicle operated by or for the employer. The committee intends that the Secretary may require such substantiation as is necessary to demonstrate compliance with the condition of the exclusion.

Employer-provided transit passes, vouchers, etc., are no longer excludable as a de minimis fringe benefit. The committee intends that the Secretary revise the regulations to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions.

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

10. PERSONAL USE OF AIRPLANES (SEC. 6345 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 61 OF THE CODE)

Present law

In general under present law, the value of personal use of an employer-provided aircraft is includible in the gross income of the employee. Under Treasury regulations, where 50 percent or more of the regular seating capacity of an aircraft (as used by the employer) is occupied by individuals whose flights are primarily for the employer's business, the value of a flight on that aircraft by any employee who is not flying primarily for the employer's business is deemed to be zero.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to measure the value of flights for personal reasons by reference to occupied seats rather than seating capacity of the airplane.

Explanation of provision

Under the provision, the value of a flight by an individual who is not flying primarily for an employer's business is to be determined on the basis of the percentage of occupied seats (other than crew) which are occupied by individuals whose flights are primarily for the employer's business. This rule does not apply in the case of a flight that is subject to the rules relating to no-additional-cost services.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

Subtitle D. Foreign Provisions

1. TAXABLE YEAR OF CERTAIN FOREIGN CORPORATIONS (SEC. 6401 OF THE BILL, SEC. 563(C) AND NEW SEC. 898 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The taxable year of a controlled foreign corporation or a foreign personal holding company is generally its annual accounting period, which means the annual period utilized by the corporation for the purpose of computing its income in keeping its books and records (sec. 441 (b)(1) and (c)). Such taxable year may be either the calendar year or a fiscal year. Generally, neither a controlled foreign corporation nor a foreign personal holding company is required to use the same taxable year as its shareholders who are U.S. persons. An exception to this rule applies in the case of a foreign sales corporation (FSC), which generally must have the same taxable year as that shareholder (or group of shareholders with a common taxable year) who has the highest percentage of voting power (sec. 441(h)).

A controlled foreign corporation is deemed to distribute certain of its income, such as its "subpart F income," to its "U.S. shareholders" [1] on the last day of the controlled foreign corporation's taxable year (sec. 951(a)(1)). To the extent that the taxable years of the U.S. shareholder and the controlled foreign corporation differ, a deferral of income can result. For example, assume a controlled foreign corporation has a taxable year ending on January 31, while its U.S. shareholder uses the calendar year as its taxable year. Any subpart F income earned by the controlled foreign corporation is deemed distributed to the U.S. shareholder on January 31, thus allowing the U.S. shareholder to defer tax on eleven months' worth of current subpart F income.

A similar deferral is available to U.S. persons who are shareholders of a foreign personal holding company.[2] Generally, a for-

[1] Generally, a controlled foreign corporation is any foreign corporation, more than 50 percent of the stock of which is owned (by vote or value) by U.S. shareholders (sec. 957(a)). For this purpose, a U.S. shareholder is any U.S. person who owns directly or indirectly at least 10 percent of the voting power of the outstanding stock of the foreign corporation (sec. 951(b)). Special definitions apply, however, for purposes of taking into account certain foreign insurance income. For example, for purposes of taking into account related person insurance income, the term controlled foreign corporation means any foreign corporation, more than 25 percent of the stock of which is owned (by vote or value) by U.S. shareholders (sec. 953(c)(1)(B)). Additionally, any U.S. person who owns stock of such a foreign corporation is considered to be a U.S. shareholder (sec. 953(c)(1)(A)).

[2] A foreign personal holding company is generally any foreign corporation, more than 50 percent of the stock of which is owned (by vote or value) directly or indirectly by 5 or fewer individuals who are citizens or residents of the United States, and at least 60 percent (50 percent in certain years follow-eign personal holding company is deemed to distribute all of its undistributed foreign personal holding company income allocable to its U.S. shareholders on the last day of the taxable year of the foreign personal holding company (sec. 551(b)). If a foreign personal holding company has a taxable year ending January 31, a calendar year U.S. shareholder each year would be able to defer tax on eleven months' worth of undistributed foreign personal holding company income since such income is deemded distributed to the shareholder after the close of the shareholder's taxable year during which the eleven months' worth of foreign personal holding company income was actually earned.

By contrast, the ability of taxpayers to defer income inclusions by manipulating the taxable years of other pass-through entities is severely limited by statutory rules, most significantly by rules adopted in the 1986 Act. For example, a partnership must generally adopt the same taxable year as its partners who own an aggregate majority interest in partnership profits and capital. If partners owning a majority of partnership profits and capital do not have the same taxable year, the partnership must adopt the taxable year of all partners who own an interest of at least 5 percent of the profits or capital of the partnership. Finally, if all 5 percent partners of the partnership do not have the same taxable year, then the partnership must adopt the calender year as its taxable year. Domestic International Sales Corporation (DISCs), S corporations, and person service corporations must also generally adopt the taxable year of their shareholders.

Generally under present law, a U.S. shareholder of a foreign personal holding company is required to include as dividend income for the taxable year in which or with which the taxable year of the foreign personal holding company ends, his pro-rata share of the company's undistributed foreign personal holding company income earned during the taxable year. The amount of undistributed foreign personal holding company income that is recognized as dividend income by the shareholder is deemed to be contributed by the shareholder to the capital of the company, and the accumulated earnings and profits of the company as of the end of the taxable year are correspondingly reduced. Any distributions made by the company subsequent to the end of such taxable year are considered to first be derived from its current earnings and profits for the year during which the distribution is made, and then from accumulated earnings and profits.[3] If the amount of the distribution exceeds both current and accumulated earnings and profits, such excess is generally treated as a return of capital.

Under present law, certain taxpayers can avoid the result described in the preceding paragraph by utilizing a foreign corporation with a different taxable year end than the foreign personal holding company as the shareholder of such company. To illustrate this point, consider the following example. Assume that a U.S. citizen owns 100 percent of the stock of a foreign corporation that uses June 30 as its taxable year end, and that this first corporation owns 100 percent of the stock of a foreign personal holding company that has a December 31 taxable year end. Assume that the second corporation does not have any accumulated earnings and profits. If the first corporation also qualifies as a foreign personal holding company, then the second corporation could distribute by December 31 an amount which is clearly sufficient to eliminate its undistributed foreign personal holding company income for the year. On or before the following June 30, when the second corporation's actual income has been accurately calculated, the first corporation can then make a distribution to the individual in an amount equal to 100 percent of its earnings for that year (namely the amount of the distribution from the second corporation that constituted a dividend) and thus ensure that it has no undistributed foreign personal holding company income for that year.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that present law allows an improper deferral of income to U.S. shareholders of certain controlled foreign corporations and foreign personal holding companies. Where present law allows subpart F income earned by a controlled foreign corporation, or undistributed foreign personal holding company income earned by a foreign personal holding company, to be subjected to Federal income tax in a taxable year later than that in which it was earned, the value of the income earned is understated. Such a deferral of income generally is only available to certain taxpayers, resulting in preferential treatment of those taxpayers at the overall expense of others. The committee believes that requiring certain controlled foreign corporaitons and foreign personal holding companies to generally conform their taxable years to the taxable years of their U.S. shareholders will impose less of a burden on such corporations and their shareholders than other methods of eliminating the deferral.

The committee understands that a foreign personal holding company may prefer to distribute to its shareholders all current earnings and profits annually so as to avoid having any undistributed foreign personal holding company income for the year. The committee is informed that prior to the close of a taxable year, however, it may be difficult for a foreign personal holding company to accurately compute the amount of the distribution necessary to eliminate all of its current undistributed foreign personal holding company income. In order to alleviate this difficulty, the committee believes that it is appropriate to allow certain distributions which are made by a foreign personal holding company within a short period after the close of its taxable year to be treated as having been made during its prior taxable year, thus allowing the company to eliminate its undistributed foreign personal holding company income for the year, without permittng deferral that would be possible absent the conforming taxable year provision.

The bill generally requires the taxable year of a controlled foreign corporation or a foreign personal holding company, more than 50 percent of the total voting power or value of the stock of which is treated as owned by a U.S. shareholder (referred to collectively as "specified foreign corporations" in the bill), to conform to the taxable year of such U.S. shareholder (as that term is defined with respect to the particular type of specified foreign corporation at issue). However, in the case of a specified foreign corporation which is a controlled foreign coroporation, such corporation may elect to use as its taxable year, a taxable year that begins one month earlier than the taxable year of the majority U.S. shareholder. The taxable year of a specified foreign corporation generally must be the same as the taxable year of each U.S. shareholder who on each testing day during the taxable year is considered to own more than fifty percent of the total voting power or value of the outstanding stock of the specified foreign corporation (as well as the taxable year of each U.S. shareholder who is not considered to own more than 50 percent of the stock of the specified foreign corporation, but whose stock is treated as owned under the applicable attribution rules by a more than 50 percent of U.S. shareholder).[4] If more than one U.S. shareholder is considered to own such a majority of the stock of the specified foreign corporation (or if a U.S. shareholder who is not a more than 50 percent shareholder owns stock which is treated as owned by a more than 50 percent U.S. shareholder), and all such U.S. shareholders do not have the same taxable year, then the specified foreign corporation is required to adopt the required taxable year as the Secretary may prescribe by regulations. The committee anticipates that the regulations will provide that such required taxable year shall be the taxable year that results in the least aggregate deferral of income to the such U.S. shareholders. Generally, the aggregate deferral of income for a particular year is equal to the sum of the products determined by multiplying the month(s) of deferral for each such U.S. shareholder that would be generated by that year end, times each such shareholder's percentage stock interest for purposes of determining its prorata share of any deemed distribution by the corporation. The corporate tax year that produces the lowest such sum is the taxable year that results in the least aggregate deferral of income to such U.S. shareholders. The committee intends that if the calculation results in more than one taxable year qualifying as the taxable year with the least aggregate deferral, then the corporation may select any one of those taxable years as its taxable year (unless its current taxable year is one of those years, in which case the corporation would be required to maintain its current taxable year).

To illustrate the operation of the preceding paragraph, consider the following situations. Any specified foreign corporation, over 50 percent of the value of whose stock is considered owned by a single U.S. shareholder as its taxable year.[5] Alternatively, if ing a year in which the corporation was a foreign personal holding company) of the gross income of which for a taxable year consists of certain items of passive income classified as foreign personal holding company income by section 553(a) (sec. 552(a)). In the case of a foreign personal holding company, any U.S. person who owns shares in such company is considered a U.S. shareholder (sec. 551(a)).

[3] As such, the distribution will generally constitute taxable income to the recipient shareholder. This is in contrast to the case of a controlled foreign corporation, whose distributions are considered to be made first from earnings and profits which were previously taxed to the U.S. shareholder under subpart F, and are thus not again included in the gross income of the shareholders.

[4] More than one majority U.S. shareholder can exist with respect to a specified foreign corporation as a result of the particular stock ownership attribution rules which are applicable to such corporation.

[5] If the specified foreign corporation is a controlled foreign corporation, it may alternatively use as its taxable year, a year which begins one month earlier than the taxable year of the majority U.S. shareholder.

a specified foreign corporation has two more than fifty percent U.S. shareholders, the specified foreign corporation must adopt the taxable year of those shareholders if the shareholders both use the same taxable year (subject to the one-month exception in the case of a controlled foreign corporation). However, if one more than fifty percent U.S. shareholders has an October 31 year end and the other has a November 30 year end, and each shareholder has an equal percentage stock interest in the controlled foreign corporation for purposes of determining its pro-rata share of any deemed distribution by the corporation, then the committee intends that the specified foreign corporation would be required to adopt October 31 as its taxable year end since that is the taxable year that will result in the least aggregate deferral of income to the more than 50 percent U.S. shareholders of the corporation.

The bill provides that specified foreign corporations generally must test to determine whether they are using the required taxable year on the first day of each new taxable year determined prior to the application of this provision for the current taxable year. For example, a specified foreign corporation that has historically used the calendar year as its taxable year must perform the test on January 1, 1990 to determine whether a taxable year change is required. If based on this test the corporation is required to change its taxable year end to June 30, it will determine its income for the short period beginning on January 1, 1990 and ending on June 30, 1990. On July 1, 1990, the corporation will again be required to perform the test, since that date is the first day of the corporation's new taxable year.

Additionally, the bill provides the Treasury authority to prescribe by regulations another day or days during a taxable year on which the test must be performed. The committee contemplates that such additional testing days may include days on which a substantial change in U.S. ownership of the stock of a controlled foreign corporation or a foreign personal holding company occurs. For example, in the case of a controlled foreign corporation, the committee anticipates that the regulations might provide that a testing day will include any day on which either a person obtains a sufficient amount of the stock of such corporation to cause such person to qualify as a U.S. shareholder for purposes of applying the applicable subpart F income rules, or when a current U.S. shareholder acquires or disposes of any stock of the controlled foreign corporation.

The present law rules which determine whether a person is a U.S. shareholder of a controlled foreign corporation or a foreign personal holding company are not changed by the bill. Under those rules, stock of a foreign corporation or a foreign personal holding company are not changed by the bill. Under those rules, stock of a foreign corporation that is owned by parties related to a U.S. person is attributed to that person under the rules of secton 318(a) (with certain modifications as set forth in section 958(b)) in the case of a controlled foreign corporation, and under the rules of section 554 in the case of a foreign personal holding company. The bill provides that in determining stock ownership for purposes of ascertaining the required taxable year of a specified foreign corporation, a U.S. shareholder shall be considered as owning any stock of a controlled foreign corporation which it owns directly or indirectly through the use of a foreign entity. For example, a shareholder shall be considered to own its proportionate share of stock of a controlled foreign corporation which it owned by a foreign corporation, foreign partnership, foreign trust, or foreign estate in which that shareholder owns an interest. A similar rule applies in the case of stock of a foreign personal holding company, except that stock owned indirectly through a foreign corporation which itself is a foreign personal holding company is not treated as being owned proportionately by a U.S. shareholder.

The bill grants the Treasury authority to prescribe regulations to address the application of this provision to foreign corporations that earn related person insurance income. In the case of such a corporation, the determination of whether certain shareholders will be considered U.S. shareholders, and as a result, the corporation will be considered a controlled foreign corporation for the taxable year, is dependent upon the proportion of related person insurance income to total insurance income earned by the corporation during the taxable year.[6] This determination cannot be made until the close of the corporation's taxable year. The committee anticipates that the regulations will provide that a foreign corporation that earns related person insurance income will generally not be required to take into account non-10-percent U.S. shareholders (i.e., persons who are only U.S. shareholders by virtue of the special captive insurance rules (sec. 953(c)) to test on the first day of its taxable year to determine its required taxable year unless the corporation was treated as a controlled foreign corporation under the captive insurance rules for the immediately preceding taxable year. If for a taxable year, a corporation qualified as a controlled foreign corporation under the special captive insurance rule, the committee anticipates that the regulations will generally require such corporation to perform the test on the first day of its next taxable year taking into account as U.S. shareholders those persons who would be treated as such with respect to related person insurance income earned by the corporation under the assumption that it will again qualify as a controlled foreign corporation under this special rule.

For example, assume that a foreign corporation has twenty equal shareholders, all of whom are unrelated U.S. persons. The corporation would not qualify as a controlled foreign corporation under the general rule applicable to foreign companies (or foreign insurance companies) because no U.S. persons are considered U.S. shareholders. However, if the corporation earned related person insurance income, then it would be considered a controlled foreign corporation unless the amount of related person insurance income it earned was de minimis (less than 20 percent of total insurance income). If in taxable year 1, the company earned a de minimis amount of related person insurance income (and thus the company was not considered a controlled foreign corporation with respect to such income), then on the first day of taxable year 2, the corporation would not be required to test to determine its required taxable year. Alternatively, if the related person insurance income earned in taxable year 1 was not de minimis (thus causing the company to be a controlled foreign corporation), then the company would be required to determine whether it is a specified foreign corporation on the first day of taxable year 2, and in making such determination, would be required to treat all U.S. persons owning its stock as U.S. shareholders.

The committee anticipates that the regulations will provide guidance for companies that are controlled foreign corporations under both the generally applicable rule (including the general rule for insurance companies) and the special captive insurance company rule. In such an instance, the committee generally intends that in determining whether a company is a specified foreign corporation, the company must take into account all persons who would be U.S. shareholders under either rule.

The committee understands that certain corporations that are required to change their taxable years for U.S. tax purposes may not be able to make a conforming change of their taxable years for purposes of reporting taxable income in foreign countries. The committee anticipates that the Treasury will exercise its authority to promulgate regulations necessary to address problems which may arise as a result of nonconforming tax years, including issues related to the determination of creditable foreign taxes for purposes of the deemed paid foreign tax credit, the high tax exception to the inclusion of subpart F income, the foreign tax credit separate limitation high-tax kick out rules, and the foreign tax redetermination rules.

Additionally, the bill allows a foreign personal holding company to treat a distribution that is made on or before the fifteenth day of the third month after the close of its taxable year as having been made during such taxable year, but only to the extent that such distribution would offset its undistributed foreign personal holding company income for such year. Furthermore, this rule applies only if the distribution is made to a person who was a shareholder of record as of the last day of the foreign personal holding company's taxable year with respect to the stock for which such distribution is made. The amount of such distribution which under this provision is deemed to have been made during the previous taxable year of the foreign personal holding company is to be included in the gross income of the person treated as recipient shareholder under the principles of section 551(f) of the Code, as well as in the gross or distributable net income of any foreign entity described in section 551(f) which actually receives such distribution from the foreign personal holding company, for such person's taxable year in which the taxable year of the foreign personal holding company ends.

For example, assume that a U.S. citizen owns 100 percent of the stock of a foreign personal holding company that has $100 of undistributed foreign personal holding company income as of the end of its taxable year. Under this provision, the company is allowed to make a distribution of up to $100 on or before the fifteenth day of the third month following the close of such taxable year, which distribution will be treated as made during its previous taxable year, thus eliminating its undistributed foreign personal holding company income for such year. The distribution will be included in the income of the U.S. citizen in his taxable year which includes the final day of the foreign personal holding company's taxable year during which such distribution is deemed to occur under this rule.

[6] If related person insurance income is less than 20 percent of total insurance income for the year, then the special rule related to captive insurance companies will not apply.

The provision is effective for taxable years of controlled foreign corporations and foreign personal holding companies beginning after July 10, 1989. Information returns which are generally required to be filed by certain U.S. shareholders of a specified foreign corporation will be required to be filed with respect to such a corporation for the short taxable year of the corporation resulting from this provision that begin with the first day of the first taxable year beginning after July 10, 1989, and ending in accordance with the taxable year to which the corporation changes.

The bill provides that a controlled foreign corporation or a foreign personal holding company that changes to a taxable year required by this provision will be treated as having made the change with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury. Certain U.S. shareholders of a specified foreign corporation shall take the income that is deemed distributed to such shareholder for such short taxable year into account ratably over the first four taxable years (including the shareholder's year which would otherwise include all the income from the entity's short taxable year) beginning after July 10, 1989. The ratable four year inclusion applies only in cases where the U.S. shareholder would otherwise be required to include deemed distributions of income from more than one taxable year of the specified foreign corporation in any one of its own taxable years, and only if the short taxable year of such corporation is its first taxable year beginning after July 10, 1989.

2. RESOURCING INCOME TO PREVENT AVOIDANCE OF FOREIGN TAX CREDIT LIMITATION RULES (SEC. 6402 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 904 OF THE CODE)

Consolidation in General

Members of an affiliated group of corporations may file (or be required to file) a consolidated return. To be a member of an affiliated group for this purpose, a corporation must be an "includible corporation," and a controlling percentage of the stock of the corporation (unless it is the common parent) must be owned directly by an "includible corporation." Under section 1504(b), certain types of corporations do not qualify as includible corporations. Subject to certain exceptions, corporations that do not so qualify include generally corporations exempt from tax under section 501 (for example, corporations organized and operated exclusively for charitable or educational purposes), insurance companies subject to taxation under the special rules applicable to life insurance companies, foreign corporations, corporations electing the possession tax credit, regulated investment companies, real estate investment trusts, and domestic international sales corporations.

Foreign Tax Credit Rules

The United States taxes U.S. corporations (including affiliated groups filing consolidated returns) and other U.S. persons on their worldwide income, including foreign income. U.S. persons may choose to reduce the U.S. tax on their foreign income by the amount of the foreign income taxes they pay on that foreign income. In order to prevent the use of foreign tax credits to offset U.S. tax on U.S. income, taxpayers are subject to foreign tax credit limitations in several separate categories, each of which generally varies directly with the ratio of foreign source taxable income subject to that limitation to entire taxable income. If the foreign source taxable income in a particular foreign tax credit limitation category is zero or negative for a particular taxable year, then the foreign taxes on income subject to that limitation cannot be credited against U.S. tax liability in that year.

Where a U.S. person sustains an overall foreign loss in a taxable year, net tax on U.S. income will generally be less than the U.S. tax rate times U.S. income. Under the overall foreign loss recapture rule, a portion of foreign taxable income earned after an overall foreign loss year is treated as U.S. taxable income for foreign tax credit purposes (sec. 904(f)(1)–(4)). This rule is designed to prevent taxpayers from obtaining the double benefit of forgiveness of U.S. tax on a portion of current U.S. income, plus an allowance of a foreign tax credit with respect to the full amount of subsequent years' foreign income. In addition, the 1986 Act clarified that a net loss in a separate foreign tax credit limitation category, or in the general limitation category, would reduce any positive foreign source taxable income in each of the other categories. In effect, this means that foreign losses in a particular limitation category cannot reduce current U.S. tax on U.S. source income in a taxable year unless the aggregate of foreign source taxable income and foreign source losses in all limitation categories is negative.

For any taxable year a U.S. person may forgo any benefits of the foreign tax credit and instead take deductions for foreign income taxes. A taxpayer typically may find this alternative preferable when it has paid income taxes to a particular foreign country but has relatively little or no foreign tax credit limitation. This might be the case where, for example, the taxpayer incurs losses from operations in a different foreign country, and these losses are both (a) equal to or greater than the income on which the taxpayer paid the tax to the first foreign country, and (b) subject to the same limitation as the income on which the tax was paid to the first foreign country. Under these circumstances the taxpayer could get no current year benefit from the foreign tax credit with respect to that income category. Depending upon the taxpayer's income, losses, and foreign taxes subject to other foreign tax credit limitations, the usability of any foreign tax credit carryovers generated by electing the benefits of the credit provisions, and the anticipated future effect of the overall loss recapture rules, the taxpayer may find it preferable in this instance to elect the deduction.

The taxpayer might also find it beneficial to forgo the benefits of the credit provisions if the foreign losses in the above example are less than the income on which the taxpayer paid the tax to the first foreign country, but the combined foreign losses and foreign income taxes are greater than the income that can be sheltered using foreign tax credits. For example, assume that a U.S. corporation pays U.S. federal income tax at a 34 percent rate and has manufacturing operations in the United States and two other countries. Assume one foreign operation earns $100 subject to $50 of foreign income tax, and the other foreign operation losses $75. Assume the U.S. operation earns $25. Using the credit, the taxpayer would eliminate any net U.S. tax liability on its foreign income and would obtain a $41.50 foreign tax credit carryover, but would owe $8.50 of U.S. tax on its current U.S. income. Using the deduction, the taxpayer would reduce its taxable income to zero and thus incur no U.S. tax liability in the current year. Again depending on numerous past, present, and anticipated future factors, it may be preferable for the taxpayer to forgo the benefits of the credit and take the deduction instead.

Interaction of Consolidation and Foreign Tax Credit Rules

An affiliated group filing a consolidated return (hereinafter referred to as a "consolidated group") must choose the benefits of the foreign tax credit (as opposed to taking deductions for foreign income taxes) on a group-wide basis (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.1502-4(a)). Each foreign tax credit limitation to which a consolidated group is subject varies directly with the ratio of the foreign source taxable income of the group subject to that limitation to the entire taxable income of the group (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.1502-4(c) and (d)).

For example, assume that one member of an affiliated group that files a consolidated return is a domestic corporation with a new foreign source loss of $100 from manufacturing, and U.S. source taxable income from manufacturing of $200. Assume that the income of the other members of the group consists of $100 of foreign source shipping income subject to $34 of foreign income tax. This group has no net foreign source taxable income, no current foreign tax credit, and, assuming that the relevant U.S. rate is 34 percent, a U.S. tax liability of $68 which is equal to, appropriately, the amount of its U.S. source taxable income ($200) times its U.S. tax rate.

Now assume that the members of the affiliated group own all of the stock of a foreign corporation or all of the interests in a partnership. Assume that 21 percent of the stock of a domestic corporation with a foreign loss is owned by this foreign corporation or partnership. Under this assumption, then, the domestic corporation is still wholly owned by the affiliated group, albeit indirectly through a controlled entity that is not an includible corporation, but the domestic corporation with the foreign loss is not a member of the affiliated group for purposes of filing a consolidated return. The consolidated return filed by the remaining group of corporations would show $100 of passive foreign source income and $34 of creditable foreign income tax subject to the separate foreign tax credit limitation on passive income, resulting in no net U.S. tax. The nonaffiliated domestic corporation with $200 of U.S. source income and $100 of foreign loss would pay only $34 of U.S. tax. That is, until there is a foreign loss recapture in a subsequent taxable year, the controlled group pays half the U.S. tax that would be owed in the case where 80 percent or more of stock of the domestic corporation with the foreign loss is owed directly by an includible corporation.

Expense Allocations

The 1986 Act provided, in general, that the taxable income of an affiliated group is to be determined by allocating and apportioning all interest expenses as if all members of the group were a single corporation (Code sec. 864(e)). As is true of the tax liabilities resulting from allocating separate limitation foreign losses among foreign tax credit limitation categories, the tax liabilities resulting from allocating expenses using a one-taxpayer approach can change depending upon whether 80 percent or more of the stock of an "includible" corporation controlled by an affiliated group is owned directly by includible corporations or indirectly through entities other than includible corporations.

The 1986 Act gave the Treasury authority to resource the income of any member of an affiliated group or modify the consolidated return regulations to the extent such resourcing or modification is necessary to carry out the purposes of section 864. In addition, the 1984 Act gave the Treasury authority to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to prevent the avoidance of Code provisions dealing with the linking of borrowing to investment, or diminishing risks, through the use of related persons, pass-thru entities, or other intermediaries (Code sec. 7701(f). The temporary and proposed regulations under section 864(e) provide that certain corporations not within the general definition of an affiliated group, such as any includible corporation if 80 percent of its stock is owned directly or indirectly by an includible corporation or by members of an affiliated group, will be considered to constitute affiliated corporations for purposes of the interest expense allocation rules (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.861-11T(d)(6)(i)).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that techniques for avoiding or lessening the impact of the foreign tax credit limitation and related rules have been eliminated over the past years, in particular in the 1986 Act and the regulations issued thereunder, and believes that it would be inappropriate to allow taxpayers to negate the effects of the 1986 Act and prior acts merely by using the expedient of interposing entities other than includible corporations into the chain of ownership of includible corporations. To permit the use of such techniques might reward diligent tax planning, but promotes no arguably important policy objective, in the committee's view. While regulations issued under section 864(e)(7) have appropriately prohibited the use of deconsolidation techniques to manipulate the interest allocation rules, the committee is concerned that the Secretary's authority to issue comparable regulations under the foreign tax credit rules is somewhat less clear.

The bill gives the Treasury authority to issue regulations that would require a taxpayer to resource the income of any member of an affiliated group of corporations (as that term would be modified for these purposes by the bill), or to modify the consolidated return regulations, to the extent such resourcing or modification is necessary to prevent avoidance of the purposes of the foreign tax credit rules. Under the bill, generally only the income of includible corporations (as that term is defined under current law) is subject to resourcing. However, under the bill the determination whether an includible corporation is part of an affiliated group would be made by treating stock owned by attribution under the rules of section 1563 as owned directly, and by disregarding the exclusions from the definition of "includible corporation" listed in section 1504(b). For example, where an includible corporation indirectly controls another includible corporation through an entity that is not an includible corporation, the Treasury is authorized to recharacterize by regulation foreign source income of the includible corporations as U.S. source income, so that the aggregate U.S. tax liability of those corporations is not less than the tax that would be imposed if, for foreign tax credit purposes, the includible corporations had joined in filing a consolidated return. In addition, the bill authorizes the Secretary to prescribe regulations preventing the avoidance (through disaffiliation) of other provisions relating to the proper calculation of the foreign tax credit, such as the limitation imposed under section 907 with respect to certain oil and gas extraction taxes.

As an example of a case that the regulations contemplated by the committee would reach, assume that a domestic parent corporation owns indirectly (though entities that are not includible corporations) 80 percent or more of the stock of two domestic subsidiary corporations. One such domestic subsidiary corporation has $200 of U.S. source income and $100 of foreign source loss. The second has $100 of per-tax foreign source taxable income, and has paid $34 of foreign income taxes. Assume that all income of the above domestic corporations is subject to U.S. tax at the 34 percent rate. Under the bill Treasury is authorized to recharacterize the income of the second domestic subsidiary corporation as U.S. source income, resulting in an aggregate U.S. tax liability of the two corporations of $68, which would be their tax liability if the parent corporation had owned the stock of the two subsidiaries directly and the three corporations had been required to file a consolidated return. (Under this example, the bill also eliminates the need to resource as domestic, under section 904(f), any foreign source income earned by the first domestic subsidiary corporation in a later year to account for its overall foreign loss described above.)

As another example, assume that in the above case the first domestic subsidiary corporation has $200 of U.S. source income, $100 of foreign source loss from operations in one foreign country, and $100 of per-tax foreign source income from operations in another foreign country, on which the corporation has paid $34 in foreign income tax. As in the above example, assume that the second domestic subsidiary corporation has $100 of per-tax foreign income, and has paid $34 of foreign income taxes. Were the first subsidiary corporation permitted to separately elect to deduct its foreign income taxes while the second corporation took the credit, the combined U.S. tax liabilities of the two would be $56.44, or 34 percent of $166 (the U.S. tax liability of the first corporation) plus zero (the U.S. tax liability of the second corporation). By contrast, if both corporations were required to jointly elect either to deduct or credit foreign taxes, then their combined current year U.S. tax liabilities would be $78.88 (using the deduction),[1] or $68 (using the credit). Under the bill, the Treasury is authorized to preclude either domestic subsidiary corporation in such a situation from electing to deduct its foreign taxes at the same time that the other domestic subsidiary corporation takes the benefit of the foreign tax credit provisions.

The provision is effective for taxable years begining after July 10, 1989.

[1] The combined tax liabilities would be $56.44 for the first corporation (computed as above) plus $22.44, or 34 percent of $66, for the second corporation.

3. IMPROVE INFORMATION REPORTING BY U.S. SUBSIDIARIES AND BRANCHES OF FOREIGN CORPORATIONS (SEC. 6403 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 6038A OF THE CODE)

Present law

The Treasury is authorized to distribute, apportion or allocate gross income, deductions, credits, or allowances between or among commonly controlled organizations, trades, or businesses as necessary to prevent the evasion of taxes or clearly to reflect income (Code sec. 482). Any corporation (U.S. or foreign) that conducts a trade or business in the United States and that is controlled by a foreign person must file an information return reporting all transactions with related foreign persons (sec. 6038A). "Control" for purposes of section 6038A requires 50-percent stock ownership by a single foreign person (including stock attributed to that person). Failure to comply with this reporting requirement carries an initial monetary penalty of $1,000, and additional penalties are imposed if the failure continues more than 90 days after the IRS notifies the taxpayer of the failure. The additional penalties are imposed at the rate of $1,000 for each 30-day period (or fraction thereof) during which the failure continues after the 90th day after IRS notification, up to a maximum additional penalty of $24,000. Thus, the total penalty for each failure to comply with the requirements of section 6038A cannot exceed $25,000.

Similarly, U.S. shareholders that control foreign corporations are required to report certain information with respect to such foreign corporations and all transactions with such foreign corporations. (sec. 6038). In addition to monetary penalties, noncompliance with the requirements of section 6038 can be sanctioned by the reduction or elimination of foreign tax credits allowed to U.S. shareholders that fail to report the required information (sec. 6038(c)).

For the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return, making a return where none has been made, determining the liability of any person for any internal revenue tax or the liability at law or in equity of any transferee or fiduciary of any person in respect of any internal revenue tax, or collecting any such liability, the IRS is authorized (1) to examine any books, papers, records, and other data that may be relevant or material to such inquiry, (2) to summon the person liable for tax or required to perform the act, or any officer or employee of such person, or any person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries related to the business of the person liable for tax or required to perform the act, or any other person the IRS may deem proper, to appear before the IRS at a time and place named in the summons and to produce such books, papers, records, or other data and to give such testimony, under oath, as may be relevant or material to such inquiry, and (3) to take such testimony of the person concerned, under oath, as may be relevant or material to such inquiry (sec. 7602(a)). Thus, the statutory scope of IRS summons authority extends to certain persons that are not themselves subject to tax in the United States. Moreover, regarding constitutional due process limitations, a court in the United States may subject a foreign person to personal jurisdiction in connection with the commercial activities the person has purposefully caused within the court's jurisdiction. See, e.g., World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S.C. 286 (1980).

A foreign corporation that is engaged in trade or business within the United States is subject to U.S. corporate income tax on its taxable income that is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States (sec. 882(a)). However, the deductions and credits available to a foreign corporation in connection with its corporate income tax liability are generally allowed only if the corporation files a timely, true, accurate, and complete income tax return (sec. 882(c)(2)). Similar rules apply to the deductions and credits of nonresident alien individuals (sec. 874).

Reasons for change

IRS Access to Foreign Materials

In order to determine whether adjustments under section 482 (or otherwise) are appropriate in the course of a tax audit of a U.S. taxpayer controlled by a foreign person, it may be necessary for the IRS to examine books, records or other data in the custody of a foreign person. Summonses for such materials have been enforced in U.S. courts against a foreign parent that sells goods in the United States through a U.S. subsidiary (United States v. Toyota Motor Corp., 561 F.Supp. 354 (C.D. Cal.) (memorandum opinion), 569 F.Supp. 1158 (C.D. Cal. 1983)). However, such summonses may not be practically or legally enforceable in all appropriate cases, especially where summoned materials are in the possession of a foreign person. For example, enforcement of the summonses in Toyota was based on several factors including the fact that the boards of directors of the foreign parent and the U.S. subsidiary had interlocking membership, and the fact that the foreign parent itself had significant business activities in the United States. In the absence of such factors, the courts have not clearly determined the standards for enforcement of summonses against foreign parents of U.S. subsidiaries.

In addition, establishing jurisdiction to enforce a summons against a foreign parent may not be sufficient to obtain the summoned materials. One significant practical obstacle is that standards of recordkeeping and preservation of documents vary from country to country, and enterprises of many countries do not observe recordkeeping and document-preservation standards as rigorous as those imposed on U.S. taxpayers. Accordingly, documents or materials summoned from foreign parties may not exist by the time a summons is enforced. The committee believes that the unavailability of such documents and materials has substantially interfered with the ability of the Internal Revenue Service to administer the U.S. tax laws.

Reporting of Transactions

The committee believes that the reporting requirements of section 6038A should apply to a U.S. corporation or a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business in the United States where such a corporation engages in transactions with substantial foreign stockholders, regardless of whether such stockholders own, directly or indirectly, 50 percent or more of the corporation's stock. For example, the committee is concerned that there may be U.S. corporations owned by groups of unrelated foreign persons that may find it beneficial, for tax reasons, to engage in transactions with those substantial foreign stockholders that are not at arm's length. The committee believes the IRS should have the same enforcement tools in examining transactions with such stockholders as are available in connection with transactions involving 50-percent or greater foreign stockholders, and as are generally available in connection with purely domestic transactions.

Sanctions

Congress has long recognized that international transactions and foreign taxpayers present difficult tax administration problems. The particular circumstances of foreign taxpayers may make it difficult to detect failures to comply with tax reporting and payment obligations. For this reason, the committee believes that strong and effective sanctions must apply to failures to comply with reporting obligations related to foreign taxpayers. The committee believes that a penalty of only $25,000 may not be sufficiently meaningful to encourage adequate compliance.

Moreover, on the same principle that sections 882(c)(2) and 874 have conditioned the allowance of ordinary deductions and credits on full compliance with applicable reporting requirements, the committee believes that similar sanctions should apply in cases where the taxpayer fails to comply with applicable requirements to support the correctness of the amounts shown on the return in the course of examination.

Finally, the committee believes that after these new provisions have been in operation for some reasonable period, it will be necessary to determine, based on the enforcement experience of the IRS, whether the bill's new rules are adequate to address the committee's present concerns or whether additional legislative steps will be necessary.

Explanation of provisions

Requirements Imposed on Taxpayers

The bill expands the application of section 6038A, such that the reporting requirements of that section apply to those corporations ("reporting corporations") that are owned by 25-percent foreign shareholders, and to those transactions ("reportable transactions") by such corporations that involve such shareholders or persons related to such shareholders. The bill defines a 25-percent foreign shareholder as any foreign person that owns 25 percent or more of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock of the reporting corporation that are entitled to vote, or 25 percent of the total value of all classes of stock. The bill also adds any 25-percent foreign shareholder to the definition of a related party under section 6038A.

In addition, the bill provides that each reporting corporation shall maintain, in the location, in the manner, and to the extent prescribed by regulations, such records as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe as being appropriate to determine the correct treatment of transactions of the reporting corporation with related parties (or shall cause another person to maintain such records as prescribed). The committee anticipates that under this provision, the Secretary may prescribe rules under which the reporting corporation (or another person as directed by the reporting corporation) is required to obtain and compile, as well as maintain, such books, papers, and other records that are not already in its possession.

The committee anticipates that the regulations will generally require such maintenance in the United States. However, the committee also intends by this provision to give the Secretary flexibility in prescribing which records must be maintained in the United States and which may be maintained elsewhere. The Secretary will also have flexibility in identifying those classes of supporting documentation relating to related party transactions that are sufficiently important to warrant maintenance in the United States in the general case, and that therefore will be generally required by regulation to be maintained in the United States. In the case of records so identified, the committee anticipates that regulations will permit the U.S. maintenance requirements to be satisfied by duplicate as well as original documents. Moreover, the committee anticipates that translation into English of any documents required to be maintained in the United States might not be required simultaneously with the appearance of such documents in the United States, but only when specified in regulations.

On the other hand, the committee anticipates that there may be classes of supporting documentation that do not warrant a general regulatory U.S. maintenance requirement. Moreover, even where a class of records is generally required to be maintained in the United States, the committee anticipates that there may be particular circumstances that would warrant exceptions to the general rules. For example, the Treasury may permit certain records to be maintained outside the United States where it is satisfied that any such records would be submitted to the Internal Revenue Service promptly upon request. In addition, the committee anticipates that the Treasury might modify the level of required U.S. record maintenance on a country-by-country or case-by-case basis, by agreement or otherwise, for example by entering into agreements under which taxpayers would be obligated to preserve specified records but not maintain them in the United States, and make them available to the IRS promptly upon request. The committee also anticipates that the Treasury may determine that the information exchange procedures in place between the IRS and the tax authorities of a particular foreign country are operating in such a way as to assure ready access by the IRS to all relevant documents in the possession of related parties in that foreign country, and that as a result the Treasury may grant country-based exceptions to the general U.S. record maintenance rules. Finally, the committee anticipates that even where the general U.S. record-maintenance requirements do not require the maintenance in the United States of a particular class of documents, the Treasury may identify specific circumstances where, because of enforcement problems, that class must be maintained in the United States by a particular reporting corporation or a particular class of reporting corporations.

The committee recognizes that some related foreign corporations may consider such materials to be confidential with respect to the reporting corporation. Accordingly, the committee intends to make reporting corporations responsible to ensure that the specified materials are maintained in the United States, but not to require that such materials be placed under the control of the reporting corporation. Similarly, the committee intends that any such materials would be treated as present in the United States solely for the purpose of determining the tax consequences of transactions involving the reporting corporation, and would not be subject (solely by reason of its presence for U.S. tax purposes) to legal process in connection with nontax not otherwise present in the United States.

In addition, the bill provides that in order to avoid the consequences of the noncompliance rules (discussed below) with respect to certain transactions between any reporting corporation and any related party, each foreign person that is a related party of a reporting corporation must agree (in such manner and at such time as Treasury rules or regulations may specify) to authorize such corporation to accept service of process as its agent in connection with any request or summons by the IRS to examine books, records, or other materials, to produce such materials, or to take testimony related to any reportable transaction, solely for the purpose of determining the tax liability of the reporting corporation.[1] This requirement will ensure that IRS examination requests and summonses with respect to related-party transactions involving U.S. taxpayers can be served on related foreign persons that do not directly engage in trades or businesses in the United States.

It is expected that where records of a related party are obtainable on a timely and efficient basis under information-exchange procedures provided under a tax treaty, the Internal Revenue Service generally would make use of such procedures before issuing a summons to the designated agent on behalf of the related party. However, the committee is cognizant of undue audit delays that have been caused by the Service's inability to quickly obtain relevant information through treaty procedures, and recognizes that exigent circumstances (for example, the imminent expiration of the limitations period) may arise that would make the use of a treaty procedure undesirable. Thus, as is the case currently, the committee does not intend that the Service be required to attempt to use a treaty procedure before issuing a summons with respect to information that might be obtained under that treaty.

The committee understands that a reporting corporation may not always be aware that a transaction involves a related party. Such cases may occur, for example, where a reporting corporation engages in a small or brief transaction on arm's length terms with a person that is related to a related party, but with no involvement of any person that is directly related to the reporting corporation. The committee expects that Treasury regulations, in such circumstances, will allow a related party to retroactively authorize the reporting corporation to accept service of process on its behalf with respect to such a transaction. However, if the related party involved in such a transaction refuses to retroactively authorize the reporting corporation to accept service of process on its behalf, the reporting corporation would generally be subject to the noncompliance rule with respect to transactions prior to which the reporting corporation was not aware that the requirements of section 6038A would apply.

To relieve such a harsh result, the committee anticipates that Treasury regulations may allow a reporting corporation to be treated as retroactively authorized to accept service of process on behalf of a related party (and thus in compliance with this requirement), solely for the purpose of avoiding the application of the noncompliance rule with respect to certain transactions, in exceptional circumstances. Such circumstances may include a situation in which (1) neither the reporting corporation nor the other party to the transactions knew or had reason to know that the two parties were related at the time of the transactions, and (2) the taxpayer establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that all transactions between the reporting corporation and the related party were on uncontrolled, arm's-length terms that did not involve the participation of any known related party. The committee views common control (at a 50-percent level) as one reason to know that two parties are related under the bill, except where the common control is sufficiently attenuated. Such deemed compliance would apply only to reportable transactions entered into prior to the time when the reportable corporation knew or had reason to know that the related party was related. The noncompliance rule would apply to any transaction subsequent to that time with the same related party unless there was actual authorization to accept service of process.

[1] The committee intends that the agency relationship specified in the bill will not constitute an agency relationship for any other purpose under Federal or State law.

Applicable Sanctions

Enhancement of monetary penalty

The bill increases the existing $1,000 penalty for failure to meet the requirements of section 6038A (as expanded by the bill) to $10,000, increases the amount of each addition to such penalty from the existing $1,000 to $10,000 per applicable 30-day period, and removes the ceiling (currently $24,000) on additions to such penalty.

The bill provides an exception from liability for this monetary penalty, imposed for failure to comply with the reporting requirements of section 6038A, in cases where the taxpayer demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that reasonable cause exists for the failure to furnish required information or maintain required records. The committee expects that such reasonable cause exceptions will be allowed liberally in cases of small corporations that (1) had no knowledge of the requirements imposed by section 6038A, (2) have limited presence in and contact with the United States, and (3) promptly, fully and completely comply with all IRS requests (including requests to the corporation on behalf of any related foreign party) to furnish books, papers, records, and other data that may be revelant or material to any reportable transaction. The committee intends that the fact that a foreign jurisdiction would impose a civil or criminal penalty on the reporting corporation (or any other person) for disclosing the required of requested materials shall not constitute reasonable cause.

Noncompliance rule

In addition to the enhanced monetary penalty, the bill provides for a new noncompliance rule designed to match more closely the degree of noncompliance with the stakes involved. This rule authorizes the Secretary to allow only the amount of (1) any deductions otherwise allowable to the reporting corporation for amounts paid or incurred to the related party in connection with reportable transactions, and (2) the cost (including all components of the cost of goods sold) to the reporting corporation of any property acquired from the related party or transferred to the related party in connection with reportable transactions, as shall be determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion, based on any information in the knowledge or possession of the Secretary or on any information that the Secretary may choose to obtain. Thus under the bill the Secretary may conclude, in a case where the noncompliance rule applies, that claimed deductions or costs have not been sufficiently supported and may consequently disallow any amount (including all) of those claimed amounts. The committee intends that in such a case, where the IRS has been denied the requested access to records or testimony that it chooses to consider in the course of an examination, the Secretary may disregard any information or materials that have been submitted by the reporting corporation of the related party where, in the Secretary's sole discretion, such information or materials are insufficiently probative of the relevant facts.

The noncompliance rule applies with respect to all transactions with a related party whenever a reporting corporation is not designated by a related foreign person as its agent in applying sections 7602, 7603, and 7604 with respect to any IRS request or summons within the authority provided by such Code sections, in connection with any reportable transaction.

The bill also provides the IRS with authority to apply the noncompliance rule in the event that a reporting corporation and a foreign person related thereto fail to substantially comply in a timely manner with an IRS summons to produce any books, papers, records, or other data, or to take testimony, or for any other purpose authorized by section 7602 of the Code, in connection with the examination of a reportable transaction. Because the amount of the noncompliance penalty that may apply in such a case is determined largely based on the Secretary's discretion, and because the amount of any disallowance may properly be limited to the deductions or costs related to the particular records or testimony which are the subject of the summons which has not been complied with (and may in some cases be affected by other factors that the Service chooses to take into consideration), the committee anticipates that the Service may, in its discretion, choose to forego application of the penalty in de minimis cases of noncompliance.

The bill also provides the IRS with authority to apply the noncompliance rule in the event that (1) a reporting corporation fails to maintain (or cause another to maintain), any records required to be maintained under the record-maintenance requirements described above, and (2) by reason of that failure, the reporting corporation does not comply with a summons for such record (or such a summons is quashed). In such an event, the noncompliance rule may be applied to any transaction to which such records relate.

The committee intends that the noncompliance rules of the bill be applied separately with respect to each related party of a reporting corporation that is not itself related to other related parties of the reporting corporation. For example, a reporting corporation is related to two foreign corporations, and these two foreign corporations are not related to each other. In the event that the reporting corporation and one of the related parties fail to comply with a summons for the production of certain records of that related party, the noncompliance rules may be applied to all reportable transactions between the reporting corporation and that related party. However, such failure to comply will not cause the noncompliance rules to apply to reportable transactions between the reporting corporation and the other related party.

To ensure that the noncompliance rules with respect to a summons are only applied when the summons is properly issued by the IRS, the bill permits prompt judicial review of a summons (waiving the sovereign immunity and anti-injunction act defenses that would generally bar such review). The bill thus permits persons that receive a summons related to the examination of a reportable transaction to petition a federal court to quash the summons, not later than the 90th day after such summons is mailed. In the event that the recipient does not file such a petition and also fails to comply with the summons, the IRS (as under present law) may bring an action to enforce the summons. If a summons in connection with an IRS examination of any reportable transaction is subject to a timely petition to quash, the statute of limitations on the taxable year(s) at issue will be suspended during the pendency of the judicial action to quash the summons, and will expire not earlier than 90 days after the conclusion of such action.

In order to establish with finality the validity of a summons, the obligations imposed on the recipient by the summons, and the applicability of sanctions for noncompliance with the summons, a taxpayer may file a timely petition to quash the summons or defend an IRS action to enforce the summons. Under the bill, these are a taxpayer's sole methods of preventing application of the noncompliance rule for noncompliance with a summons. Therefore, if a summons is not quashed (whether because a petition to quash was unsuccessful, an action to enforce was successful, or simply because no judicial action was initiated), the noncompliance rule may be applied by the IRS irrespective of any collateral or subsequent judicial opinion (e.g., in the U.S. Tax Court) concerning the validity of the summons.

The fact that compliance with the summons would lead to the imposition of civil or criminal penalties on the reporting corporation (or a related party) under any foreign law will not constitute grounds for either quashing or refusing to enforce the summons.[2]

[2] Courts have taken several factors into consideration in determining whether an IRS summons may be enforced in a case where compliance may violate foreign civil or criminal laws. See, e.g., United States v. Vetco, Inc., 691 F.2d 1281 (9th Cir.) cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1098 (1981); United States v. First National Bank of Chicago, 699 F.2d 341 (7th Cir. 1983). Courts similarly have considered under what circumstances discovery sanctions may be appropriate where compliance with the discovery order may violate foreign civil or criminal laws. See e.g., Societe Internationale pour Participations Industrielles et Commerciales v. Rogers, 357 U.S. 197 (1958). Nothwithstanding any such cases or any factors or considerations relevant thereto, the committee intends that the fact that compliance with the summons may lead to the imposition of civil or criminal penalties on the reporting corporation (or a related party) under any foreign law will not constitute grounds for either quashing or refusing to enforce the summons.

In addition, the committee understands that courts have not yet determined whether, or to what extent, the holding of First Security Bank of Utah v. Commissioner, 405 U.S. 394 (1972), may apply to laws of other legal pronouncements made by foreign governments. For example, courts have not yet considered the validity of Rev. Rul. 82-45, 1982-1 C.B. 89 (foreign law prohibiting the payment of technical assistance fees above a stated amount does not foreclose the IRS from treating the taxpayer, under section 482, as if technical assistance fees above the stated amount were paid). No inference is intended as to the validity of that ruling. The committee intends, however, that the holding of First Security Bank of Utah v. Commissioner, even if it is determined to be applicable to the laws or legal pronouncements of foreign governments, will not support quashing or refusing to enforce the summons.

Interaction with treaties

The provisions of the bill will enable the IRS to gather the same type of information with respect to foreign-owned corporations as current law permits with respect to corporations controlled by U.S. persons. Accordingly, inasmuch as the purpose of the bill is to impose equivalent reporting obligations on U.S. corporations irrespective of capital ownership, while recognizing the unique tax administration problems presented where corporate stock is held by nonresidents, the committee believes that the provision does not discriminate against foreign-controlled U.S. corporations in violation of any treaties. If the committee should be incorrect in its technical interpretation of the interaction between these provisions and U.S. treaties, however, it does not intend that any contrary treaty provision defeat its purpose in enacting these provisions.

Report to Congress

The bill requires the IRS to report to Congress on its efforts to audit U.S. taxpayers that are subsidiaries of or otherwise related to foreign corporations. The committee expects that this report, which must be submitted to Congress within five years after these provisions take effect, will include discussions of (a) compliance with the requirements of section 6038A as expanded by the bill, (b) the availability of related-party materials requested or summoned by the IRS, (c) the quality of the examination process respecting issues involving related foreign parties, (d) the application and effectiveness of the sanctions provided by the bill, and (e) recommendations for further improvements.

Effective date

The provisions apply to taxable years of reporting corporations beginning after July 10, 1989.

4. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN SCHOLARSHIP OR FELLOWSHIP GRANTS TO NONRESIDENT ALIENS (SEC. 6404 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 873 AND 1441 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Generally under the Code, the United States imposes tax, at ordinary rates, on the taxable income of a nonresident alien individual that is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States. Generally, deductions are permitted in computing such U.S. taxable income only if and to the extent that they are connected with income which is so effectively connected.

A nonresident alien cannot use the standard deduction (sec. 63(c)(6)(B)). A nonresident alien is permitted a deduction for personal exemptions without regard to whether the deduction is connected with effectively connected income. However, a nonresident alien is generally allowed only one personal exemption unless he or she is a resident of a contiguous country or a national of the United States (sec. 873(b)). By contrast, a U.S. citizen or resident (hereinafter referred to as "U.S. person") is entitled to an exemption for him- or herself; and additional exemption for a spouse if a joint return is not made and the spouse, for the year in which the taxable year of taxpayer begins, has no gross income and is not dependent of another taxpayer; and further additional exemptions for certain dependents (sec. 151). The term "dependent" excludes a spouse and generally also excludes any individual who is not a citizen or national of the United States unless the individual is a U.S. resident or a resident of a contiguous country (sec. 152(a)(9) and (b)(3)). In addition, no joint return may be made by a husband and wife if either is at any time during the year a nonresident alien, unless one spouse is a U.S. person, and the other elects to be taxed as a U.S. resident on all of his or her worldwide income (sec. 6013(a) and (g)). Thus, while a married U.S. person whose spouse is also a U.S. person can either file a joint return claiming personal exemptions for both him- or herself and the spouse, or may file a separate return claiming personal exemptions for both where the spouse has no gross income (and may claim more exemptions if there are dependents), a married nonresident alien with U.S. effectively connected income generally must take no more than one personal exemption in all cases (unless the spouse is a U.S. person and the nonresident alien subjects his or her worldwide income to U.S. tax jurisdiction).

Under the Code, a nonresident alien is generally subject to a 30-percent tax on gross months of fixed or determinable, annual or periodical income from U.S. sources that is not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States. The payor of income subject to this gross-basis tax is generally required to collect the tax by withholding at the full 30-percent rate.

Generally gross income excludes certain amounts received as a qualified scholarship by an individual who is a candidate for a degree at an educational institution (sec. 117(a)). (Prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1986, the Code contained a broader exclusion concerning scholarship-related income.) In addition, U.S. source amounts that are received by a nonresident alien individual who is temporarily present in the United States under an F, J or M visa, and that are either (1) incident to a qualified scholarship to which section 117(a) applies (but includible in gross income), or (2) a scholarship or fellowship for study, training, or research in the United States and received from a government, a 501(c)(3) organization, or certain types of international, binational, or multinational organizations, are treated as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States and eligible for withholding at a 14-percent rate.[1] Finally, some U.S. income tax treaties provide for reductions in the U.S. tax that would otherwise be imposed under the Code on certain income of foreign persons, including the income of certain visiting foreign individuals such as scholars.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the general rule differentiating between resident aliens and U.S. citizens, on the one hand, and nonresident aliens, on the other, in the allowance of the standard deduction and personal exemption is appropriate in light of the fact that the United States exerts jurisdiction over the worldwide income of persons in the former group, but only over the U.S. income of persons in the latter group.[2] However, the committee believes that, following the changes to the scholarship exclusion rules in the 1986 Act, there may be cases where a visiting foreign recipient of a scholarship or fellowship is subject to U.S. tax on the scholarship or fellowship provided by a federal, state, or local government or public charity, yet in computing the tax on that income, the individual may be unable, as a nonresident alien, to take into account the deductions that a similarly situated U.S. person would be entitled to. The committee is concerned insofar as this may increase the cost of providing such scholarships or fellowships, or reduce the value of such scholarships or fellowships to the individual, in cases where important national policies are served by providing such scholarships and fellowships. The committee is concerned that in some cases, the visitors subject to these rules may not be residents of countries that have entered into treaties that would relieve the current U.S. tax burden under the Code, and that such treaty relief may not realistically be foreseeable in the near future.

[1] In Revenue Ruling 89-67, 1989-20 I.R.B. 4, the Service ruled that in certain circumstances, it would determine the source of income received to support or subsidize a recipient's research or study activities by reference to the residence of the payor.

The provision gives certain deductions, based on the standard deduction and multiple personal exemptions, to offset certain U.S. source gross income of visiting foreign individuals received in the form of certain scholarships and fellowships. Further, the bill provides that withholding on such income may be adjusted to take these deductions into account.

In the case of a nonresident alien individual who is temporarily present in the United States under an F, J or M visa who receives or accrues any qualified scholarship or fellowship grant during the taxable year (hereinafter referred to as a "qualified nonresident alien individual"), the provision permits that individual the benefit of certain deductions (regardless of whether those deductions are connected with income which is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States) up to the amount of the qualified scholarship or fellowship grants includible in gross income for the taxable year. Those deductions include the standard deduction and the personal exemptions allowed under the general personal exemption rules (i.e., the rules without regard to the one-exemption limitation in section 873(b)(3)), subject to two modifications. First, in determining who is a dependent of the nonresident alien, there will be no exclusion of a child or other individual, on the grounds of his or her failure to be a U.S. person or national, if that child or other individual is a member of the taxpayer's household in the United States. Second, no exemption will be allowed for a spouse unless the spouse is a member of the taxpayer's household in the United States.

As described above, the amount of the deductions allowed under the provision is limited by the amount of the nonresident alien's qualified scholarship or fellowship grants for the year. The term "qualified scholarship or fellowship grant" is defined as any amount which is includible in the gross income of the nonresident alien for the taxable year, and which is granted as a scholarship or fellowship for study, training, teaching, research, or career development in the United States by a federal, state, or local government agency, or a tax-exempt U.S. organization described in section 501(c)(3). Thus, for example, the term does not include amounts excluded from gross income under section 117(a) of the Code (e.g., certain scholarships, to the extent not exceeding tuition and fees, received by degree candidates) or under a treaty.

Finally, the bill provides that nonwithstanding the 30-percent or 14-percent statutory withholding rates that may be generally applicable to U.S. source income of a nonresident alien under the Code, the Secretary shall have authority to provide for a reduction in the amount of withholding from any qualified scholarship or fellowship grant to take into account the reduction in a grant recipient's tax liability as a result of the provision.

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

5. MODIFY DEFINITION OF PASSIVE FOREIGN INVESTMENT COMPANY WITH REGARD TO CERTAIN INCOME OF EXPORT TRADE CORPORATIONS (SEC. 6405(a) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1296 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Certain export-related income derived by a controlled foreign corporation that is an export trade corporation (ETC) is exempt from the current U.S. taxation that would otherwise be imposed under subpart F (sec. 970 of the Code). Under the special rules of subpart G, the subpart F income of an ETC is reduced by certain amounts that constitute export trade income (as defined in section 971).

No foreign corporation may qualify as an ETC unless it so qualified for a taxable year beginning prior to October 31, 1971, and has not failed to so qualify in any three consecutive years beginning after October 31, 1971 (sec. 971(a)(3)). Code provisions allowing special treatment of export-related income of Domestic International Sales Corporations (DISCs) were enacted in 1971. At that time, existing ETCs (and only existing ETCs) were permitted to continue using the rules of subpart G, and were also given the opportunity to transfer their assets (and the tax-deferred treatment of their accumulated earnings) to a DISC. In the Tax Reform Act of 1984, special provisions regarding the export-related income of Foreign Sales Corporations (FSCs) were enacted and the DISC rules were substantially modified. At that time, existing ETCs were again permitted to continue using the rules of subpart G, and were also given a time-limited opportunity to transfer their assets tax-free to a FSC or to elect FSC status. Upon such a transfer to a FSC, the tax-deferred accumulated earnings of an ETC were eligible to be treated as previously taxed income (in effect, forgiving all deferred U.S. tax on such income). No portion of the untaxed income of an ETC that continued to use the rules of subpart G could be treated as previously taxed income under the 1984 Act.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 provided special rules to end deferral of U.S. tax on income earned through certain predominantly passive foreign corporations referred to as passive foreign investment companies (PFICs). A U.S. person's share of the income of any PFIC is generally subject either to current U.S. taxation or to deferred taxation plus an interest charge attributable to the value of deferral (sec. 1291–1297). Generally, a PFIC is any foreign corporation if (1) 75 percent or more of its gross income for the taxable year consists of passive income, or (2) 50 percent or more of the average fair market value (or adjusted basis) of its assets consists of assets that produce, or are held for the production of, passive income (sec. 1296).[1] For this purpose, passive income generally is defined as any income of a kind that would be foreign personal holding company income as defined in section 954(c), with certain exceptions relating to banking, insurance, and related-party income (sec. 1296(b)). Amounts that are passive income under the PFIC rules may also constitute export trade income under section 971.

Reasons for change

In light of the fact that export trade corporations were permitted to retain their preexisting tax treatment upon the introduction of DISCs and FSCs, the committee believes that the tax benefits available to export trade corporations should be reinstated in cases where such corporations would lose those benefits through the application of the PFIC rules of present law.

Explanation of provision

The bill modifies the definition of "passive income" as that term is applied in determining whether a foreign corporation is a PFIC. Under the bill, the passive income of a foreign corporation, solely for the purpose of determining whether that foreign corporation is a PFIC, generally does not include any export trade income. The amount so excluded, however, is limited to the excess (if any) of (i) the amount by which the subpart F income of the ETC is reduced by export trade income under section 970(a), over (ii) the amount by which the subpart F income of the ETC would be reduced under section 970(a) by taking into account only such amounts of export trade income that would not constitute passive income (without regard to the provisions of the bill) under section 1296(b).

For example, assume that a foreign corporation that qualifies as an ETC for the taxable year earns a total of $325 of income, all of which is subpart F income. The $325 total includes $200 of export trade income that is also classified under present law as passive income, $75 of export trade income that is not classified under present law as passive income, and $50 of passive income that does not qualify as export trade income. The total amount of export trade income ($275) does not exceed the limitation imposed by section 970(b) on the amount of export trade income that is permitted to reduce a subpart F income. The corporation would be considered under present law to earn $250 of passive income as defined for PFIC purposes. Under the bill, such amount of passive income for

[1] In addition, stock held by a taxpayer is generally treated as stock in a PFIC if, at any time during the holding period of the taxpayer with respect to such stock, the corporation (or any predecessor) was a PFIC which was not a qualified electing fund. By contrast, if the stock was the subject of an election to be treated as a qualified electing fund with respect to the taxpayer, that stock is only treated as PFIC stock, and the taxpayer is only subject to qualified electing fund inclusions with respect to that stock, for years during which the asset or income test set forth in the text were met.

PFIC purposes would be reduced by $200, namely, the excess of (a) the $275 of export trade income that reduces subpart F income, over (b) the $75 of export trade income that is not also passive income under present law. Thus, the passive income of the ETC for PFIC purposes would be $250 less $200, or $50.

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988, for which a foreign corporation is treated as an export trade corporation.

In addition, the bill provides an ETC that is a PFIC under present law additional time to elect to be treated as a qualified electing fund (under section 1295) and to elect to defer the payment of tax on the undistributed earnings of a qualified electing fund (under section 1294). Under the bill, the time for making either such election would not expire until at least 60 days after the enactment of the bill. Thus, such an ETC may make an election under section 1295 at any time up to 60 days after the date of enactment of the bill and, accordingly, avoid any treatment as a PFIC (with respect to years beginning after December 31, 1988) as a result of its PFIC status in prior years.

In conjunction with the extension of time to make elections under sections 1295 and 1294, the bill extends the limitations period for assessing or collecting any underpayment of tax resulting from such an election. In the case of either election, under the bill, the limitations period for such purposes will expire no earlier than the day which is three years after the date on which such election is made.

6. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN LEASED PROPERTY UNDER PASSIVE FOREIGN INVESTMENT COMPANY RULES (SEC. 6405(b) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1296(e) OF THE CODE)

Generally a passive foreign investment company (PFIC) is any foreign corporation if (1) 75 percent or more of its gross income for the taxable year consists of passive income, or (2) 50 percent or more of the average fair market value (or at the election of the foreign corporation, the average adjusted bases) of its assets consists of assets that produce, or are held for the production of, passive income.[1] Passive income generally is defined as any income of a kind that would be foreign personal holding company income as defined in section 954(c), with certain exceptions relating to banking, insurance, and related-party income (sec. 1296(b)).

In 1988, the Internal Revenue Service in Notice 88-22, 1988-1 C.B. 489, provided certain guidance regarding the computation of the PFIC asset test. For purposes of this test, asset value (or basis) is determined on a gross basis, without taking into account liabilities. The average fair market values (or bases) of assets for the taxable year of the foreign corporation are the average of the values (or bases) of the assets determined as of the end of each quarterly period during the corporation's taxable year. Generally, an asset is characterized as passive if it has generated (or is reasonably expected to generate in the reasonably foreseeable future) passive income. Assets which generate both passive and nonpassive income in a taxable year are treated as partly passive and partly nonpassive assets in proportion to the relative amounts of income generated by those assets in that year.

For purposes of performing the PFIC asset test, assets in which the foreign corporation holds a leasehold interest are not taken into consideration.

Reasons for change

The committee understands that many service and certain other companies use few of their own assets in their active business operations. It is common for these companies to lease rather than buy the physical assets necessary for operations. The committee has been informed that computer and peripheral equipment are assets frequently leased in these industries.

The committee is concerned that the asset test for classification as a PFIC did not adequately reflect the business requirements of many service companies. Therefore, the committee believes it is appropriate to allow foreign corporations to account for leased equipment when performing the asset test.

Generally under the bill, any computer or related peripheral equipment with respect to which a foreign corporation is the lessee under a lease with a term of at least six months is considered to be an asset that is actually owned by such corporation for purposes of applying the PFIC asset test.[2] Thus, when applying the asset test, a foreign corporation will include the fair market value of any computer or related peripheral equipment in which it holds such a leasehold interest as of the end of each quarterly period of the corporation's taxable year. The leased asset's characterization as passive, nonpassive, or partly passive and partly nonpassive is based on whether the asset produces passive income, or is held for the production of passive income, in the same manner as assets actually owned by the corporation are so characterized.

For example, assume that at the end of each quarter of a foreign corporation's taxable year, the corporation has $100 of passive assets and is the lessee of computer or related peripheral equipment (subject to a lease term of at least six months) that has a fair market value of $200. Further, assume that the leased equipment produces active income. In this case, the average value for the taxable year of the corporation's passive assets constitutes only one-third of the average value of all of the assets of the corporation ($100 divided by $300). Therefore, the corporation would not be a PFIC under the asset test for the taxable year.[3]

As another example, consider the same facts as above, except that the corporation holds an interest in the leased assets at the end of the first quarter of its taxable year, and not at the end of the other three quarters. In this case, the average value for the taxable year of the corporation's passive assets constitutes 67 percent of the average value of all of the assets of the corporation ($100 divided by $150). Therefore, the corporation would qualify as a PFIC under the asset test for the taxable year.

Under the bill, the term computer or related peripheral equipment has the same meaning as provided in section 168(i)(2)(B). Under this section, a computer means a programmable electronically activated device which (1) is capable of accepting information, applying prescribed processes to the information, and supplying the results of these processes without human intervention, and (2) consists of a central processing unit containing extensive storage, logic, arithmetic, and control capabilities. Related peripheral equipment includes any auxiliary machine (whether on-line or off-line) which is designed to be placed under the control of the central processing unit of the computer. The term computer or related peripheral equipment specifically does not include (1) any equipment which is an integral part of other property which is not a computer, (2) typewriters, calculators, adding and accounting machines, copiers, duplicating equipment, and similar equipment, and (3) equipment of a kind used primarily for amusement or entertainment of the user.

Under the bill, certain exceptions apply to preclude foreign corporations from taking certain leased equipment into account in applying the PFIC asset test. First, in situations where the lessor of equipment is related to the lessee foreign corporation under the related person rules of section 1296(b)(2), such leased equipment will be disregarded. Second, if the lessee foreign corporation is also a sublessor of the leased equipment, such equipment will be disregarded. Finally, a foreign corporation will be precluded from taking leased equipment into consideration if a principal purpose of leasing the equipment was to avoid treatment as a PFIC.

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

7. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN STOCK HELD BY CONTROLLED FOREIGN CORPORATIONS (SEC. 6405(c) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 958 OF THE CODE)

Present law

When a controlled foreign corporation earns subpart F income, including foreign personal holding company income or any other tax haven income, the corporation's U.S. shareholders generally are subject to current U.S. taxation on their pro rata shares of the subpart F income. The term foreign personal holding company income is defined generally to include, among other things, investment-type income. The term controlled foreign corporation includes a foreign corporation more than 50 percent of either the voting power or the value of the stock of which is owned, directly, indirectly, or by attribution (within the meaning of Code section 958), by U.S. persons that each own (directly, indirectly, or by attribution) at least 10 percent of the voting power on any day during the taxable year of the foreign corporation (sec. 957).

Reasons for change

The committee understands that there may be an issue whether, and if so the extent to which, present law permits regulations to be issued regarding the definition or tax treatment of contracts that may be variable contracts, issued by controlled foreign corporations to nonresident aliens or other foreign persons. The committee believes that if present law does provide such authority, it would also be appropriate for the

[1] In addition, stock held by a taxpayer is generally treated as stock in a PFIC if, at any time during the holding period of the taxpayer with respect to such stock, the corporation (or any predecessor) was a PFIC which was not a qualified electing fund. By contrast, if the stock was the subject of an election to be treated as a qualified electing fund with respect to the taxpayer, that stock is only treated as PFIC stock, and the taxpayer is only subject to qualified electing fund inclusions with respect to that stock, for years during which the asset or income test set forth in the text were met.

[2] Renewal options are disregarded in determining whether an asset has been leased for a period of at least six months.

[3] Of course, the corporation would still have to test for PFIC status under the PFIC income test.

Treasury to have the authority to issue certain regulations under subpart F. These regulations might clarify the tax treatment under subpart F of an investment company, the shares of which are held by a controlled foreign corporation solely for the benefit of owners of such contracts, in a way that would be consistent with regulations (if any) regarding the definition or tax treatment of such contracts.

The committee does not intend, however, to take a position on (a) whether regulations should be issued under this provision or other statutory provisions, or (b) whether regulations under other statutory provisions would be authorized under present law. Thus, to the extent that such regulations are not so authorized, the bill provides no additional authority to issue them, nor does the committee intend to imply that the Treasury has no such authority.

The bill provides that, solely for purposes of subpart F, the Secretary may, under regulations, provide that stock of an investment company shall not be treated as owned by a controlled foreign corporation to the extent that stock is held solely for the benefit of the foreign persons that are owners of variable contracts issued by the controlled foreign corporation.

Either issuance or nonissuance of regulations under this provision would be consistent with the committee's intent. The committee intends that if regulations are issued, they may be limited in scope as the Secretary deems appropriate. For example, regulations need not apply to investment company stocks held for the benefit of all types of foreign persons that own contracts issued by the controlled foreign corporation, but could be limited, for example, to stock held for the benefit of one or more particular types of foreign persons, such as nonresident alien individuals. No inference is intended concerning whether (1) any controlled foreign corporation affected by any regulations is a life insurance company, (2) the income of such a controlled foreign corporation is life insurance income, or (3) any variable contracts affected by any regulations meet the definition of life insurance contract. Moreover, it is not intended that the regulatory authority granted by the provision extend to the resolution of the issues in the previous sentence; rather, this authority is limited only to the issue of ownership for purposes of subpart F if the Treasury Department, through an exercise of existing regulatory authority, should reach this issue.

The provision applies to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning after December 31, 1989.

8. EXCLUSION FOR CERTAIN OVERSEAS ALLOWANCES RECEIVED BY CERTAIN DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PERSONNEL (SEC. 6406 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 912 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Civilian officers and employees of the State Department and Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) are exempt from tax on certain amounts received as allowances or otherwise (but not amounts received as post differentials) related to their overseas assignments (sec. 912(1)(A) and (B)). The benefits entitled to tax exemption are those set forth in chapter 9 of title I of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. secs. 4081-4086), in the case of State Department officers and employees, and in section 4 of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949, as amended (50 U.S.C. sec. 403e), in the case of CIA officers and employees. Such benefits may include loans of household effects, health care, payment of certain work-related entertainment and representational expenses, and the payment of certain travel and related expenses of employees and their families, including expenses for travel and moving to and from assigned posts of duty, and travel for home leave, medical care, family visits, and the evacuation of families from dangerous foreign areas.

Beginning with Intelligence Authorization Acts for fiscal years 1982 and 1984 (Pub. Laws No. 97-89 and 98-215), the law has provided that comparable benefits could be given to civilian Defense Department employees assigned to Defense Attache Offices and Defense Intelligence Agency Liaison Offices outside the United States (10 U.S.C. sec. 1605) and to certain designated civilian and military Defense Department employees (generally National Security Agency personnel) assigned to special cryptologic activities outside the United States (section 9(b) of the National Security Agency Act of 1959, as amended (50 U.S.C. sec. 402 note)). The Code does not provide tax exemptions for these Defense Department employee benefits.

Reasons for change

Insofar as civilian Defense Department officers and employees assigned to Defense Attache Offices and Defense Intelligence Agency Liaison Offices outside the United States, and to special cryptologic activities outside the United States, may receive benefits intended to be comparable to the benefits such employees would receive were they engaged in similar activities in the employ of the State Department or the CIA, the committee believes that it is appropriate to provide tax treatment of such benefits similar to the tax treatment they would receive were such benefits received by employees of the State Department or the CIA.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides a tax exemption for those allowances and other items, comparable to the allowances and other items provided to civilian State Department and CIA employees, which are provided (under 10 U.S.C. sec. 1605 or sec. 9(b) of the National Security Agency Act of 1959, as amended) to civilian employees and officers of the Defense Department assigned to Defense Attache Offices and Defense Intelligence Agency Liaison Offices outside the United States, or to special cryptologic activities outside the United States, in cases where such allowances or other items would be exempt under current law if received by civilian State Department or CIA employees.

The provision is effective for allowances received after December 31, 1988, in taxable years ending after that date.

Subtitle E. Excise Tax Provisions

1. AVIATION EXCISE TAXES

a. Repeal of reduction in aviation-related excise taxes (sec. 6501 of the bill and sec. 4283 of the code)

Present law

The tax rates of certain of the excise taxes which fund the Airport and Airway Trust Fund (AATF) generally will be reduced by 50 percent as of January 1, 1990, because AATF appropriations for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 for airport improvement, facilities and equipment, and research, engineering and development programs were 79 percent, instead of at least 85 percent, of the amounts authorized for those fiscal years. The tax rate reductions are required under provisions of the Airport and Airway Revenue Act of 1987, because of the expressed concern by the Congress that the trust fund programs cited above were not being funded adequately.

The present AATF excise taxes are scheduled to expire after December 31, 1990.

The AATF excise tax rates which are scheduled to be reduced by 50 percent are: (1) 8 percent tax on air passenger transportation; (2) 5 percent tax on air freight; and (3) 14 cents-per-gallon tax on jet fuel used in noncommercial aviation. The 3 cents-per-gallon additional tax on gasoline used in noncommercial aviation (in addition to the basic 9 cents-per-gallon tax under sec. 4081) would be eliminated and 3 cents of the 9 cents-per-gallon gasoline tax would be refunded or credited to ultimate purchasers using the gasoline in noncommercial aviation. The $3 per person international departure tax is not scheduled to be reduced under present law.[1]

Reasons for change

The Administration proposed, in its budget recommendations, that the aviation tax reduction trigger be repealed. It also indicated, in a letter to the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, its support for increased spending for the airport improvement program, with expressed concern for capacity and security projects. The Committee on Finance understands that the Administration continues to endorse that position.

Repeal of Tax Reduction

The 1990 reduction in AATF excise tax rates is repealed. Present-law excise tax rates relating to air passenger transportation, air freight transportation, and gasoline and other fuels used in noncommercial aviation will therefore remain unchanged through 1990.

Administration Position

The Administration proposed, in its budget recommendations, that the aviation tax reduction trigger be repealed. It also indicated, in a letter to the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, its support for increased spending for the airport improvement program, with expressed concern for capacity and security projects. The Committee on Finance understands that the Administration continues to endorse that position.

Effective date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1990.

b. Modification of collection period for air passenger ticket tax (sec. 6504(a) of the bill and new sec. 6302(e) of the code)

Present law

An 8-percent excise tax is imposed on the value of air passenger transportation. Revenues collected under this and other aviation taxes are deposited in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund. This tax is effective through December 31, 1990.

The air passenger tax is billed to the customer with the charge for air transportation and is considered to be collected from the customer during the second following semi-monthly period. The tax is collected by the air carrier (or its agent) which provides the transportation. The tax must be deposited in a Federal Reserve Bank or other authorized depository within 3 banking days after the end of the semi-monthly period for which the tax is considered to be collected.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it is important to have timely deposit of tax receipts, and acceleration of the payment of AATF excise tax receipts imposes no additional cost burden on the service providers charged with collecting the tax.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, the air passenger tax collected during a semi-monthly period will be considered as collected during the first week of the second following semi-monthly period. The bill requires that the tax be deposited within 3 banking days after the end of the week for which such tax is considered to be collected.

Effective date

The provision is effective with respect to taxes considered collected for semi-monthly periods beginning after June 30, 1990.

c. Increase in international air passenger departure tax (sec. 6502 of the bill and sec. 4261(c) of the code)

Present law

The international air passenger departure tax is $3 per person. The tax is imposed when the air passenger ticket is purchased.

Revenues from this tax are deposited in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund. The tax is scheduled to expire after December 31, 1990.

Reasons for change

The cost of providing air navigation, safety, and other aviation-related services to international air passengers has more than doubled since the international air departures tax was imposed. The committee believes that this is a modest, and only partial, recovery of the costs incurred by the United States for these purposes.

Explanation of provision

The departure tax on international air passenger transportation is increased by $3 per person to $6 per person.

Effective date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1990, with respect to international departures on and after that date.

2. INTERNATIONAL DEPARTURE TAX ON SHIP PASSENGERS (SEC. 6503 OF THE BILL AND NEW SECS. 4471 AND 4472 OF THE CODE)

Present law

There are no Federal taxes or fees currently imposed on cruise or other ship passengers. Cruise ships using U.S. ports are subject to a .04 percent excise tax on the value of commercial cargo and passenger fares (sec. 4461). Revenues from this tax are deposited in the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund.

Under special rules, no harbor maintenance tax applies to cruise ships loading or unloading with respect to cruises to or from Alaska, Hawaii, or a U.S. possession, unless the Alaska, Hawaii, or U.S. possession port is only a stopover to a foreign destination.

Reason for change

The tax will meet partially the expenses incurred by the United States in providing navigation, safety and other services to cruise ships and their passengers.

Explanation of provision

The bill imposes a tax of $3 per passenger on a covered voyage on a commercial passenger vessel having berth or stateroom accommodations for more than 16 passengers that embarks from a United States port on a voyage that extends over one or more nights. The tax also is imposed on a vessel transporting passengers engaged in gambling aboard the vessel beyond the territorial sea of the United States. The tax is assessed only once for each passenger on a covered voyage, either when a passenger first embarks or disembarks in the U.S.

The tax is not imposed on a vessel on a voyage of less than 12 hours between two points in the United States, or a vessel owned and operated by a State or a political subdivision of a State.

The provision is effective on January 1, 1990.

3. EXTENSION OF THE TELEPHONE EXCISE TAX (SEC. 6505 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 4251 OF THE CODE); MODIFY COLLECTION PERIOD FOR THE TELEPHONE EXCISE TAX (SEC. 6504 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 6302 OF THE CODE); TELEPHONE TAX EXEMPTION CERTIFICATES (SEC. 6504 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 4253 OF THE CODE)

Imposition of Tax

A 3-percent excise tax is imposed on amounts paid for local and toll (long-distance) telephone service and teletypewriter exchange service. The tax is collected by the provider of the service from the consumer (business and personal service). The tax is scheduled to expire after December 31, 1990.

Collection of Tax

Under present law, the telephone tax billed to the customer in a semi-monthly period is considered to be collected from the customer during the second following semi-monthly period. Such tax must be deposited in a Federal Reserve Bank or other authorized depository within 3 banking days after the end of the semi-monthly period for which the tax is considered collected. (Rev. Proc. 76-45, 1976-2 C.B. 668).

Telephone Tax Exemption Certificates

Exemptions from the telephone excise tax are provided for international organizations, the American Red Cross, servicemen in combat zones, nonprofit hospitals and educational organizations, State and local governments, and certain communications services furnished to news services (except local telephone service to news services). Other exemptions include amounts paid for installations charges, certain calls from coin-operated telephones, and private communications systems (e.g., certain dedicated lines leased to a single business user (sec. 4253).

Under regulations, those claiming exemption are generally required to file annual exemption certificates (Treas. Reg. 49.4253-11).

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is inappropriate to permit an existing revenue source to expire when the Federal government's financing needs are great. In addition, the committee believes it is important to have timely deposit of tax receipts and that accelerating collection of the telephone excise tax imposes no additional cost burden on the service providers charged with collecting the tax.

Elimination of the requirement for certain exempt organizations to file annual exemption certificates will reduce the administrative burden of filing the exemption certificates.

Explanation of provisions

Extension of Tax

The 3-percent telephone excise tax is permanently extended.

Collection of Tax

Under the bill, the tax for a semi-monthly period is considered collected during the first week of the second following semi-monthly period. The tax is required to be deposited within 3 banking days after the end of the week for which such tax is considered to be collected.

Telephone Tax Exemption Certificates

Under the provision, those communications service recipients exempt from the tax on communications (telephone) services by reason of being a qualified international organization, nonprofit hospital, nonprofit educational organization, or a State or local government are relieved of having to file a certificate of exemption annually. Instead, such communications service recipients are granted a continuing exemption. However, should the service recipient no longer qualify for exemption or should the information on which the original exemption was based change, the service recipient must inform the service provider (who would collect the tax) within 30 days of such change in circumstances.

Effective dates

The extension of the tax is effective on January 1, 1991. The change in the collection of the tax is effective with respect to taxes considered collected for semi-monthly periods beginning after June 30, 1990. The change in filing of exemption certificates is effective to any claim for exemption made after the date of enactment. (Any annual exemption certificate effective on the date of enactment remains effective until the end of its annual period.)

4. PETROLEUM EXCISE TAX FOR OIL SPILL LIABILITY TRUST FUND (SEC. 6506 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 4611 OF THE CODE)

The Internal Revenue Code establishes an excise tax of 1.3 cents per barrel on domestic crude oil and imported petroleum products (including imported crude oil) for the purpose of funding the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund. However, the tax has not been imposed because qualified legislation authorizing expenditures from the Trust Fund has not yet been enacted.[1]

The excise tax on domestic crude oil would be imposed on the operator of any United States refinery receiving such crude oil, while the tax on imported petroleum products would be imposed on the person entering the product into the United States for consumption, use, or warehousing. If domestic crude oil were used in, or exported from, the United States before imposition of the tax on the operator of a refinery, the tax would be imposed on the user or exporter of the oil.

Repayable advances could be made to the Trust Fund from the general fund of the Treasury in a maximum outstanding amount of $500 million. The maximum amount which could be paid from the Trust Fund for any single incident is $500 million, no more than $250 million of which could be used to pay for natural resource damage claims (sec. 9509(c)). Certain costs incurred by the Federal Government for oil spill removal are authorized by the Federal Water Pollution Control Act and the Intervention on the High Seas Act, and therefore are permissible Trust Fund expenditures. Although these expenditures are subject to appropriation, they do not require the enactment of the qualified authorizing legislation which is necessary to commence collection of the 1.3-cent-per-barrel excise tax.

The Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund excise tax is scheduled to expire on December 31, 1991. The tax will terminate earlier than that date if the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that $300 million will be credited to the Trust Fund before January 1, 1992.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is important to begin to collect the petroleum excise tax to provide the necessary funds to clean up future oil spills. Because recent events have demonstrated the magnitude of such costs, the committee further believes it is appropriate to accelerate collection of the Trust Fund tax, so that funds are available to meet any significant future contingencies.

Explanation of provision

The provision modifies present law to impose the petroleum excise tax at a rate of 3 cents per barrel, and to commence collection of the tax. The balances accruing to the Trust Fund may be used for those expenditure purposes which do not require the enactment of qualified authorizing legislation under present law. Upon the enactment of qualified authorizing legislation, Trust Fund amounts will be available for additional expenditure purposes. The bill also provides that, for the purpose of making available additional expenditure purposes, qualified authorizing legislation includes S. 686, "The Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1989," as passed by the Senate on August 4, 1989. As under present law, collection of the tax will cease December 31, 1991, or earlier if the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that $300 million will be credited to the Trust Fund before that date.

Effective date

The provision authorizes the collection of the excise tax to commence on January 1, 1990, with respect to domestic crude oil received at a refinery and with respect to imported crude oil and imported petroleum products entering into the United States.

5. EXCISE TAX ON OZONE-DEPLETING CHEMICALS (SEC. 6507 OF THE BILL AND NEW SECS. 4681 AND 4682 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The use or manufacture of chemicals which deplete the earth's ozone layer is not subject to Federal tax under present law.

Reasons for change

The committee finds compelling the growing evidence of depletion of the earth's ozone layer. The committee recognizes that the United States is a signatory to the Montreal protocol in which many industrialized nations have agreed to reduce their production and consumption of ozone-depleting chemicals. The committee believes that economic incentives can enhance the conservation effort and speed the search for safe substitutes. Therefore, the committee believes it is important to complement the objectives of the Montreal protocol by taxing ozone-depleting chemicals (in proportion to the harm they cause the ozone layer) and to, thereby, permit market forces to aid the work of finding substitutes and fostering reduced use of ozone-depleting chemicals. In addition, the committee believes the revenues raised are important in an era of large Federal budget deficits.

Explanation of provision

In General

The provision assesses an excise tax on the sale or use by a producer, manufacturer, or importer of certain ozone-depleting chemicals. The amount of tax is determined by multiplying a base tax amount by an "ozone-depleting factor."

Ozone-Depleting Chemicals

Ozone-depleting chemicals include: chlorofluorocarbons ("CFCs") (which generally are used as refrigerants, foam blowing agents, and solvents) and halons. The specific chemicals subject to tax are listed below.

Ozone-depleting chemicals subject to tax:—CFC-11, CFC-12, CFC-113, CFC-114, CFC-115, halon-1211, halon-1301, and halon-2402.

The chemicals subject to tax are those identified as ozone-depleting under the Montreal protocol as in effect on the date of committee action. Subsequent changes to the list of ozone-depleting chemicals under the Montreal protocol will not change the list of chemicals subject to tax without further Congressional action.

Base Tax Amount

For calendar year 1990, the base tax amount is $1.07 per pound of ozone-depleting chemical; for 1991, the base tax amount is $1.12 per pound; for 1992, the base tax amount is $1.67 per pound; and for 1993 and beyond, the base tax amount is $3.15 per pound.

Ozone-Depleting Factor

The ozone-depleting factor reflects the potential ozone depletion which results from one kilogram of a given chemical compared to the ozone depletion which results from one kilogram of CFC-11 (trichlorofluoromethane).[1] The table below lists the ozone-depleting factors for the ozone-depleting chemicals identified in the bill.

Ozone-depleting chemical and factor:
CFC-11	1.0
CFC-12	1.0
CFC-113	0.8
CFC-114	1.0
CFC-115	0.6
Halon-1211	3.0
Halon-2402	6.0

The ozone-depleting factors are those identified in the Montreal protocol as in effect on the date of committee action. Subsequent changes to the list of ozone-depleting factors under the Montreal protocol will not change the list of ozone-depleting factors for purpose of computation of the tax without further Congressional action.

Exemptions and Reduced rate of tax for certain chemicals or certain uses 1990 exemption for production of rigid foam insulation and production of halons.—The bill provides that for calendar year 1990, the sale or use by a producer, manufacturer, or importer of halons or ozone-depleting chemicals used in the production of rigid foam insulation is exempt from the tax.

Reduced rate of tax for ozone-depleting chemicals used in the production of rigid foam insulation—The bill provides a reduced rate of tax for calendar years 1991 through 1993 for any ozone-depleting chemcial which is otherwise subject to tax and used in the production of rigid foam insulation. The tax applicable to such chemicals is determined by multiplying the otherwise applicable tax rate by the applicable percentage. The applicable percentage is 23 percent for calendar year 1991; 16 percent for calendar year 1992; and 8 percent for calendar year 1993.

Reduced rate of tax for Halon 1211, Halon 1301, and Halon 2402.—The bill provides a reduced rate of tax for calendar years 1991 through 1993 for Halon 1211, Halon 1301, and Halon 2402. The tax applicable to such chemicals is determined by multiplying the otherwise applicable tax rate by the applicable percentage. The table below represents the applicable percentages.

Halon-2402	4	2	1

Exemption from tax for feedstock chemicals. The bill provides that ozone-depleting chemicals which are used as feedstock for the manufacture or production of other ozone-depleting or non-ozone-depleting chemicals will not be subject to the tax. The committee intends that this exemption apply only to ozone-depleting chemicals used as feedstock in such a way that the ozone-depleting chemical is used and entirely consumed in the production of another chemical. If production of another chemical involves releasing an ozone-depleting chemical into the atmosphere, this exception does not apply.

Application for refund of overpayment of tax. If tax has been paid on ozone-depleting chemicals used in the production of rigid foam insulation or used in the production of another chemical at a rate higher than that required, the excess is credited or refined (without interest) to the producer of such rigid foam insulation or other chemical.

Imports

The tax applies to any taxable ozone-depleting chemical which is imported into the United States and to any product or substance imported into the United States in which a taxable ozone-depleting chemical was used in the manufacture or production. The amount of tax imposed on such imported products is the amount of tax which would have been imposed on the ozone-depleting chemicals used in the manufacture or production of the product had the product been manufactured in the United States.

For example, if each widget contains 15 ounces of CFC-11 and if in the production of each widget an additional ounce of CFC-11 escapes into the atmosphere, then the widget upon its import is taxed as though it represents one pound of CFC-11.[2] In circumstances where the importer provides insufficient information to determine the amount of ozone-depleting chemicals in a product, the Secretary shall impose a tax equal to 5 percent of the appraised value of the product.

[2] If the importer can certify to the Secretary that the imported product was manufactured with recycled ozone-depleting chemicals, the committee intends that the Secretary provide relief consistent with that provided for ozone-depleting chemicals recycled in the United States. See below for exception granted for recycling.

The bill provides that the Secretary may prescribe regulations exempting de minimis amounts of ozone-depleting chemicals from tax upon import. However, this de minimis exception does not apply with respect to any product in which any ozone-depleting chemical is used for purposes of refrigeration or air conditioning, creation of an aerosol of foam, or in the manufacture of electronic components.

The committee understands that the following commonly imported products may contain ozone-depleting chemicals or may have ozone-depleting chemicals used in their manufacture: automobiles and light trucks; home refrigerators and home freezers; home air conditioners and air conditioner compressors; video cassette recorders; radios; televisions; electronic typewriters; stereo tapes; stereo amplifiers; electronic calculators; copiers; telephones; clothes washers and dryers; microwave ovens; electronic toys and games; cameras; computers; audio tape recorders; contact lenses; lenses for glasses; sterile packaging; dialysis components; artificial limbs and joints; circuit boards; semiconductors; silicon wafers; ball bearings; polyethylene sheets; and molded plastic parts.

Exceptions

Exception for recycling.—The tax imposed does not apply to any ozone-depleting chemical which is diverted or recovered in the United States as part of a recycling process. This exception does not apply to any ozone-depleting chemical recovered by the manufacturer as part of the original manufacturing process.

Exception for exported chemicals.—The bill provides that each producer of ozone-depleting chemicals may export a percentage of annual production tax-free. The percentage permitted is equal to that percentage of the producer's 1986 production of ozone-depleting chemicals which was exported in 1986. The percentage for any year and that for 1986 is to be calculated as the ozone-depleting factor adjusted pounds of export divided by the ozone-depleting factor adjusted pounds of production. For example, if, in 1986, XYZ Company produced 100 pounds of CFC-12 (ozone-depleting factor of 1.0) and 200 pounds of CFC-113 (ozone-depleting factor of 0.8) and exported 20 pounds of each chemical, the percentage of annual production which was exported in 1986 is determined as 20 pounds multiplied by 1.0 plus 20 pounds multiplied by 0.8, divided by 100 pounds multiplied by 1.0 plus 200 pounds multiplied by 0.8, which equals 13.8 percent.[3] If, in 1990, XYZ Company produces 100 pounds of CFC-12 and 100 pounds of CFC-113 and the company may export 24.84 ozone-depleting factor adjusted pounds of ozone-depleting chemicals free of tax.[4] This means XYZ Company could export 24.84 pounds of CFC-12 free of tax, or it could export 31.05 (24.84 divided by 0.8) pounds of CFC-113 free of tax, or it could export 18 pounds of CFC-12 and 8.55 pounds of CFC-113 free of tax, or any other combination such that the ozone-depleting factor adjusted weight equals 24.84 pounds.

In addition, any additional production allowance granted by the EPA (under existing regulations) under the condition that it will be exported[5] will be exempt from the tax upon export.

Review of Tax Rates for 1993 AND BEYOND

The committee's goal is to induce conservation in the use of ozone-depleting chemicals and to speed the search for safe substitutes, as well as to raise revenue. The committee understands that with any new tax much uncertainty may surround the economic effects of the tax. Consequently, the committee invites the Treasury to monitor the economic effects of the tax and make recommendations for changes in the tax, either in chemicals subject to tax, the base rate of tax, or ozone-depleting factors. However, the committee also believes that it is important to give the marketplace some time to respond to the incentives the tax creates. Year-to-year alterations in the tax would confound the workings of the marketplace. Since the provision would raise the base tax rate from $1.67 per pound in 1992 to $3.15 per pound in 1993, any recommendations the Secretary might care to make would be most useful if transmitted to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance between April 1, 1992 and October 1, 1992. The committee also invites the Secretary to report on whether additional changes in the tax are needed to conform to the Montreal protocol if subsequent amendments are made to that agreement.

Effective date

The provision is effective for ozone-depleting chemicals sold or used after December 31, 1989. In addition, a floor stocks tax is imposed on ozone-depleting chemicals held by a person other than the manufacturer or importer for sale or use on January 1, 1990. However, the initial deposits of taxes due need not be made until April 1, 1990. A floor stocks tax is also imposed on each subsequent change in the tax rate for any taxable chemical.

6. EXCISE TAX FOR WETLANDS TRUST FUND (SEC. 6508 OF THE BILL AND NEW SECS. 4691, 4692, AND 9511 OF THE CODE)

Excise taxes are imposed under present law with respect to certain substances, such as crude oil, feedstock chemicals, and chemical derivatives. Receipts from these excise taxes are appropriated to trust funds to pay costs incurred in the cleanup of hazardous wastes, oil spills, and leaking underground storage facilities.

Internal Revenue Code section 4611 establishes an excise tax of 1.3 cents per barrel on domestic crude oil and imported petroleum products (including imported crude oil) for the purpose of funding the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund (the "Oil Spill Fund"). However, under present law, the tax will not be imposed until qualified authorizing legislation is enacted.[1] Oil Spill Fund expenditure purposes would include payment of removal costs of an oil spill and certain otherwise uncompensated claims. In addition, funds would be available to carry out specific provisions of other legislation relating to oil discharges and pollution. The Oil Spill Fund excise tax currently is scheduled to expire on December 31, 1991, or on an earlier date if the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that $300,000,000 will be credited to the Fund before January 1, 1992.

The Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund (the "Offshore Pollution Fund") is established by Title 43 U.S.C. section 1812. The Offshore Pollution Fund is financed by a fee not to exceed 3 cents per barrel on oil obtained from the Outer Continental Shelf, which is imposed on the owner of the oil when it is produced, and by monies recovered by the Fund in actions against polluters. The Offshore Pollution Fund is available to pay for offshore (and adjoining shoreline) cleanups and for damages resulting from an oil spill where the owner or operator of a vessel or offshore facility is incapable of meeting its obligation. The fee authorized by 43 U.S.C. section 1812 may be modified to insure that the Offshore Pollution Fund is maintained at a level between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000.[2]

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to provide for the imposition of excise taxes on oil and natural gas obtained from the Outer Continental Shelf in order to fund a Wetlands Trust Fund to be used to preserve, protect, enhance, and restore wetlands.

Explanation of provision

An excise tax of 3 cents per barrel is imposed on oil obtained from the Outer Continental Shelf (i.e., from offshore drilling)[3] for the purpose of financing a Wetlands Trust Fund. In addition, an excise tax of 2 cents per thousand cubic feet is imposed on natural gas obtained from the Outer Continental Shelf, also for the purpose of financing the Wetlands Trust Fund. The person who owns the oil or natural gas at the time it is produced is liable for the payment of the excise taxes imposed by the provision.

Receipts collected from excise taxes imposed under this provision will be appropriated to the Wetlands Trust Fund and made available for making expenditures to carry out the creation, restoration, protection, enhancement, and conservation of wetlands upon enactment of, and as provided in, qualified authorizing legislation substantially similar to S. 1731 of the 101st Congress, as introduced in the Senate and, if necessary, any appropriations Acts. The excise taxes provided for by this provision will expire after December 31, 1994.

The excise taxes provided for by the provision are effective on January 1, 1990.

7. ACCELERATION OF DEPOSIT REQUIREMENT FOR GASOLINE EXCISE TAX (SEC. 6509 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 6302(F) AND 6504 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Deposits of gasoline excise tax liability are made monthly or semi-monthly, depending on the amount of tax to be deposited.

[3] With this exception of percentage of exports, the committee intends to conform with the Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") regulations implementing the Montreal protocol (see, 40 CFR part 82).

[4] XYZ Company's 1990 production adjusted for the ozone-depleting factors of its products is 100 pounds multiplied by 1.0 plus 100 pounds multiplied by 0.8, which equals 180 pounds. XYZ Company's 1986 export percentage was 13.8, as determined above. Consequently, they may export 0.138 multiplied by 180 pounds, or 24.84 ozone-depleting factor adjusted pounds, free of tax.

[5] See, sec. 82.9 of the EPA regulations.

[2] Pursuant to this discretion, the fee currently is not being imposed.

[3] For purposes of the provision, the term "Outer Continental Shelf" has the meaning given such term by section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. sec. 1331(a)).

Taxpayers must make monthly deposits of tax for any month in which they are liable for more than $100 of taxes, and the monthly deposits are due by the last day of the following month. Taxpayers liable for more than $2,000 of excise taxes for any month of a calendar quarter must make semi-monthly deposits in the following quarter 9 days after the end of a semi-monthly period which ends on the 15th or last day of a month. Taxpayers who deposit by electronic wire transfers to a government depositary have until 14 days after the end of a semi-monthly period to make the transfer.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that large deposits of excise tax collections are able to make more frequent deposits of excise taxes without any harmful commercial effects.

Explanation of provision

Taxpayers which have more than $100 in any month of a calendar quarter of gasoline excise tax liability will make tax deposits four times in a month.

Nine day and 14 day depositors will make tax deposits at those same intervals after the end of the tax period, but there will be four tax periods in each month. The tax periods will end on the 7th, 14th, 21st, and last days of the month. Nine day taxpayers will deposit tax liabilities, with respect to the weekly tax periods on the 16th, 23rd, 30th days, respectively, of the same month and on the 9th day of the succeeding month. For the same tax periods, 14 day taxpayers will make their deposits on the 21st and 28th days, respectively, of the current month and on the 7th and 14th days of the succeeding month.

The following table also sets forth the payment schedules provided in the bill.

Days in tax period	9 day payers	14 day payers
1st to 7th	16th day current month	21st day current month
8th to 14th	23rd day current month	28th day current month
15th to 21st	30th day current month	7th day current month
22nd to last	9th day next month	14th day next month

Effective date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1990.

8. DEFINITION OF WHOLESALE DISTRIBUTORS OF DIESEL FUEL (SEC. 6510 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 4092 AND 4093 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The excise tax on diesel and special fuels was imposed at the producer or importer level under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA), beginning on April 1, 1988. As a result, retail distributors would not be able to purchase the fuels tax-free, and off-highway users of the fuels (e.g., business, farmers, State and local governments, and airlines) would purchase the fuels tax-paid and apply for refunds.

Congress amended the locus of tax imposition in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (TAMRA), and restored the ability of off-highway fuels users to purchase fuels tax-free.

Under OBRA, the definition of a wholesale distributor was revised to include distributors who sell taxable fuels in bulk quantities. In Notice 89-38, the Internal Revenue Service provided that a person who sells 70 percent or more of its fuel to tax-exempt users would qualify as a wholesale distributor who would be entitled to purchase and sell fuel tax free.

In the course of the legislative process in 1988, Congress intended to revise how exempt diesel fuels users could purchase tax-free fuel.

Reasons for change

There was some uncertainty about the timing of the changes that Congress was in the process of making in 1988 to the rules governing the imposition of the diesel fuel excise tax. The amendment is intended to make administrative allowances for dealers and distributors for the period from April 1, 1988, through December 31, 1988.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that a sale of taxable fuel by a registered producer to a qualified person shall be exempt from the tax imposed by section 4091. A qualified person is liable for tax on its sales of taxable fuel for uses which are not described as exempt uses in section 4093(c), i.e., diesel powered trains, aircraft, and certain bus uses, as that provision was in effect on April 1, 1988, and aviation fuel sold for use, or used as, supplies for vessels or aircraft.

The term qualified person means any person who (1) elects to be treated as a qualified person, and (2) who meets the definition of wholesale distributor as in effect on January 1, 1989, for the purposes of section 4092(b). Section 4101 shall not apply to any qualified person.

Effective date

The provision is effective as if included in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

9. REDUCTION IN OCCUPATIONAL TAX ON SMALL RETAIL ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE DISTRIBUTORS (SEC. 6511 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 5121 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The occupational tax on retail dealers which sell alcoholic beverages is $250 per year. The occupational tax was increased from $54 per year in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, and became effective on January 1, 1988.

Reasons for change

The committee has learned that the $250 retail occupational tax is too high for certain small retail dealers, and the change is made to provide a slightly more articulated structure of occupational taxes which recognizes the proportionate burden of the tax on different size business.

Explanation of provision

The provision reduces the occupational tax on certain retail dealers which sell alcoholic beverages from $250 to $150 per year. The reduction applies to a dealer with annual gross receipts from the sale of alcoholic beverages less than $250,000 and in which at least one-third of the alcoholic beverages sold are consumed on the premises of the dealer.

Effective date

The amendment providing for a reduced occupational tax for certain small alcoholic dealers is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

10. PROHIBITION ON ASSESSMENTS OR COLLECTIONS OF OCCUPATIONAL TAX FOR TAXABLE PERIODS BEGINNING BEFORE JULY 1, 1985 (SEC. 6512 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 5121 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The occupational tax on retail establishments which sell alcoholic beverages is $250 per year. The occupational tax was increased from $54 per year in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, and became effective on January 1, 1980.

Since the increase in the occupational tax and transfer of responsibility for administration of alcohol taxes to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF), enforcement activities have been intensified in a systematic manner. As a result, some taxpayers were located who had not paid occupational taxes for a number of years, some for a large number of years. Many taxpayers accused of tax delinquency claim to have not been aware of the existence of the occupational tax. Nevertheless, they have been assessed for back taxes plus interest and penalties on the back taxes.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that a three-year statute of limitations should apply.

Explanation of provision

The bill establishes that payments due on unpaid occupational taxes arising from taxable periods beginning before July 1, 1985, will not be pursued. If such tax—due from taxable periods before July 1, 1985—was collected after December 31, 1987, the amount shall be credited or refunded.

Effective date

The proposal is effective on the date of enactment.

11. ALLOW EXPENDITURES FROM THE AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND FOR ESSENTIAL AIR SERVICES (SEC. 6513 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 9502 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Excise tax receipts appropriated to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund (AATF) may be spent only for statutory purposes specified in section 9502 of the Internal Revenue Code. Generally, these purposes are (1) airport improvement, which includes airport development and planning, noise abatement at airports, and enhancing airport capacity; (2) airway systems improvement, which includes air navigation and communications facilities and equipment, and instrument landing systems; (3) portions of administrative expenses which are attributable to activities under points (1) and (2); and (4) research, engineering and development, and demonstrations, which include projects relating to such activities as air traffic control, air navigation, aviation weather, aviation medicine, aircraft safety, environmental problems, and human factors.

Section 419 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended, provides for subsidization of essential air services to an eligible point which is more than 45 highway miles from an airport hub and which has lost what is determined by the Secretary of Transportation to be essential air service. The Secretary is authorized to provide a reasonable amount of compensation to an air carrier which is selected to provide air services to an eligible point. Guidelines for determining compensation are to "include expense elements based upon representative costs of air carriers providing scheduled air transportation of persons, property, and mail, using aircraft of the type determined by the Secretary to be appropriate for providing such service."

Reasons for change

The Committee believes that Airport and Airway Trust Fund expenditure purposes should reflect current provisions in the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended to date.

Explanation of provision

The bill amends the expenditure purposes of the Airport and Airway Trust Fund to include the essential air services program which is authorized in section 419 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended.

Effective date

The provision applies to obligations incurred in fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1989.

12. PROVIDING TOLERANCE LIMITS FOR BLENDING OF GASOHOL (SEC. 6514 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 4081 OF THE CODE)

Gasohol blenders which produce a blend containing 10 percent alcohol and 90 percent gasoline may receive a credit of refund of 6 cents per gallon of the 9 cents per gallon gasoline excise tax which is dedicated to the Highway Trust Fund.

Blenders have found in practice that it is difficult to achieve precisely the 10 percent alcohol content in a gasohol blend because of (1) mechanical imprecision in metering alcohol into a tankload of gasoline which can occur because the calibration of dispensing equipment may have become inexact during usage and (2) cut-off valves which do not respond instantaneously to mechanical or electronic signals to cease dispensing.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that providing an allowance for error in mechanical and electronic delivery and blending devices recognizes the imprecision that characterizes those aspects of the gasohol industry.

Explanation of provision

A range of tolerance of plus or minus one-tenth of one percent (+/− 0.1%) is considered as meeting the requirements of a gasohol blend of 10 percent alcohol, so long as over a reasonable period of time the average ratio of alcohol to gasoline is 10.0 percent. The Secretary is instructed to provide regulations governing the administration of this provision.

Effective date

The provision is effective on January 1, 1990.

13. REFUND PROCEDURE FOR GASOLINE USED ON FARMS BY CROP DUSTERS (SEC. 6515 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 6420 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Crop dusters, who make aerial applications to farmers' crops, do not have to pay the excise tax on gasoline because the gasoline is not used on highways. In order to avoid payment of the gasoline tax, however, crop dusters must obtain a waiver from the farmer which provides that the farmer does not want the excise tax exemption and that the crop duster may claim it, even though the off-highway use took place on the farmers' land.

Crop dusters have found this procedure to be both burdensome and cumbersome, and have sought relief in favor of a process which allows them to claim an exemption for off-highway gasoline use directly without having to involve farmers in the process.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that allowing crop dusters to apply for gasoline refunds directly will simplify administration of the gasoline tax for crop dusters, farmers, and the Internal Revenue Service.

Explanation of provision

The provision will allow crop dusters to apply for gasoline tax refunds or purchase tax-free gasoline for off-highway farm use in aerial applications without having first to receive a waiver from a farmer.

Effective date

The provision applies to gasoline purchased after December 31, 1989.

14. ALCOHOL FUELS CREDIT EXTENDED TO PRODUCTION OF ETBE (SEC. 6516 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 40 OF THE CODE)

Present law and background

Ethanol and methanol used in a mixture with gasoline or diesel or special fuels are eligible for a tax credit of 60 cents per gallon. The credit may be taken by a manufacturer who sells the alcohol for use as a fuel or uses the alcohol himself as a fuel. Alcohol qualifying for the credit must be at least 190 proof and produced from substances other than petroleum, natural gas, or coal (including peat). A reduced credit of 45 cents per gallon is allowed for alcohol at least 150 proof but less than 190 proof. Adding any denaturant to alcohol is not treated as production of a gasohol mixture. The alcohol fuel credit and the reduced excise tax rates on gasohol mixtures may not be taken with respect to the same gallon of alcohol.

ETBE (ethyl tertiary butyl ether) has been developed for use as an alternative blending agent with gasoline and special fuels to produce an efficient and environmentally benign fuel mixture.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that serious concerns about the dangers of environmental deterioration and the increasing U.S. dependence on imported oil require it to make available existing incentives to new technologies.

Explanation of Provision

Manufacturers of ETBE for use in making mixtures with gasoline, diesel, and special fuel are eligible for the 60 cents per gallon alcohol credit. The credit is not available to blenders, and ETBE fuel mixtures are not eligible for the 6 cents per gallon excise tax credit or refund available for qualified gasohol mixtures.

Effective date

The amendment applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

15. ELIMINATE EXCISE TAX ON INACTIVATED POLIO VACCINE (SEC. 6517(a) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 4132 OF THE CODE)

An excise tax is imposed on the sale of a taxable vaccine by a manufacturer, producer, or importer of such vaccine (sec. 4131). Four vaccines are subject to excise tax at different rates including polio vaccine which is subject to a tax of 29 cents per dose.

The net revenues received from the excise tax on vaccines are deposited into the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund. Amounts in the trust fund are available, as provided through appropriations, for payment of compensation for vaccine-related injury or death through the National Vaccine Injury Compensation program. In particular, injuries or death resulting from anaphylaxis or anaphylatic shock of which the first mainfestation occurs within 24 hours of the administration of inactivated polio vaccine (IPV) may be eligible for compensation under the program.

Reasons for change

The committee understands that the risk of injury resulting from the administration of IPV is significantly less than from other types of polio vaccine. Therefore, the committee believes that the exise tax on IPV should be eliminated. However, the committee recognizes the importance of maintaining the funding level in the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund and assuring that the burden of the excise tax is allocated fairly among different types of vaccines. Thus, the elimination of tax on IPV is effective only upon the elimination of IPV from the list of vaccines for which compensation may be payable under the National Vaccine Injury Compensation program.

Explanation of provision

Inactivated polio virus vaccine is excluded from the definition of polio vaccine for purposes of the excise tax on vaccines.

Effective date

The provision is effective for vaccine sold on or after the date upon which any injuries or death resulting from the administration of IPV on and after such date are no longer eligible for compensation under terms of the National Vaccine Injury Compensation program.

16. PERMIT APPROPRIATIONS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES FROM THE VACCINE INJURY COMPENSATION TRUST FUND (SEC. 6517(b) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 9510 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Amounts equivalent to the net revenues received in the Treasury from the excise tax imposed on certain vaccines (sec. 4131) are appropriated to the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund. Amounts from the Trust Fund are available, as provided in appropriations Acts, for the payment of compensation for vaccine-related injury or death.

Explanation of provision

The provision permits amounts (but not to exceed $6 million annually) from the Trust Fund to be available, as provided in appropriations Acts, for the payment of administrative expenses of the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program. The provision is effective for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1989; actual payments are subject to the enactment of authorizing appropriations legislation.

Subtitle F. Certain Other Provisions

A. Like-kind exchanges: Restrict certain like-kind exchanges involving related parties (sec. 6601 of the bill and sec. 1031 of the Code)

An exchange of property, like a sale, generally is a taxable transaction. However, no gain or loss is recognized if property held for productive use in a trade or business or for investment is exchanged solely for property of a "like-kind" which is to be held either for productive use in a trade or business or for investment (sec. 1031).

If related parties engage in a like-kind exchange that qualifies for nonrecognition treatment under section 1031, a subsequent disposition of the property by the transferee generally will not affect the nonrecognition treatment of the original exchange. In contrast, present law prevents the use of related party sales to avoid current recognition of gain in the case of installment sales. Under section 453 (relating to the installment method of reporting gain), if an installment sale between related parties is followed by certain dispositions of the property by the transferee, the gain reportable by the original seller will be accelerated.

Reasons for change

Because a like-kind exchange results in the substitution of the basis of the exchanged property for the property received, related parties have engaged in like-kind exchanges of high basis property for low basis property in anticipation of the sale of the low basis property in order to reduce or avoid the recognition of gain on the subsequent sale. Basis shifting also can be used to accelerate a loss on retained property. The committee believes that if a related party exchange is followed shortly thereafter by a disposition of the property, the related parties have, in effect, "cashed out" of the investment, and the original exchange should not be accorded nonrecognition treatment.

If a taxpayer exchanges property with a related party (as defined for purposes of sec. 267) and the taxpayer would otherwise be eligible for nonrecognition treatment with respect to the exchange of such property under section 1031, and within two years of the date of the last transfer which was part of the exchange, either the related party disposes of such property or the taxpayer disposes of the like-kind property received in the exchange from the related party, then the original exchange will not qualify for nonrecognition under section 1031. Any gain or loss not recognized by the taxpayer as of the date of the original exchange will, subject to the loss limitation rules of section 267, be recognized as of the date of the subsequent disposition. Adjustments to the basis of the properties involved in the exchange also will be made as of the date of the subsequent disposition.

A disposition of the property will not invalidate the nonrecognition treatment of the original exchange if such disposition is due to the death of either party or the involuntary conversion of the property (within the meaning of section 1033), provided that the original exchange occurred before the threat or imminence of the conversion. A disposition also will not invalidate the nonrecognition treatment of the original exchange if it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that neither the exchange nor the disposition had as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of Federal income tax. It is intended that the non-tax avoidance exception generally will apply to: (i) a transaction involving an exchange of undivided interests in different properties that results in each taxpayer holding either the entire interest in a single property or a larger undivided interest in any of such properties; (ii) dispositions of property in nonrecognition transactions; and (iii) transactions that do not involve the shifting of basis between properties.

A disposition includes indirect dispositions of the property, such as by means of the disposition of the stock of a corporation or interests in a partnership that owns the property.

Nonrecognition will not be accorded to any exchange which is part of a transaction or series of transactions structured to avoid the purposes of the related party rules. For example, if a taxpayer, pursuant to a prearranged plan, transfers property to an unrelated party who then exchanges the property with a party related to the taxpayer within two years of the previous transfer in a transaction otherwise qualifying under section 1031, the related party will not be entitled to nonrecognition treatment under section 1031.

The running of the two-year holding period will be suspended during any period with respect to which a party's risk of loss with respect to the property is substantially diminished.

Effective date

The provision applies to transfers after July 10, 1989, other than transfers pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on July 10, 1989 and at all times thereafter before the transfer. For this purpose, a written contract which, on July 10, 1989, and at all times thereafter before the transfer, obligates the taxpayer to transfer the property to another party will not fail to qualify as a binding contract solely because it provides in the alternative for an exchange or a sale, or solely because the property to be received in the exchange was not identified on or before July 10, 1989.

B. Modifications to the alternative minimum tax (sec. 6611 of the bill and secs, 53, 55–59 of the code)

Under present law, taxpayers are subject to an alternative minimum tax which is payable, in addition to all other tax liabilities, to the extent that it exceeds the corporation's regular income tax liability. The tax is imposed at a flat rate of 21 percent (20 percent in the case of corporations) on alternative minimum taxable income in excess of a phased-out exemption amount. Alternative minimum taxable income is the taxpayer's taxable income increased by the taxpayer's tax preferences and adjusted by determining the tax treatment of certain items in a manner which negates the exclusion or deferral of income resulting from the regular tax treatment of these items.

Adjustments and preferences are provided for accelerated depreciation, mining exploration and development costs, certain long-term contracts, pollution control facilities, certain installment sales, certain itemized deductions, research expenses and circulation expenses of individuals, Merchant Marine Capital Construction Funds, special insurance deductions, percentage depletion, excess intangible drilling costs over 65 percent of oil and gas income, certain debt reserves of financial institutions, tax-exempt interest on certain newly issued private activity bonds, and charitable deductions of appreciated property.

In addition, in computing corporate alternative minimum taxable income, for taxable years beginning before 1990, alternative minimum taxable income is increased by one-half of the amount by which the corporation's pre-tax book income exceeds the corporation's alternative minimum taxable income (determined without regard to this adjustment and without regard to net operating losses. Book income generally is the amount that the corporation discloses on its financial statements prepared for creditors, shareholders, regulatory purposes, and so forth.

For taxable years beginning after 1989, the adjustment for book income no longer applies, and, instead, alternative minimum taxable income is increased by 75 percent of the amount by which adjusted current earnings (ACE) exceed alternative minimum taxable income (determined without regard to this adjustment and without regard to net operating losses). In general, adjusted current earnings means alternative minimum taxable income as computed above with additional adjustments. These adjustments generally follow the rules presently applicable to corporations in computing their earnings and profits.

Also, net operating losses, foreign tax credits, and investment tax credits cannot be used to offset, in the aggregate, more than 90 percent of the pre-foreign tax credit tentative minimum tax which would otherwise be imposed.

Where a taxpayer pays the alternative minimum tax, the amount of tax paid (to the extent attributable to timing differences with the regular tax) is allowed as a credit against the regular tax in future years. This credit (known as the minimum tax credit) cannot be used to reduce tax below the tentative minimum tax in subsequent years.

Reasons for change

The Committee bill makes several modifications to improve and simplify the alternative minimum tax.

Explanation of provisions

The committee bill makes the following changes to the alternative minimum tax:

(1) The dividends-received deduction under ACE is extended to dividends (others than 100-percent dividends) received from 20-percent owned corporations (as defined in sec. 243(c)(2)).

(2) Gain on installment sales with respect to which interest is paid at the tax underpayment rate is reported on the installment method for adjusted current earnings purposes because appropriate interest is being paid for the right to defer payment of the tax.[1]

(3) The bill provides that for corporate alternative minimum tax arising in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989, the entire amount of alternative minimum tax (rather than only the amount of tax attributable to deferral preferences) may be taken into account in computing the amount of the alternative minimum tax credit available in future years.

(4) The bill provides that the preference for gifts of appreciated property will not apply to gifts made during the taxpayer's taxable year beginning in 1990. (The preference will continue to apply to gifts made in taxable years beginning after 1990).

Effective date

Except as otherwise described above, the provisions apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

C. Accounting provisions

1. LONG-TERM CONTRACTS

a. Repeal of the completed contract method of accounting for long-term contracts (sec. 6621(a) of the bill and sec. 460 of the Code)

Present law

Taxpayers engaged in the production of property under a long-term contract generally must compute income from the contract under either the percentage of completion method or the percentage of completion/capitalized cost method. However, exceptions to these required accounting methods are provided for certain construction contracts of small businesses and certain home construction contracts.

Under the percentage of completion-capitalized cost method, a taxpayer generally must take into account 90 percent of the items under the contract under the percentage of completion method. The remaining 10 percent of the items under the contract must be taken into account under the taxpayer's normal method of accounting (e.g., the completed contract method of accounting). Exceptions to the 90/10 requirement are provided for certain ship construction contracts (40 percent under the percentage of completion method and 60 percent under the taxpayer's normal method of accounting) and certain residential construction contracts other than home construction contracts (70 percent under the percentage of completion method and 30 percent under the taxpayer's normal method of accounting).

[1] In another provision of this bill, the regular tax treatment of installment sales of timeshares and residential lots by C corporations has been changed to provide for an interest charge at the tax underpayment rate for the right to defer the payment of tax on income from such sales.

Explanation of proposal

The percentage of completion-capitalized costs method of accounting for long-term contracts would be repealed. The present-law special rules and exceptions for certain construction contracts of small businesses, qualified ship contracts, home construction contracts and residential construction contracts would be retained.

Effective date

The proposal would apply to contracts entered into on or after July 11, 1989. However, the proposal would not apply to any contract entered into pursuant to a written bid or proposal submitted by a taxpayer to the other party to the contract before July 11, 1989, if the bid or proposal could not have been revoked or amended by the taxpayer at any time during the period after July 10, 1989, and ending on the date that the contract was entered into.

b. Modification of the percentage of completion method of accounting for long-term contracts and study of the treatment of long-term contracts (sec. 6621(b) of the bill and sec. 460 of the Code)

Taxpayers engaged in the production of property under a long-term contract must compute income from the contract under either the percentage of completion method or the percentage of completion-capitalized cost method. Exceptions to these required accounting methods are provided for certain construction contracts of small businesses and certain home construction contracts.

Under the percentage of completion method a taxpayer must include in gross income for any taxable year an amount that is based on the product of (1) the gross contract price and (2) the percentage of the contract completed as of the end of the taxable year. The percentage of the contract completed as of the end of a taxable year is determined by comparing costs incurred with respect to the contract as of the end of the year with the estimated total contract costs. In addition, under the percentage of completion method, costs allocable to the contract generally are taken into account for the taxable year in which incurred.

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned that the percentage of completion method of accounting may require taxpayers to recognize income under a long-term contract even though little, if any, progress has occurred in manufacturing or constructing the items required to be provided under the contract. For example, the committee is concerned that under the percentage of completion method of accounting, the mere delivery of materials or supplies that are to be used in manufacturing or constructing items under a long-term contract generally results in the recognition of income under the contract. To address this concern, the committee believes that taxpayers should be allowed to elect to postpone the recognition of income under a long-term contract and the reduction of costs allocable to the contract until the first taxable year as of the end of which at least 15 percent of the estimated total contract costs have been incurred.

In addition, the committee believes that the Treasury Department should be required to study the proper treatment of long-term contracts for Federal income tax purposes and to report the results of the study to the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee by February 28, 1990.

Explanation of provisions

Modification of the Percentage of Completion Method of Accounting for Long-Term Contracts

For purposes of the percentage of completion method of accounting for long-term contracts, a taxpayer may elect not to recognize income under a long-term contract and not to take into account any costs allocable to such long-term contract for any taxable year if as of the end of the taxable year less than 15 percent of the estimated total contract costs have been incurred. For the first taxable year in which the 15-percent threshold is satisfied, all costs that have been incurred as of the end of the taxable year are to be taken into account in determining the percentage of the contract that has been completed and in determining the amount of allowable deductions under the contract.

The election not to recognize income under a long-term contract and not to take into account any costs allocable to such contract until the first taxable year as of the end of which at least 15 percent of the estimated total contract costs have been incurred is to apply for purposes of the look-back method,[1] in determining alternative minimum taxable income, and in determining adjusted current earnings under the alternative minimum tax. The election is not to apply, however, in determining whether an item normally requires more than 12 calendar months to complete for purposes of the definition of a long-term contract or in determining the production period for the allocation of interest.

The election is to apply to all long-term contracts of a taxpayer that are entered into during the taxable year that the election is made any subsequent taxable year that the election is in effect.[1a] The election, however, is not to apply to any long-term contract with respect to which the percentage of completion method of accounting is used only with respect to a portion of the items under the contract or with respect to which a simplified method of cost allocation is used. Once made, the election may be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Study of the Treatment of Long-term Contracts

The Treasury Department is required to study the revenue realization method of accounting for long-term contracts and possible improvements to the percentage of completion method of accounting for long-term contracts. A report on the results of the study are to be submitted to the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee by February 28, 1990.

Effective date

The provision applies to contracts that are entered into after December 31, 1989.

2. TREATMENT OF FRANCHISES, TRADEMARKS, AND TRADE NAMES (SEC. 6622 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1253(d) OF THE CODE)

Present law

A taxpayer that purchases an intangible asset (such as a patent, know-how, or a contract right) is generally allowed a deduction for the purchase price over a period no shorter than the useful life of the asset. If the life is not determinable or is perpetual, no deduction is generally permitted. The useful life of an asset is a question of fact. If payments are made on a recurring basis over the life of an asset in a manner that does not distort income (e.g., contingent payments made under a fixed formula for the life of a asset), a deduction may be allowed as the payments are made.[b]

A taxpayer that leases an asset and pays continuing rents or royalties (e.g., a recurring annual percentage of sales) is generally allowed a deduction as the rents or royalties are paid. If the lessee makes a payment of an initial fixed sum at the start of the lease, a deduction is generally allowed for the payment over the life of the lease. The life of the lease is also a question of fact.

Section 1253(d)(2) of the Code provides special rules for fixed-sum amounts to acquire a franchise, trademark, or trade name, in cases where the transferor is required to treat the payment as ordinary income (i.e., as similar to a lease payment) rather than as capital gain (i.e., as a sale payment). In the case of a single payment made in discharge of a fixed-sum amount, section 1253(d)(2)(A) permits such payment to be deducted ratably over no more than 10 taxable years, regardless of the life of the asset. As interpreted by the Internal Revenue Service,[2] this provision also applies to a franchise that is transferred by a franchise to another person, even though the transfer is considered the sale made in discharge of a fixed-sum amount, section 1253(d)(2)(B) allows a deduction as the payments are made provided the payments are approximately equal and are made over the period of the transfer agreement or over a period of more than 10 taxable years.

Generally, amounts allowed as a deduction that reduce the basis of assets are recaptured as ordinary income if the asset is disposed of for an amount in excess of the reduced basis. Amounts allowed as a deduction under section 1253(d)(2) reduce basis under present law. However, it is unclear whether such deductions are required by the Code to be recaptured as ordinary income on disposition of the asset. It is also unclear to what extent judicially developed

[1] Consequently, in allocating income under the contract on the basis of actual contract price and actual contract costs for purposes of the look-back method, costs are not to be taken into account for any taxable year if as of the end of the taxable year less than 15 percent of the actual total contract costs have been incurred. In addition, unlike present law, deductions under a contract are to be allocated to a different taxable year for purposes of the look-back method if the first taxable year of the close of which 15 percent of the total actual contract costs have been incurred differs from the first taxable year as of the close of which 15 percent of the total estimated contract costs have been incurred.

[1a] It is anticipated that the Treasury Department will provide guidance on the time and manner of making the election. In addition, it is anticipated that a taxpayer will be required to obtain the consent of the Internal Revenue Service in order to discontinue the use of the election for any taxable year for contracts entered into during such year and any subsequent year.

tax-benefit principles may require recapture.

Section 1253(d)(1) provides special rules for the deduction of certain contingent amounts that are paid or incurred on account of the transfer of a franchise, trademark, or trade name. Under these rules, any amount paid or incurred for the transfer, sale, or other disposition of a franchise, trademark, or trade name that is contingent on the productivity, use, or disposition of the asset transferred is allowed as an ordinary and necessary business expense deduction. The transferor of the franchise, trademark, or trade name must treat such amount as an amount that is received from the sale of property that is not a capital asset (sec. 1253(c)).

Section 167(r), as added to the Code by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, provides that no depreciation or amortization deduction is permitted for costs of acquiring trademarks or trade names. In addition, several courts have held that costs of creating or acquiring trademarks or trade names are not amortizable on the grounds that such assets are indistinguishable from goodwill and generally do not have a determinable useful life.[3]

Reasons for change

The committee believes that permitting a deduction for the cost of acquiring a franchise, trademark, or trade name over a period that is no longer than 10 years may be too favorable for franchises, trademarks, and trade names that in many instances may have a perpetual of indefinite useful life.

Consequently, in the case of fixed-sum payments, the committee believes that the present-law 10-year rule is appropriate only in the case of a transfer where the fixed-sum amount is de minimis (for this purpose, under $100,000). In case of contingent payments, the committee believes it is appropriate to permit a deduction for such payments only if the payments are made over the period that the use of the franchise, trademark, or trade name occurs and only if the payments are made in a manner that does not distort income. The committee is concerned that some taxpayers may be deducting relatively short-term or front-loaded contingent payments in the year of payment rather than over the period that the use of the franchise, trademark, or trade name occurs.

Finally, the committee believes that all payments made on account of the transfer of a franchise, trademark, or trade name other than serial contingent payments that are allowed as a deduction for the taxable year in which paid or incurred should be subject to the recapture rules that generally apply upon the disposition of an asset.

The bill modifies the special rules that apply to the deduction of fixed-sum payments and contingent payments that are made on account of the transfer of a franchise, trademark, or trade name. First, the bill repeals the special treatment accorded payments in discharge of a fixed-sum amount where the fixed-sum amount for any transaction exceeds $100,000. This repeal applies regardless of whether the payments are made to a franchisor that is required to treat the payments as ordinary income by reason of section 1253(a) or to any other person. For purposes of determining whether the $100,000 threshold has been exceeded, all payments that are part of the same transaction (or a series of related transactions) are aggregated.

In addition, the bill modifies the rules that allow a deduction for contingent amounts that are paid or incurred on account of the transfer of a franchise, trademark, or trade name. Under the bill, a deduction is allowed for contingent amounts only if (1) the contingent amounts are paid as part of a series of payments that are payable at least annually throughout the term of the transfer agreement,[4] and (2) the payments are substantially equal in amount (i.e., the agreement requires a continuing payment of a substantially equal amount annually throughout an unspecified period over which the use of the property will occur) or are payable under a fixed formula (i.e., a formula that provides for payment of an unvarying percentage of receipts over the entire term of the transfer agreement).

Any fixed-sum or contingent amount that is not deductible under the foregoing rules is chargeable to capital account and is to be amortized over the useful life of the franchise, trademark, or trade name, to the extent otherwise allowed under present law.[5] Alternatively, a taxpayer may elect to amortize certain fixed-sum payments and contigent payments that are chargeable to capital account and that are part of the same transaction (or a series of related transactions) over a 20-year period that begins with the taxable year in which the transfer occurs. The fixed-sum payments that are eligible for 20-year amortization are to include only those payments that would be deductible under section 1253(d)(2) but for the $100,000 limitation.

The bill also provides that fixed-sum amounts that are allowed as a deduction under the special rules of section 1253(d)(2) and amounts with respect to which an amortization deduction is allowed are subject to recapture as ordinary income on disposition of the franchise, trademark, or trade name. No inference is intended as to the recapture requirements of prior law.

The term of the transfer agreement and the period of amortization is to be determined by taking into account all renewal options and any other period for which the parties reasonably expect the agreement to be renewed. No inference is intended as to the term of the transfer agreement or the period of amortization under prior law.

Finally, the bill repeals section 167(r). However, no inference is intended as to whether amortization or depreciation may be taken with respect to trademarks and trade names in the absence of that provision. It is expected that no deduction will be allowed for any amount chargeable to capital account for an asset that is indistinguishable from a payment for goodwill or, except as otherwise permitted under the provision, for amount that is payment for an asset with an indeterminate useful life.

The provision applies to transfers that occur after October 2, 1989, unless pursuant to a binding written contract in effect on that date and at all times thereafter until the transfer occurs.

3. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS RECEIVED AS A RESULT OF CROP LOSSES DUE TO DROUGHT CONDITIONS (SEC. 6623 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 451(d) OF THE CODE)

Present law

A cash method taxpayer who receives insurance proceeds as a result of the destruction of, or damage to, crops may elect to include the proceeds in income for the taxable year following the year in which the destruction or damage occurs if, under the taxpayer's practice, income from such crops would have been included for a year following the year in which the destruction or damage occurred. For this purpose, payments received under the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended, or Title II of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988, as a result of the destruction of, or damage to, crops caused by drought, flood, or other natural disaster or the inability to plant crops because of such natural disaster are treated as insurance proceeds received as a result of the destruction of, or damage to, crops.

Reasons for change

The committee understands that there is no significant economic difference between payments received under the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 and payments received under the Agricultural Act of 1949 or Title II of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988. The committee therefore believes that they should be treated in the same manner.

Explanation of provision

Payments received under the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989 (P.L. 101-82) are treated in the same manner as payments received under the Agricultural Act of 1949 or Title II of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988.

Effective date

The provision applies to payments received before, on, or after the date of enactment.

4. MODIFY TREATMENT OF DISCHARGE OF FARM INDEBTEDNESS FOR CERTAIN SOLVENT FARMERS (SEC. 6624 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 198(g) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Gross income generally includes income from the discharge of indebtedness (sec. 61(a)(12)). If an insolvent taxpayer realizes income from discharge of indebtedness, however, the income is excluded and certain tax attributes of the taxpayer (including items such as net operating loss carryovers and basis in property) generally are reduced by the excluded amount. The exclusion is limited to the amount by which the taxpayer is insolvent. If an insolvent taxpayer's discharge of indebtedness income (not in excess of the amount by which the taxpayer is insolvent) exceeds these tax attributes, the excess is forgiven, i.e., is not includible in gross income (sec. 108).

In the case of a solvent taxpayer who realizes income from the discharge by a "qualified person" of "qualified farm indebtedness," [1] the taxpayer may exclude from [3] See, e.g., Renziehausen v. Lucas, 280 U.S. 287 (1930); Norwich Pharmacal Co., 30 B.T.A. 326 (1934); H.M. Stiles, 26 T.C.M. 501 (1967); see also, Illinois Cereal Mills, Inc., 46 T.C.M. 1001 (1983).

[4] The term of the transfer agreement for this purpose is the entire period over which the franchise, trademark, or trade name, or rights to use or benefit from the franchise, trademark, or trade name, are transferred. For example, if a trademark is transferred for an unlimited period pursuant to an agreement that requires contingent payments for a limited period, the term of the transfer agreement is the entire period for which the trademark is transferred and not the period over which contingent payments are to be made. In such a case, the contingent payments would not be deductible under section 1253(d)(1).

[5] Contingent payments that are not deductible under the foregoing rules are chargeable to capital account for the taxable year in which paid or incurred.

gross income an amount of such discharge income not in excess of the sum of the taxpayer's loss and credit carryovers and the taxpayer's basis in property held for use in a trade or business or for the production of income. If there is any remaining discharge of indebtedness income after the taxpayer has reduced these tax attributes, income will be recognized.

The exclusion of discharge of indebtedness income generally is not limited in cases of bankruptcy. Any capital gain realized by a taxpayer, however, is not excluded by reason of bankruptcy.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that, by permitting certain solvent farmers to exclude discharge of qualified farm indebtedness income up to a specified dollar amount (rather than to the extent of a farmer's tax attributes), such farmers will not be forced to declare bankruptcy solely to achieve more favorable tax treatment with respect to such discharge income.

Explanation of provision

Farmers meeting certain requirements can exclude income from discharge of qualified farm indebtedness, but not in excess of $350,000. The provision applies to a taxpayer that meets all of the following requirements: (1) the taxpayer's adjusted gross income (with certain modifications) in 6 of the 10 taxable years preceding the year of discharge is less than the national median adjusted gross income for each of such years; (2) more than 50 percent of the taxpayer's gross receipts for 6 of the 10 taxable years preceding the year of discharge is attributable to the farming business, the sale or lease of assets used in farming, or both; (3) the taxpayer materially participated in the farming business at the time the farm indebtedness was incurred; (4) the amount of equity in all property held by the taxpayer after the discharge is less than the greater of (a) $25,000 or (b) 150 percent of the excess of the tax that would be due if section 108 of the Code did not apply, over the tax that would be due if section 108 did apply; (5) the taxpayer's indebtedness both before and after the discharge is equal to 70 percent or more of the equity in all property held by the taxpayer; and (6) if the taxpayer transfers property to discharge the qualified farm indebtedness, only farm property is transferred.

Thus, for example, a solvent farmer satisfying the requirements described above who realizes $400,000 of discharge of qualified farm indebtedness income and who has $200,000 of tax attributes, can exclude $350,000 of the discharge income under the provision. The farmer's tax attributes would be reduced to zero, and the farmer would recognize $50,000 of discharge of indebtedness income.

The $350,000 limit is reduced by prior year exclusions of discharge of qualified farm indebtedness income under this provision.

The provision does not modify the present-law rule that generally limits the exclusion of discharge of qualified farm indebtedness income to the sum of the taxpayer's loss and credit carryovers and the taxpayer's basis in certain property, in the case of a solvent farmer who does not satisfy the requirements described above. In addition, the provision does not provide for an exclusion of capital gain that may be realized by a farmer who transfers property to a creditor in exchange for the satisfaction of an indebtedness.

The provision applies to discharges of indebtedness occurring after December 31, 1986, in taxable years ending after such date.

5. CONTRIBUTIONS IN AID OF CONSTRUCTION OF ALTERNATIVE WATER SUPPLIES (SEC. 6625 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 118 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Contributions in aid of construction received by a public utility are treated as gross income of the utility and not as contributions to the capital of the utility. Consequently, a utility is required to include in gross income the value of any property (including money) that it receives to provide, or to encourage it to provide, services to, or for the benefit of, any person transferring property to the utility. A utility is considered as having received property to encourage the provision of services if the receipt of the property is a prerequisite to the provision of services, if the receipt of the property results in the provision of services earlier than would have been the case had the property not been received, or if the receipt of the property otherwise causes the transferor to be favored in any manner.

Reasons for change

In order to encourage the provision of alternative water supplies as a means of remedying environmental contamination, the committee believes that it is appropriate to provide favorable income tax treatment with respect to certain amounts received by certain public utilities from a Federal, State or local government.

Explanation of provision

A contribution of money or other property by a Federal, State or local government (or a political subdivision thereof) to a regulated public utility that provides water or sewage disposal services is treated as a contribution to capital and not as an item of gross income if the contribution is a contribution in aid of construction with respect to property that will be used predominantly in furnishing alternative water supplies for purposes of remedying environmental contamination or protecting the health of individuals threatened by environmental contamination. This treatment is to apply only if the contribution (or any property acquired or constructed with the contribution) is not included in the utility's rate base for ratemaking purposes and the contribution is used for the purposes specified above before the end of the second taxable year after the year in which the contribution is received.

No deduction or credit is allowed with respect to any expenditure that constitutes a contribution to capital under the provisions and the adjusted basis of any property acquired by such an expenditure is zero. Finally, the Treasury Department is to issue regulations that define the term contribution in aid of construction, but in no event is such term to include amounts paid as customer connection fees.

The provision is effective as if included in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

6. MODIFY MATERIAL PARTICIPATION FOR CERTAIN TIMBER ACTIVITIES OF INDIVIDUALS UNDER THE PASSIVE LOSS RULES (SECTION 6626 OF THE BILL)

Present Law

Present law, as amended by the 1986 Act, provides that deductions from passive trade or business activities, to the extent they exceed income from all such passive activities (exclusive of portfolio income), generally may not be deducted against other income. Suspended losses are carried forward and treated as deductions from passive activities in the next year. Suspended losses are allowed in full when the taxpayer disposes of his entire interest in the activity to an unrelated party in a transaction in which all realized gain or loss is recognized. The provision applies to individuals, estates, trusts, and personal service corporations. A special rule limits the use of passive activity losses and credits against portfolio income and tax attributable to portfolio income in the case of closely held corporations.

An activity generally is treated as passive if it is a rental activity, or if the taxpayer does not materially participate in it, i.e., the taxpayer is not involved in the operations of the activity on a basis which is regular, continuous, and substantial.

Under temporary and proposed Treasury regulations, a taxpayer may meet any of several tests for material participation, including a test based on all of the facts and circumstances (Temp. Treas. Reg. Section 1.469-5T(a)(7)). If an individual participates in an activity for 100 hours or less during the taxable year, the regulations provide that such individual shall not be treated as materially participating under the facts and circumstances test (Temp. Treas. Reg. section 1.469-5T(b)(2)(iii)).

The regulations further provide that an individual's services performed in the management of an activity shall not be taken into account in determining whether such individual is treated as materially participating under the facts and circumstances test, unless, for such taxable year, (i) no person (other than such individual) who performs services in connection with the management of the activity receives compensation that is earned income in consideration for such services; and (ii) no individual performs services in connection with the management of the activity that exceed (by hours) the amount of such services performed by such individual (Temp. Treas. Reg. section 1.469-5T(b)(2)(ii)). The fact that an individual satisfies the requirements of any participation standard under any provision other than section 469 and the regulations thereunder also is not taken into account (Temp. Treas. Reg. section 1.469-5T(b)(2)(i)).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the passive activity rules as described in Temp. Treas. Reg. Section 1.469-5T(b)(2)(iii) are not appropriate in the case of certain timber activities. The growing of timber is a long process, often spanning many decades. It is a common practice among small woodlot owners to hire independent contractors for their technical expertise, manpower or specialized equipment to perform certain tasks necessary for efficient woodlot operation. The owner's tasks may not consume as much as 100 hours in a particular year. Due to these special circumstances the committee believes that individual woodlot owners should be permitted to determine material participation in a timber activity on the a farming business by a taxpayer who satisfies a specified gross receipts test. A qualified person is one regularly engaged in the business of lending money and meeting certain other requirements.

facts and circumstances basis regardless of whether they participate less than 100 hours during the year.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, an individual's material participation in certain timber activities may be determined under the facts and circumstances test in the regulations even though the individual participates in the activity for 100 hours or less during the taxable year.

For this purpose, a timber activity means any activity that consists predominantly of holding qualified timber property as defined in section 194(c)(1), i.e., a woodlot or other site located in the United States that will contain trees in significant commercial quantities and that is held by the taxpayer for the planting, cultivating, caring for, and cutting of trees for sale or use in the commercial production of timber products.

For example, an individual owns an 80-acre tract of timber near her home. She hires the services of a professional forester to whom she delegates all responsibility for managing the timber. These responsibilities include, from time to time, making and implementing decisions with respect to the harvest or sale of timber (including pricing and frequency of any sales), regeneration activities and protective fire and pest control procedures. The forester carries out these responsibilities. After doing so, the forester regularly informs the individual of his decisions. She pays the expenses relating to the actions undertaken by the forester. Based upon these facts, the individual is not considered to materially participate in the timber growing activity.

As an additional example, an individual owns 80 acres of timber. He is solely responsible for managing the timber property. His responsibilities include making decisions with respect to the harvest or sale of timber (including pricing and frequency of any sales), regeneration activities and protective fire and pest control procedures. He performs periodic inspections of his property; during some periods, these inspections occur annually, while at other times during the timber's growing cycle, they may occur more or less frequently, depending upon the requirements of the property. He maintains records with respect to his property, and pays various expenditures in connection with his timber over a period of years, such as those for construction of fire breaks and maintenance of boundary lines, as appropriate. This work is carried out by independent contractors selected by the individual. He is considered to materially participate with respect to the timber growing activity.

In another example, B owns 1,000 acres of timber. B enters into a long-term lease contract with X, a corporation dealing in timber products. Pursuant to this agreement, X has the exclusive right to manage the property. Under the arrangement, X has the right to cut timber as it sees fit. X promises to return the property to B at the end of the term and warrants that it shall then contain as much or more timber as it did at the beginning of the term. X agrees to pay annual rental to B. B agrees to remain liable for, and pays, property taxes with respect to the leased property. B is not considered to materially participate with respect to this timber growing activity.

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

7. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN CROPS UNDER THE ANNUAL ACCRUAL METHOD OF ACCOUNTING (SEC. 6627 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 447(g) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Present law provides an exception to the uniform cost capitalization rules for certain corporations and qualified partnerships that are permitted to use the annual accrual methods of accounting with respect to the trade or business of farming sugar cane. Under the annual accrual method of accounting, revenues, costs, and expenses are determined under an accrual method of accounting and the preproductive period expenses incurred during any taxable year are charged to harvested crops or are deducted in determining taxable income for such year.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that any taxpayer that has traditionally been allowed to use the annual accrual method of accounting with respect to any crop should be allowed to continue to use such method of accounting with respect to such crop.

Explanation of provision

Any corporation or qualified partnership that, for its last taxable year ending before January 1, 1987, was allowed to use, and actually used, the annual accrual method of accounting with respect to any crop is allowed to continue to use such method of accounting with respect to such crop. It is anticipated that any corporation or qualified partnership that changed its method of accounting for its first taxable year ending after December 31, 1986, and is permitted to use the annual accrual method of accounting only by virtue of this provision will be allowed to use the annual accrual method of accounting for such year by filing an amended return before the date that is one year after the date of enactment of the bill.

Effective date

The provision is effective as if included in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

8. INSTALLMENT SALES TREATMENT OF TIMESHARES AND RESIDENTIAL LOTS SOLD BY C CORPORATIONS (SEC. 6628 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 56, 453, AND 453A OF THE CODE)

Present law

A taxpayer who disposes of a timeshare or a residential lot on the installment plan generally may report income derived from such a disposition on the installment method if the taxpayer elects to pay interest on the amount of deferred tax that is attributable to the use of the installment method. Under this election, interest is required to be paid for any taxable year that payments are received under the installment obligation (other than the taxable year in which the sale occurs). The interest is imposed for the period that begins on the date of the sale of the timeshare or the residential lot and ends on the date that each payment is received. The interest rate used for this purpose is the applicable Federal rate (compounded semiannually) in effect at the time of the sale for debt instruments with the same maturity as the installment obligation.

A taxpayer who elects to pay interest with respect to an installment sale of a timeshare or a residential lot may use the installment method in determining alternative minimum taxable income. However, for purposes of the adjusted current earnings provision of the alternative minimum tax, the installment method may not be used in determining income derived from an installment sale (including a nondealer installment sale of property) even though interest is required to be paid with respect to all or a portion of the deferred tax that is attributable to the use of the installment method. The adjusted current earnings provision of the alternative minimum tax applies to C corporations for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that present law does not provide for an appropriate interest charge on the deferred tax that is attributable to the use of the installment method for dispositions of timeshares and residential lots. For this reason, the bill modifies the amount of interest that is payable by a C corporation that elects to use the installment method with respect to a disposition of a timeshare or a residential lot.

In addition, the committee believes that if a taxpayer pays an appropriate amount of interest on the amount of deferred tax that is attributable to the use of the installment method, then the installment method should be available for all purposes of the alternative minimum tax including the adjusted current earnings provision of the alternative minimum tax.

Explanation of provision

The bill modifies the amount of interest that is payable by a C corporation that elects to use the installment method with respect to an installment sale of a timeshare or a residential lot. Under the bill, the amount of interest for any taxable year is determined for all outstanding installment obligations with respect to which an election was made by multiplying the deferred tax with respect to all such obligations by the underpayment rate in effect for the month with or within which the taxable year ends.

For any taxable year, the deferred tax for such obligations equals (1) the amount of gain under the obligations that has not been recognized as of the close of the taxable year, multiplied by (2) the maximum rate of tax in effect for such taxable year for C corporations.

A C corporation, however, may elect with respect to all such installments obligation to determine the deferred tax under an alternative procedure that is to be considered a method of accounting which must be consistently used from one taxable year to the next. Under this alternative procedure, the deferred tax is determined for a taxable year by first multiplying (1) the amount of gain under the obligations that has not been recognized as of the close of the taxable year reduced by the excess (if any) of the total allowable deductions for such year over the total income for such year, by (2) the maximum rate of tax in effect for such taxable year for C corporations. The result is then reduced by the excess (if any) of the amount of allowable nonrefundable income tax credits for such year over the amount of the regular tax liability for such year.

Net operating loss carrybacks and credit carrybacks are not taken into account in determining the amount of the deferred tax for any year. Net operating loss carryovers and credit carryforwards, however, are taken into account in determining the amount of the deferred tax for any year.

Any interest determined under the proposal is treated as a tax imposed for the taxable year following the year in which the interest is determined. The portion of the interest, however, that is allocable to installment obligations that have not been outstanding for a two-year period as of the close of the taxable year or that are in default as of the close of the taxable year is not to result in an increase in tax for such taxable year. Instead, if such installment obligations are not in default at the close of any taxable year after the end of the two-year period, the amount of interest that was determined under the proposal but was not added to tax is to be added to tax for the first taxable year following such year (together with additional interest at the underpayment rate for each year that the interest has not been added to tax). For this purpose, an installment obligation is to be considered in default if the installment obligations is considered to be wholly worthless under the bad debt provisions of section 166(a)(1) of the Code.

The interest determined under the proposal is treated as tax for purposes of the estimated tax provisions applicable to corporations. In addition, the interest is to be considered accrued for the taxable year in which the interest is added to tax and is to be treated as an allowable deduction for such year in determining the deferred tax under the elective procedure.

A C corporation that elects to pay interest under the proposal with respect to an installment sale of a timeshare or a residential lot is allowed to use the installment method for purposes of the adjusted current earnings provision of the alternative minimum tax. In addition, for purposes of the adjusted current earnings provision of the alternative minimum tax, a taxpayer that is required to pay interest with respect to a nondealer disposition of property is allowed to use the installment method for the portion of the gain with respect to which interest is required to be paid.

The provision applies to dispositions occurring in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

9. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN LARGE FAMILY FARM CORPORATIONS (SEC. 6629 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 447(i) OF THE CODE)

The Revenue Act of 1987 required a family corporation (or a partnership with a family corporation as a partner) to use an accrual method of accounting with respect to its farming buiness unless, for each prior taxable year beginning after December 31, 1985, such corporation (and any predecessor corporation) did not have gross receipts exceeding $25 million.

A corporation or partnership that is required to change to an accrual method of accounting as a result of the Revenue Act of 1987 may establish a suspense account in lieu of taking the entire amount of the section 481 adjustment into income. The amount of the suspense account is limited to the lesser of (1) the section 481 adjustment otherwise required to be taken into income or (2) the section 481 adjustment computed as if the change in method of accounting had occurred as of the beginning of the taxable year preceding the year of change.

The balance of the suspense account is required to be included in income for the year that the corporations ceases to be a family corporation or the year that the required level of control of the corporation is transferred outside the family group that owned the corporation on December 15, 1987. Also, if the gross receipts of the corporation attributable to farming for any taxable year decline to an amount below the lesser of (1) the gross receipts attributable to farming for the last taxable year for which an accrual method of accounting was not required or (2) the gross receipts attributable to farming for the most recent taxable year for which a portion of the suspense account was required to be included in income, a portion of the suspense account proportionate to such decline is taken into income.

Reasons for change

In order to address the possibility that a significant portion of the suspense account of a family farm corporation may be included in gross income due solely to farm price reductions, the committee believes that it is appropriate to provide an elective method of taking into account the amount of the section 481 adjustment that results from changing to an accrual method of accounting due to the family farm provisions of the 1987 Act.

Explanation of provision

A corporation or partnership that is required to change to an accrual method of accounting by reason of the family farm provisions of the Revenue Act of 1987 may elect for its first taxable year that it is required to use an accrual method of accounting to include the amount of the section 481 adjustment in gross income ratably over a 10-year period beginning with such taxable year. In the case of a corporation or partnership that ceases to exist prior to the end of the 10-year period, the balance of the section 481 adjustment is to be included in gross income for the last taxable year of the corporation or partnership.

It is anticipated that a corporation or partnership that has already filed a return for the first taxable year that it is required to change to an accrual method of accounting by reason of the family farm provisions of the 1987 Act will be allowed to elect to include the amount of the section 481 adjustment in gross income over a 10-year period by filing an amended return for such year on or before the date that is one year after the date of enactment of the bill.

The provision is effective as if included in the Revenue Act of 1987.

10. TREATMENT OF GAIN OR LOSS ON SALE OF ASSETS BY COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS (SEC. 6630 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1388 OF THE CODE)

Present law

In General

A cooperative association is a corporation operating on a cooperative basis and allocating amounts to patrons on the basis of the business done with or for such partrons (Code sec. 1381). Unlike other corporations, a cooperative association is allowed to exclude from its taxable income any amounts of patronage dividends paid to its members or patrons or in redemption of a nonqualified written notice of allocation (sec. 1382). Additionally, cooperative associations may exclude income attributable to qualified per-unit retain certificates and amounts paid for redemptions of nonqualified per-unit retain certificates. A per-unit retain allocation is, in general, an amount retained by the cooperative association with respect to goods marketed by the cooperative association for the patron.

Treatment of Patronage Dividends by Members and Patrons

Members of a cooperative association who receive patronage dividends must treat the dividends as income, reduction of basis, or some other treatment that is approximately related to the type of transaction that gave rise to the dividend. For example, where the cooperative association markets a product for one of its members, patronage dividends attributable to the marketing are treated like additional proceeds from the sale of the product and are includible in the recipient's income. Where the cooperative association purchases equipment for its members are treated as a reduction in the recipient's basis in the purchased equipment (provided the recipient still owns the equipment).

Definition of Patronage Dividend

In general, a patronage dividend means an amount paid to a patron (1) on the basis of the quantity or value of business done with or for such patron, (2) under an obligation of the cooperative association to pay such amount, which obligation existed before the association received the amount so paid, and (3) which is determined by reference to the net earnings of the organization from business done with or for its patrons. ". . . Such term does not include any amount paid to a patron to the extent that such amount is out of earnings other than from business done with or for patrons, or such amount is out of earnings from business done with or for other patrons to whom no amounts are paid, or to whom smaller amounts are paid, with respect to substantially identical transactions. . . ." Sec. 1388(a)

Definition of Income Derived From Sources Other Than Patronage

The Treasury regulations provide that ". . . 'income derived from sources other than patronage' means incidental income derived from sources not directly related to the marketing, purchasing, or service activities of the cooperative association. For example, income derived from the lease of premises, from investment in securities, or from the sale or exchange of capital assets, constitutes income derived from sources other than patronage." Treas. Reg. sec. 1.1382-3(c)(2).

Notwithstanding the language of the Treasury regulations, both the Internal Revenue Service and the courts have held that other types of income may constitute income derived from patronage sources. See, for example, Rev. Rul. 69-576, 1969-2 C.B. 166 (patronage dividend from cooperative bank on loans used for patronage business considered patronage source income because it ". . . facilitates the accomplishment of the cooperative's marketing, purchasing, and service activities. . . ."); Linnton Plywood v. United States, 410 F. Supp. 1100 (D. Ore. 1976) (dividends received from a subsidiary corporation that made glue for the parent cooperative's plywood operation held to be patronage source income); Astoria Plywood Corporation v. United States, 79-1 U.S.T.C. par. 9197 (D. Ore. 1979) (income received from cancellation of a lease on a building used by cooperative for patronage-sourced activities was patronage source income); Land O'Lakes, Inc. v. United States, 675 F. 2d 988 (8th Cir. 1982) (dividends from stock in bank whose purchase was necessary to receive financing for patronage activities held to be patronage source income); St. Louis Bank for Coopertives v. United States, 624 F. 2d 1041 (Ct. Cl. 1980) (interest earned on short-term investment of temporary excess cash of a cooperative bank held to be patronage source income).

The Internal Revenue Service has rules that any gain treated as ordinary income under the depreciation recapture rules of section 1245 is treated as patronage source income in the same portion that the depreciation deductions were taken. Rev. Rul. 74-84, 1974-1 C.B. 244. The ruling further held that any additional gain which is treated as capital gain is not patronage-sourced income. Notwithstanding the position of the Internal Revenue Service, the law remains unclear where the cooperative association has a gain from the sale of property.

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned that the uncertainty of present law causes problems to both taxpayers and the Internal Revenue Service. Taxpayers need to know the amount of patronage-sourced income so that they can pay patronage dividends to patrons on a timely basis. Similarly, the Internal Revenue Service needs to know the amount of patronage-sourced income to insure that the income is properly taken into account in determining the taxable income of the cooperative and its patrons.

In general, the committee believes that patronage-sourced income includes a portion of the gains and losses from assets used to facilitate the cooperative's conduct of business done with, or for, its patrons. However, the committee recognizes that the cooperative and its patrons may agree to a different arrangement. Accordingly, the committee bill provides that cooperatives may elect to treat such gains and losses as patronage-sourced income. Nonetheless, the committee bill provides that the election is effective for the taxable year elected and the two succeeding years in order to prevent cooperatives from electing to treat gains as patronage-sourced, while treating losses as not patronage-sourced.

Explanation of provision

In General

Under the bill, a cooperative may elect to treat gain or loss on the sale or other disposition of certain assets as ordinary income or loss and to include such gain or loss in the determination of net earnings done with or for patrons.

Assets to Which Provision Applies

The provision applies to any asset (including stock or any other ownership or financial interest in another entity) if such asset was used by the cooperative to facilitate the conduct of business done with, or for, its patrons. Where an asset was not used exclusively to facilitate the conduct of business done with, or for, its patrons, the provision applies only to the extent that the asset was used to facilitate the conduct of business with, or for, its patrons, the provision applies only to the extent that the asset was used to facilitate the conduct of business with, or for, its patrons. The method of allocating the usage of the asset between patronage and nonpatronage operations may be determined by any reasonable method.

Rules Applicable to Election

An election made under this provision applies to the year for which the election is made and the two succeeding taxable years.

Effective date

In general, this provision of the bill is effective for taxable years ending after the date of enactment. In addition, the provision applies to all taxable years beginning on or before the date of enactment, if the taxpayer so elects in its return for its first taxable year beginning on or before the date of enactment and ending after such date.

11. HEDGING TRANSACTIONS BY REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS (SEC. 6630A OF THE BILL AND SEC. 856(C)(6)(G) OF THE CODE)

In order for an entity to qualify as a real estate investment trust ("REIT"), at least 95 percent of its gross income generally must be derived from certain passive sources and real estate assets (the "95-percent test"). Also, with certain exceptions, less than 30 percent of the gross income of a REIT must be derived from the sale or exchange of certain assets, including real property held for less than four years (the "30-percent test").

For purposes of determining whether an entity qualifies as a REIT, the Code provides specific rules for the treatment of interest rate swap or cap agreements that protect the REIT for interest rate fluctuations cn variable interest rate debt incurred to acquire or carry real estate assets. Such agreements are treated as securities under the 30-percent test and payments under them are treated as qualifying under the 95-percent test.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that income from instruments that are similar to swap and cap agreements should be qualifying passive income for REIT qualification purposes. In addition, the committee believes that, for these purposes, the character of real estate mortgage investment conduit (REMIC) assets and indebtedness should pass through to the REIT.

Explanation of provision

The present-law treatment of interest rate swap or cap agreements is extended to similar arrangements, such as forward rate agreements and futures contracts. In addition, in determining whether an arrangement hedges variable rate indebtedness, a REIT holding a residual interest in a real REMIC is treated as holding the REIT's proportionate share of the REMIC's assets and the REIT's proportionate share of the regular interests of the REMIC is treated as direct indebtedness of the REIT.

Effective date

The provision is effective with respect to taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

12. ALTERNATIVE RECAPTURE METHOD FOR MUTUAL SAVINGS BANKS AND OTHER THRIFT INSTITUTIONS CHANGING FROM THE RESERVE METHOD TO THE SPECIFIC CHARGE-OFF METHOD FOR BAD DEBTS (SEC. 6630B OF THE BILL AND SEC. 593 OF THE CODE)

Thrift Institutions

Under present law, a thrift institution (i.e., a building and loan association, mutual savings bank, or cooperative bank) is permitted a deduction for a reasonable addition to a reserve for bad debts if at least 60 percent of its assets are invested in qualified assets (including home mortgages) (Code secs. 953(a)(2) and 7701(a)(19)). The reasonable addition to the reserve for bad debts for a thrift institution is an amount computed under the experience method or an amount equal to 8 percent of its otherwise taxable income. The amount of bad debt reserves are recaptured if the thrift institution is liquidated in a taxable transaction or makes dividend distributions in excess of post-1951 earnings (Code sec. 593(e)).

Commercial Banks

A commercial bank whose average adjusted bases of all assets does not exceed $500 million (i.e., a "small bank") also is allowed a deduction for a reasonable addition to a reserve for bad debts. The reasonable addition to the reserve is an amount computed under the experience method (Code sec. 585)).

A bank whose average adjusted bases of all assets exceeds $500 million (i.e, a "big bank") is not permitted any deduction for an addition to a reserve for bad debts (code sec. 585(c)). Instead, such banks may deduct specific bad debts only in the year in which they become worthless or partially worthless (the "specific charge-off method"). In addition, big banks are required to recapture their existing bad debt reserves under one of two methods. Under the first method (called the "4-year recapture method"), the balance of the reserve generally is recaptured at the following rates: 10 percent in the first year, 20 percent in the second year, 30 percent in the third year, and 40 percent in the fourth year (Code sec. 585(c)(3)(A)). Under the second method (called the "cut-off method"), specific bad debts on loans made before the change in method are charged to the reserve. Then, the balance of the reserve is recaptured as the reserve balance exceeds the amount of pre-change loans that remain outstanding (Code sec. 585(c)(4)).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the specific charge-off method is preferable to the use of the reserve method of accounting for bad debts. First, the use of the reserve method for determining losses on bad debts results in deductions being taken currently for tax purposes for losses that statistically are expected to occur in the future. In this regard, a reserve for bad debts is inconsistent with the treatment of other deductions under the all events test. Second, the use of the reserve method allows deductions to be taken prior to the time that the losses actually occur and, therefore, allows deductions larger than the actual present value of the losses.

To encourage the use of the specific charge-off method by thrift institutions, the committee believes it appropriate to afford such institutions a method of recapturing their reserves which is different from the recapture methods applicable to commercial banks.

Explanation of provision

General Recapture Rule

A mutual savings bank or other thrift institution that changes from the reserve method of accounting for bad debts to the specific charge-off method (a "nonqualifying thrift institution") may elect to recapture the so-called "experience portion" of its bad debt reserves under the "4-year recapture method" applicable to commercial banks. If a nonqualifying thrift institution does not make an election under this provision, such institution will be subject to the rules of present law.

The experience portion of a nonqualifying thrift institution's bad debt reserves is based on the institution's actual bad debts as a percentage of its loans outstanding over a 6-year period, as calculated under sec. 585(b)(3) of the Code with respect to commercial banks. If a nonqualifying thrift institution makes an election pursuant to this provision, this amount is taken into account by the nonqualifying thrift institution over a 4-year period as follows: 10 percent in the "disqualification year", 20 percent in the first year following the disqualification years, 30 percent in the second year following the disqualification year, and 40 percent in the third year following the disqualification year.[1] A disqualification year means the first taxable year ending after the date of enactment of this provision in which an institution changes from the reserve method of accounting for bad debts to the specific charge-off method.

Subsequent Losses

If a nonqualifying thrift institution makes an election pursuant to this provision, losses with respect to specific loans held by the nonqualifying thrift institution before the accounting method change ("pre-change loans") are generally deductible (and any recoveries includible in income) under normal tax principles, subject to the restrictions set forth below.

In lieu of a deduction for bad debts, a charge is made to the unrecaptured portion of the bad debt reserves to the extent that (1) the excess, if any, of current losses (less recoveries) on pre-change loans over current recapture, exceeds (2) the excess, if any, of cumulative recapture (not including the current year) over cumulative losses (less reserves) (not including the current year) on pre-change loans.

Example. The experience portion of the bad debt reserves of an electing nonqualifying thrift institution is $100. This amount is recaptured $10 in the disqualification year, $20 in the year following the disqualification year, $30 in the second year following the disqualification year, and $40 in the third year following the disqualification year. The institution has actual bad debts on pre-change loans as follows: $0 in the disqualification year, $25 in the year following the disqualification year, $10 in the second year following the disqualification year, and $110 in the third year following the disqualification year. In the disqualification year, the institution is entitled to no deduction for bad debts and makes no charge-off against its bad debt reserves. In the year following the disqualification year, the institution is entitled to a bad debt deduction of $25 and makes no charge-off against its bad debt reserves. In the second year following the disqualification year, the institution is entitled to a bad debt deduction of $10 and makes no charge-off against its bad debt reserves. In the third year following the disqualification year, the institution is entitled to a bad debt deduction of $65 and makes a $45 charge-off against its bad debt reserves.

Any charge made to the bad debt reserves outlined above shall first reduce the nonexperience portion of the bad debt reserves. Any remaining amounts shall then be charged against any experience portion of the reserve that has not yet been recaptured, in the reverse order that such reserves would otherwise be subject to recapture. Finally, any such amounts in excess of total bad debt reserves of the taxpayer are deductible.

Other Rules

Any remaining bad debt reserves of an electing nonqualifying thrift institution are recaptured when excessive dividends are paid by the nonqualifying thrift institution or upon partial or complete liquidation of the nonqualifying thrift institution (under the rules of Code sec. 593(e)).

An election made pursuant to this provison is irrevocable. Nonqualifying thrift institutions that make an election under this provision would not be permitted to use the reserve method of accounting for bad debts in any subsequent year.

Effective date

The proposal would be effective for taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

13. RESTORATION OF INCOME AVERAGING FOR CERTAIN FARMERS (SEC. 6630C OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1303 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Prior to the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, certain individuals could elect to compute their income tax liability for the current year based on a formula that took into account their income for the current year and their average income of the prior three years. This election was repealed by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, effective for tax years beginning after December 31, 1986.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that income averaging is appropriate for certain qualified farmers who may have little or no taxable income in one or more taxable years in the averaging period.

Explanation of provision

The bill restores the income averaging rules that were repealed by the Tax Reform Act of 1986 for certain qualified farmers. Qualified farmers means those individuals (1) who materially participate (within the meaning of sec. 469(h)) in the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of sec. 3032A(e)(4) and (5) of the Code) for each of the preceding three taxable years; and (2) whose total annual gross receipts (including nonfarm gross receipts) for each year of the averaging period does not exceed $5 million ($2.5 million for married individuals filing separately).

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years of individuals beginning December 31, 1989.

D. Employment Tax Provisions

1. INCOME TAX WITHHOLDING ON THE WAGES OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL WORKERS (SEC. 6631 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 3401(a)(2) OF THE CODE)

Present law

In general, wages paid by an employer to an employee are subject to income tax withholding. Wages paid for agricultural labor are, however, exempt from income tax withholding (sec. 3401(a)(2)).

Certain cash wages paid for agricultural labor are subject to withholding for Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA) taxes (sec. 3121(a)(8)). In general, agricultural workers are subject to FICA withholding if they earn at least $150 in annual cash remuneration or are covered because of the employer FICA withholding test. The employer FICA withholding test generally subjects employee wages to FICA withholding if the employer pays more than $2,500 during the year to all employees. Certain employees who are hand harvest laborers, are paid on a piece rate basis, commute daily to the farm from their permanent residence, and were employed in agriculture less than 13 weeks during the prior year, are exempt from FICA withholding.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that agricultural workers generally should be subject to the same system of income tax withholding that applies to other workers.

Explanation of provision

If an agricultural worker's cash wages are subject to FICA withholding, the agricultural worker's cash wages are also subject to income tax withholding. In addition, crew leader rules parallel to those utilized for FICA withholding purposes are to apply for income tax purposes (these rules specify who is the employer of certain agricultural workers).

Effective date

The provision is effective for wages paid after December 31, 1989.

2. PAYROLL TAX DEPOSIT SPEEDUP (SEC. 6632 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 6302 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Tresuary regulations have established the system under which employers deposit income taxes withheld from employees' wages and FICA taxes. The frequency with wih these taxes must be deposited increases as the amount required to be deposited increases. Employers are required to deposit these taxes as frequently as eight times per month, provided that the amount to be deposited equals or exceeds $3,000. These deposits must be made within three banking dates after the end of the eighth-monthly period.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it is appropriate for employers who are required to deposit large amounts of withheld income taxes and FICA taxes deposit those taxes more rapidly.

Explanation of provision

Employers who are on the eighth-monthly system are required to deposit income taxes withheld from employees' wages and FICA taxes by the close of the next banking day (instead of by the close of the third banking day) after any day on which the business has an amount to be deposited equal to or greater than $250,000 (regardless of whether that day is the last day of an eighth-monthly period).

Effective date

The provision is effective for amounts required to be deposited after 31, 1990. A special rule is effective for 1991 and 1992. For 1991 and 1992, amounts required to be deposited under this provision must be deposited by the close of the third banking day (instead of the next banking day). The Treasury Department is given authority to issue regulations for 1995 and succeeding years to provide for similar modifications to the date by which deposits must be made in order to minimize unevenness in the receipts effects of the provision.

E. Tax-Exempt Bond Provisions

1. MODIFY RULES CONCERNING TAX-EXEMPT BONDS ISSUED BY 501(C)(3) ORGANIZATIONS (SEC. 6641 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 145 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The interest of State and local government bonds generally is exempt from tax if the bonds are issued to finance direct activities of these governments (Code sec. 103). Interest on bonds issued by these governments to finance activities of other persons, e.g., private activity bonds, is taxable unless a specific exception is included in the Code.

[1] An electing nonqualifying thrift institution may take into account more than 10 percent of the experience portion of its bad debt reserves in the disqualification year and make appropriate adjustments to the percentages taken into account in the following three years in accordance with rules similar to those set forth in section 585(c)(3)(A)(iii).

One such exception is for private activity bonds issued to finance activities of charitable organizations decribed in Code section 501(c)(3) ("section 501(c)(3) organizations") when the activities do not constitute an unrelated trade or business (Code sec. 141(e)(1)(G)).[1]

Classification of Section 501(c)(3) Organization Bonds As Private Activity Bonds

Under present law, a bond is a private activity bond if its proceeds are used in a manner violating either (i) a private business test or (ii) a private loan test. The private business test is a conjunctive two-pronged test. First, the test limits private business use of government bonds to no more than 10 percent of the proceeds.[2] Second, no more than 10 percent of the debt service on the bonds may be derived from private business users of the proceeds. The private loan test limits to the lesser of five percent of $5 million the amount of governmental bond proceeds that may be used to finance loans to persons other than governmental units.

Special Restrictions on Tax-exemption for Section 501(c) for Organization Bonds

Present law treats section 501(c)(3) organizations as private persons. Thus, bonds for their use may only be issued as private activity "qualified 501(1)(3) bonds," subject to the restrictions of Code section 145. The most significant of these restrictions limits the amount of outstanding bonds from which a section 501(c)(3) organization may benefit to $150 million. In applying this "$150 million limit," all section 501(c)(3) organizations under common management or control are treated as a single organization. The limit does not apply to bonds for hospital facilities, defined to include only acute care, primarily inpatient, organizations. A second restriction limits to no more than five percent the amount of the net proceeds of a bond issue that may be used to finance any activities (including all costs of issuing the bonds) other than the exempt purposes of the section (501)(c)(3) organization.

In addition, existing residential rental property that is acquired by section 501(c)(3) organizations with the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds must satisfy the same low-income tenant occupancy requirements which apply to for-profit developers receiving tax-exempt private activity bond financing (sec. 142(d)(1)).

Other Restrictions

The Code imposes several restrictions on private activity bonds that do not apply to bonds used to finance direct State and local activities. Many of these restrictions also apply to qualified 501(c)(3) bonds.

No more than 2 percent of the net proceeds of a bond issue may be used to finance the costs of issuing the bonds, and these monies are not counted in determining whether the bonds satisfy the requirement that at least 95 percent of the net proceeds of each bond issue be used for the exempt activities qualifying the bonds for tax-exemption.

The weighted average maturity of a bond issue may not exceed 120 percent of the average economic life of the property financed with the proceeds.

A public hearing must be held and an elected public official must approve the bonds before they are issued (or the bonds must be approved by voter referendum).

If property financed with private activity bonds is converted to a use not qualifying for tax-exempt financing, certain loan interest penalties are imposed.

Both governmental and private activity bonds are subject to arbitrage and other restrictions.

Reasons for change

The committee believes a distinguishing feature of American society is the singular degree to which we maintain an independent sector of private institutions in the public service. The committee believes it is important to assist these private institutions in their advancement of the public good. The committee finds particularly inappropriate the restrictions of present law which place 501(c)(3) organizations at a financial disadvantage to public institutions in providing essentially the same services. For example, a public university generally has unlimited access to tax-exempt finance, while a private university is subject to a $150 million limitation. The committee is concerned that this and other restrictions inhibit the ability of our great private institutions to modernize their research laboratories and libraries and other facilities. The committee believes it is appropriate to attempt to treat equally State and local governments and those private organizations which are engaged in the advancement of the public good.

Explanation of provision

The bill amends the tax-exempt bond provisions of the Code of conform generally the treatment of section 501(c)(3) organization bonds to finance the exempt purpose of the organization to that provided for bonds issued to finance direct State or local government activities.[3] Certain restrictions, described below, that have been imposed on section 501(c)(3) organization bonds (but not on governmental bonds) since 1985, and that address specialized policy concerns, are retained.

Repeal of Private Activity Bond Classification for Section 501(c)(3) Organization Bonds

The concept of an "exempt person" that existed under the Code bond provisions before 1986, is reenacted. An exempt person is defined as (i) a State or local governmental unit or (ii) a section 501(c)(3) organization when carrying out its exempt activities under Code section 501(a). Thus, bonds issued by a section 501(c)(3) organization to carry out its exempt activities are no longer classified as private activity bonds. Financing for unrelated business activities of such organizations continue to be treated as a private activity for which tax-exempt financing is not authorized.

As exempt persons, section 501(c)(30 organizations are subject to the same limits as States and local governments on using their bond proceeds to finance private business activities or to make private loans. Thus, no more than 10 percent of the bond proceeds[4] can be used in a business use of a person other than an exempt person if the Code security interest test is satisfied, and no more than five percent ($5 million if less) can be used to make loans to such "nonexempt" persons.

Repeal of Most Additional Restrictions on Section 501(c)(3) Organization Bonds

The bill repeals present Code section 145, which establishes additional restrictions on qualified 501(c)(3) bonds. The bill also repeals the restriction on bond-financed costs of issuance for section 501(c)(3) organization bonds (Code sec. 147(h)). This repeal of Code section 145 eliminates the $150 million per institution limit on nonhospital bonds for section 501(c)(3) organizations.

Retention of Certain Specialized Requirements for Section 501(c)(3) Organization Bonds

As stated above, the bill retains certain specialized restrictions on bonds for section 501(c)(3) organizations. First, the bill retains the requirement that existing residential rental property acquired by a section 501(c)(3) organization in a tax-exempt-bond-financed transaction satisfy the same low-income tenant requirements as similar housing financed for for-profit developers. Second, the bill retains the present-law maturity limitations applicable to bonds for 501(c)(3) organizations, and the public approval requirements applicable generally to private activity bonds. Third, the bill continues to apply the penalties on changes in use of tax-exempt bond-financed section 501(c)(3) organization property to a use not qualified for such financing.

The bill applies generally to bonds issued after December 31, 1989.

An exception permits bonds for which a transitional exception was provided in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 to be issued under the rules currently applicable to those bonds, unless the issuers elected to be subject to the bill's provisions. Such an election is to be made on an issue-by-issue basis before the bonds are issued, and its irrevocable once made.

2. REFINANCINGS OF CERTAIN BOND ISSUES (SEC. 6642 OF THE BILL)

Present law

A bond (including refunding bonds) is a private activity bond if an amount exceeding the lesser of five percent or $5 million of bond proceeds is to be used (directly or indirectly) to make or finance loans to any person other than a governmental unit.

Reasons for change

The private loan rules restrict the ability of issuers to utilize tax-exempt bonds to make or finance loans to persons other than a governmental unit. The committee believes that a limited exception from these rules is justified in the refunding case allowed under this provision.

Explanation of proposal

The provision allows a current refunding on a tax-exempt basis to qualified issuers if the following restrictions are satisfied: (1) the amount of the refunding issue may not exceed the outstanding amount of the refunded bonds; and (2) the final maturity

[1] Prior to the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, State and local governments and 501(c)(3) organizations both were defined as "exempt persons," and their bonds generally were subject to the same requirements.

[2] No more than 5 percent of bond proceeds may be used in a private business use that is unrelated to the governmental purpose of the bond issue. The 10-percent debt service test, described below, likewise is reduced to 5 percent in the case of such "disproportionate" private business use.

[3] For example, if as part of its regular curriculum a private university offered instruction in aviation, it would be permissible to use the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds to purchase trainer aircraft which present law would not permit under sec. 147(e).

[4] This limit would be reduced to five percent in the case of disproportionate private use as under the present law governmental bond disproportionate private use limit.

date of the refunding issue may not be later than six months following the scheduled final maturity date of the issue of which the refunded bond is a part. A qualified issuer must have issued the bonds to be refunded to provide financial assistance to a financially troubled issuer that is a separate political subdivision and that issued the bonds in order to alleviate the risk of default on the financial obligations of the financially troubled issuer.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

3. SPORTS FACILITY BONDS (SEC. 6643 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 142 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Interest on State and local government bonds generally is tax-exempt (Code sec. 103). Interest on private activity bonds issued by such governments is taxable unless a specific exemption is provided in the Code. In addition, the availability of certain private activity tax-exempt bond financing is limited by the State annual private activity volume limitation. Specifically, the volume limitation applies to (1) exempt-facility bonds (other than bonds for airports, docks and wharves, and certain governmentally owned solid waste disposal facilities), (2) qualified mortgage bonds, (3) small-issue bonds, (4) qualified student loan bonds, and (5) qualified redevelopment bonds. Certain other private activity bonds for which tax-exemption specifically is provided in non-Code provisions also are subject to the new private activity bond volume limitations. While sports stadiums and convention facilities could be financed as qualified Industrial Development Bonds (IDBs) under prior law, they no longer fall within any category of exempt-facility bonds eligible for tax-exemption under present law.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that sports facilities provide public benefits. Consequently, the committee believes it is appropriate to make tax-exempt financing available to such facilities. Because of the benefits which can inure to private persons, the committee believes it is important to subject bonds for such facilities to the State private activity bond limitation and to insure that such facilities are publicly owned.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that sports facilities are an exempt facility and can be financed using tax-exempt bonds subject to the State private activity bond limitation.[1] The bill provides that such facilities financed with tax-exempt bonds must be governmentally owned.

Effective date

The provision is effective for bonds issued after December 31, 1989.

F. Insurance Provisions

1. STUDY RELATING TO SECTION 833 DEDUCTION (SEC. 6651 OF THE BILL)

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 added a rule that an organization described in sections 501(c)(3) or (4) of the Code is exempt from tax only if no substantial part of its activities consists of providing commercial-type insurance 501(m)). The 1986 Act provided special rules for certain health insurance providers subject to this provision. In particular, the 1986 Act provided a special deduction for then-existing Blue Cross or Blue Shield organizations and other organizations that meet certain requirements and substantially all of whose activities are providing health insurance.

The special deduction is provided under Code section 833 to such organizations with respect to their health business, and is equal to (1) 25 percent of the claims and expenses incurred during the taxable year, less (2) the adjusted surplus at the beginning of the year. This deduction is calculated by computing surplus, taxable income, claims incurred, expenses incurred, tax-exempt income, net operating loss carryovers, and other items attributable to health business. The deduction may not exceed taxable income attributable to health business for the year (calculated without regard to this deduction).

In addition, the 1986 Act provided special rules for determining the accounting method, unearned premium reserves, and asset basis of such organizations, relating to their former tax exempt status.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to review the operation of the section 833 deduction and the provisions determining eligibility for the deduction, as well as whether organizations meeting requirements similar to the eligibility standards for the section 833 deduction should be treated as a category of tax-exempt organizations.

Explanation of provision

The Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate is required to conduct a study of the standards for eligibility for, and the operation of, the special deduction provided under section 833 to certain existing Blue Cross or Blue Shield organizations and other organizations with respect to their health business. The study is to include an examination of whether organizations in existence on August 16, 1986, which are similar to Blue Cross and Blue Shield organizations should also be eligible for the section 833 deduction. The study should also examine whether similar organizations that meet certain requirements such as continuous open enrollment and others indicating public purpose (including requirements similar to those described in section 833(c)(3)) should be eligible for tax-exempt status.

Effective date

Not later than March 15, 1990, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to submit to the Finance Committee the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a report on the study, together with such recommendations as the Secretary may deem advisable.

2. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN RESERVES UNDER MINIMUM PREMIUM PLANS (SEC. 6652 OF THE BILL)

Under present law, a property and casualty insurance company is subject to tax on its underwriting income and its investment income. Underwriting income is defined for this purpose as the premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year less losses incurred and expenses incurred.

In calculating the amount of premiums earned on insurance contracts, 80 percent of the increase in unearned premiums during the year is deducted from gross premiums (less return premiums and premiums paid for reinsurance). The deduction for losses incurred includes losses paid during the year (adjusted for salvage and reinsurance recoverable), and the increase in discounted unpaid losses during the year.

Under present law, it is unclear whether amounts set aside by an insurance company as a reserve pursuant to State law or regulation for future claim payments to be made upon the termination of a minimum premium plan are properly treated for Federal income tax purposes as unearned premiums, as unpaid losses, or as nondeductible amounts.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that amounts set aside as a reserve pursuant to State law or regulation for future claims payments upon the termination of a minimum premium plan should be treated for Federal income tax purposes as unearned premiums.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that, for purposes of section 832(b)(4) of the Code (or any corresponding provision of prior law), the term "unearned premiums" includes amounts set aside as a reserve pursuant to State law (or any rules or regulations thereunder) by an insurance company for future claims payments upon the termination of a minimum premium plan, to the extent a premium or other consideration corresponding to such reserve has been included in the gross income of the company.

Effective date

The provision applies to taxable years beginning before, on, or after the date of enactment of the bill.

G. Compliance Provisions

1. IRS NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS OF UNDERREPORTING OF AMOUNTS WITHHELD AND STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR CERTAIN REFUND CLAIMS (SECS. 6661–6662 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 7523 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under procedures in effect for taxable years beginning before 1987, the Internal Revenue Service did not notify taxpayers or make adjustments on income tax returns when it was determined that the amount reported as withheld on an income tax return was less than the amount reported on an information return. On March 22, 1989, the Internal Revenue Service announced revisions in its procedures for the 1987 taxable year and thereafter. Under these revised procedures, discrepancies involving amounts reported as withheld on information returns will be adjusted in the same manner as discrepancies in amounts reported as withheld on Forms W-2 or W-2P. Such an adjustment may involve a correction of the return where information has been reported on the wrong part of the return. In other cases, the Internal Revenue Service's procedures require that the IRS contact the taxpayer to inform the taxpayer of the discrepancy.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the interests of taxpayers would be best protected if the Internal Revenue Service was required to notify taxpayers where it was determined that the amount of tax reported as withheld on an information return was $5 or more in excess of the amount of tax reported as withheld on an income tax return.

In addition, the committee believes that taxpayers should have an additional year within which to file an amended return claiming a refund due to underreporting of withholding.

[1]The provision does not alter the prohibition against the financing of skyboxes with the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds (sec. 147(e)).

Explanation of provisions

Underreporting of Amounts Withheld

If, in connection with one or more information return matching programs, the Internal Revenue Service determines that the amount of tax shown on information returns as withheld for any taxable year exceeds by $5 or more the amount of tax shown on the income tax return as withheld for that taxable year, then the Internal Revenue Service is required to notify the taxpayer of such excess. In addition, the IRS notice must inform taxpayers of how to file a claim for a refund of these unreported withheld amounts. (This is identical to S. 811, introduced by Senator Bentsen.)

Amended Returns for Certain Refund Claims

In addition, the bill provides that a taxpayer may file an amended return until April 15, 1990, for the taxable year ending December 31, 1985, if the amended return relates to an overpayment of tax attributable to the taxpayer's failure to take proper credit for amounts of tax withheld by a payor from any income included in the taxpayer's gross income for that taxable year. (This is identical to S. 753, introduced by Senator Gore, Senator Pryor, and Senator Harkin.)

Effective date

The provision applies to all information return matching that occurs after the date of enactment.

2. INCREASE IN REFUND REVIEW THRESHOLD FOR REPORTS SUBMITTED TO THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION (SEC. 6663 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 6405 OF THE CODE)

Present law

No refund or credit in excess of $200,000 of any income tax, estate or gift tax, or certain other specified taxes, may be made until 30 days after the date a report on the refund is provided to the Joint Committee on Taxation (sec. 6405). A report is also required in the case of certain tentative refunds. Additionally, the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation conducts post-audit reviews of large deficiency cases and other select issues.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to increase the refund review threshold, which has been set at $200,000 since 1976. This increase will accelerate the issuance of refunds between $200,000 and $1,000,000 to the taxpayers involved. In addition, this increase will free up significant resources of both the Internal Revenue Service and the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, without materially impairing the ability to monitor problems in the administration of the tax laws.

Explanation of provision

The threshold above which refunds must be submitted to the Joint Committee for review is increased from $200,000 to $1,000,000.

The committee expects that the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation will continue to exercise its existing statutory authority to conduct a program of expanded post-audit reviews of large deficiency cases and other select issues. The committee expects that the IRS will fully cooperate in this expanded program.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment, except that the higher threshold will not apply to a refund or credit with respect to which a report was made before the date of enactment.

H. Exempt Organizations

1. COOPERATIVE SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS FOR CERTAIN FOUNDATIONS (SEC. 6671 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 501(n) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Present-law section 501(c)(3) requires that an organization be organized and operated exclusively for an exempt purpose in order to qualify for tax-exempt status under that section.

Section 501(f) provides that an organization shall be treated as organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes if it is comprised solely of members that are educational institutions and is organized and operated to hold, commingle, and collectively invest (including arranging for investment services by independent contractors) in stocks and securities, the moneys contributed thereto by the members, and to collect income therefrom and turn over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to such members.

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to extend to private foundations and community foundations present-law rules which permit educational institutions to form tax-exempt cooperative service organizations to provide for collective investment of their assets.

Explanation of provision

Under the provision, a cooperative service organization comprised exclusively of members which are tax-exempt private foundations or community foundations [1] is treated for purposes of section 501(c)(3) as organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes if: (1) it has at least 20 members; (2) no one member holds more than 10 percent (by value) of the interests in the organization; (3) no one member, by itself, controls the organization or controls any other member; (4) the members are permitted to dismiss the organization's investment adviser upon a vote of members holding a majority of interest in the organization; and (5) the organization is organized and operated solely to hold, commingle, and collectively invest (including arranging for investment services by independent contractors) in stocks and securities, the moneys contributed by the members, and to collect income therefrom and turn over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to such members.[1a]

A cooperative service organization meeting the criteria of the provision is subject to the present-law excise tax provisions applicable to private foundations (e.g., sec. 4941 rules governing self-dealing arrangements), other than sections 4940 and 4942. In addition, the proportionate share (whether or not distributed) of the net income of the cooperative service organization (including capital gains) of each member (other than certain exempt operating foundations) for any taxable year of the cooperative service organization is, for purposes of the excise tax imposed under present-law section 4940, treated as net investment income of the member for the taxable year of such member in which the taxable year of the cooperative service organization ends.

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

2. CERTAIN EXISTING ARRANGEMENTS EXEMPT FROM EXCISE TAX ON SELF-DEALING INVOLVING PRIVATE FOUNDATIONS (SEC. 6672 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 4941 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Section 509(a) defines a private foundation as any tax-exempt organization described in section 501(c)(3) other than certain organizations described in section 170(b)(1)(A) (e.g., churches, educational institutions, and hospitals), organizations which meet the "public support" test of section 509(a)(2) (i.e., organizations normally receiving one-third of their support from gifts, grants, contributions, membership fees, and certain other permissible sources and also not receiving more than one-third of their support from gross investment income and certain other business activities), and certain other organizations.

Section 4941 provides for the imposition of excise taxes when private foundations engage in "self-dealing" transactions with certain disqualified persons. The transactions prohibited as "self-dealing" generally include (1) the sale, exchange, or leasing of property between a private foundation and a disqualified person, (2) the lending of money or other extension of credit between a private foundation and a disqualified person, and (3) payment of compensation by a private foundation to a disqualified person. For purposes of the section 4941 excise taxes, disqualified persons generally include substantial contributors[1b] to private foundations, managers of private foundations, certain relatives of substantial contributors and foundation managers, and certain government officials (sec. 4946).

Reasons for change

The committee believes it is appropriate to permit certain tax-exempt organizations that become private foundations after having qualified as public charities to avoid disruptions of their operations by continuing for a limited period certain business arrangements reflecting arm's-length transactions.

Explanation of provision

The provision permits an organization that becomes a private foundation with respect to a taxable year after having met the public support tests of section 509(a)(2) for a minumum of three prior years to continue (or to renew) certain qualified existing arrangements which are the result of arm's-length transactions. Such arrangements are exempted from the excise taxes imposed upon self-dealing transactions by section 4941 for a period not to exceed the longer of (1) the period provided by an existing binding contract entered into more than two years before the start of the taxable year with respect to which the organization becomes a private foundation, or (2) a five-year period beginning with the taxable year with respect to which the organization becomes a private foundation.

[1] For purposes of the provision, "community foundations" are a form of charitable trust or fund (which generally are established to attract large contributions of a capital or endowment nature for the benefit of a particular community or area) as to which section 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) applies (see Treas. Reg. sec. 1.170A-9(e)(10).

[1a] A cooperative service organization described in the provision qualifies for tax-exempt status under section 501(c)(3) only if the other relevant requirements of that section (e.g., limitations on political and lobbying activities) are satisfied.

[1b] A "substantial contributor" is any person who contributed or bequeathed an aggregate amount of more than $5,000 to the private foundation, if such amount is more than two percent of the total contributions and and bequests received by the foundation before the close of the taxable year of the foundation in which the contribution or bequest is received by the foundation from such person (secs. 507(d)(2) and 4946(a)(2)).

For purposes of the provision, "qualified existing arrangement" include the continuance or renewal of the following arrangements if such arrangements were in effect during the period the organization satisfied the public support test of section 509(a)(2): (1) the leasing by a disqualified person to a private foundation of office space in a building with other tenants who are not disqualified persons if the leasing is pursuant to a binding lease; (2) the furnishing of goods, services (including banking services), or facilities by a disqualified person to a private foundation [2]; (3) the sale of property from a private foundation to a disqualified person pursuant to a binding contract; and (4) to the extent provided by regulation, any other arrangement.

Under the provision, existing arrangements may be continued or renewed only if they are the result of an arm's-length transaction (i,.e., the terms of the transaction are not less favorable to the private foundation than if it had contracted with a member of the general public who was not a disqualified person). Any renewal or modification of an existing arrangement may not substantially modify such arrangement.

The provision does not apply to any arrangement between a private foundation and a disqualified person who is a substantial contributor to the foundation within the meaning of section 4946(a)(2). such transactions between a private foundation and a substantial contributor continue to be governed by the present-law rules prohibiting self-dealing arrangements provided for by section 4941.

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

I. Other Provisions

1. ADOPTION EXPENSE DEDUCTION (SEC. 6681 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 221 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 (the "1986 Act") repealed the deduction for adoption expenses associated with special needs children, effective for taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1987. Under prior law, a deduction of up to $1,500 of expenses associated with the adoption of special needs children was allowed. The 1986 Act provided for a new outlay program under the existing Adoption Assistance Program to reimburse expenses associated with the adoption process of these children. The group of children covered under the outlay program is somewhat broader than the group covered by the prior deduction. Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and Title IV-E Foster Care assistance outlay program provides assistance for adoption expenses for these special needs children as well as special needs children in private and State-only programs.

One component of the Adoption Assistance Program requires States to reimburse certain costs incurred for special needs children. The Federal government shares 50 percent of these costs up to a maximum Federal share of $1,000 per child. Reimbursable expenses include those associated directly with the adoption process such as legal costs, social service review, and transportation costs.

Reasons for change

The committee believes an individual who is willing to adopt a child with special needs will incur greater expenses in the process of the adoption than would an individual who will adopt a child without such special needs. It is appropriate public policy then to offset some of the expenses through available tax provision in order to encourage such individuals.

Explanation of provision

The proposal will allow a taxpayer to exclude from adjusted gross income (AGI) up to $3,000 of expenses incurred in the course of the adoption of a child with special needs. This exclusion will be allowed as an "above-the-line" deduction. A child with special needs means any child who, as determined by a State, cannot or should not be returned to the home of the birth parents and cannot be placed with adoptive parents without providing adoption assistance.

Eligible adoption expenses will be limited to those: (1) directly associated with the adoption process and (2) that are of a type eligible for reimbursement under the Adoption Assistance Program. These include reasonable and necessary court costs, legal expenses, and other expenses directly related to the legal adoption of a child.

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

2. TAX PRE-CONTRIBUTION GAIN ON CERTAIN IN-KIND PARTNERSHIP DISTRIBUTIONS (SEC. 6682 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 704(C) OF THE CODE)

Present law

A partnership is not subject to tax at the partnership level, but rather, income and loss of the partnership is subject to tax at the partner level (Code sec. 701). A partner's distibutive share of items of partnership income, gain, loss, deduction or credit generally may be determined by the partnership agreement if the allocations under the agreement have substantial economic effect. If partnership allocations do not have substantial economic effect, partners' distributive shares are required to be determined in accordance with the partners' interests in the partnership (determined by taking into account all facts and circumstances) (sec. 704(b)).

Income, gain, loss, and deduction with respect to property contributed to the partnership by a partner is required to be shared among partners so as to take account of the variation between the basis of the property to the partnership and its fair market value at the time of contribution (sec. 704(c)). Thus, for example, if appreciated property that was contributed to the partnership is sold by the partnership, gain recognized on the sale is required to be allocated to the contributing partner to the extent he has not previously taken the pre-contribution gain into account.

A partner generally does not recognize gain on a distribution of partnership property (except on a distribution of money in excess of a partner's basis in his partnership interest) (sec. 731). In addition, a partnership does not recognize gain on a distribution of property to a partner. Thus, if appreciated property that was contributed by a partner is distributed to other partners (rather than sold by the partnership), the contributing partner may avoid recognizing the pre-contribution gain.

Present law provides that a partnership is considered as terminated under certain circumstances, including the sale or exchange of 50 percent or more of the total interest in partnership capital and profits within a 12-month period (sec. 708(b)). Applicable Treasury regulations provide that in such a termination, the partnership property is deemed distributed to the partners and then is deemed recontributed to the partnership. The regulations do not provide specific rules for coordinating the effect of such a partnership termination with the required sharing of partnership items under section 704(c).

Another provison of present law provides, generally, that no gain or loss is recognized if property held for productive use in a trade or business or for investment is exchanged solely for property of a like kind which is to be held either for productive use in a trade or business or for investment (section 1031). Certain listed property does not qualify for nonrecognition treatment (sections 1031(1)(2) and (e)). In order for the nonrecognition rule to apply, the property received in the exchange must be (1) identified within 45 days after the taxpayer transfers the relinquished property, and (2) received before the earlier of 180 days after the taxpayer transfers the relinquished property, or the due date (with regard to extensions) of the taxpayer's income tax return for the year the property was relinquished.

The committee believes that the present-law inconsistency in treatment of partnership sales and partnership distributions of property contributed by partners makes it possible for partners to circumvent the rule requiring pre-contribution gain on contributed property to be allocated to the contributing partner. Therefore, in order to limit the inconsistency and to reduce opportunities for circumventing this rule, the committee believes that the contributing partner should recognize pre-contribution gain when property is distributed by the partnership to a partner other than the contributing partner, if the distribution of the contributed property occurs less than 3 years after the contribution.

The committee also believes that, in limited circumstances, where multiple properties of a like kind are distributed to partners, and the transaction would have been treated as a like-kind exchange had it occurred outside the partnership, the partners should receive treatment similar to like-kind exchange treatment.

The bill provides that, in the case of a distribution of contributed property within three years of its contribution, the contributing partner is treated as recognizing gain or loss. Gain or loss recognition is not required under the bill, however, to the extent partnership property is distributed to the partner who originally contributed the property to the partnership. When gain or loss recognition is required by the provision, the amount the contributing partner is treated as recognizing is equal to the amount he would have had to take into account by reason of the variation between basis and value upon contribution of the property, had the property been sold by the partnership at its fair market value at the time of the contribution.

[2] The furnishing of goods, services, or facilities by a disqualified person to a private foundation on an intermittent basis is permitted by the provision for a five-year period even though there is no binding contract requiring the continuation of the arrangement, provided that the disqualified person previously had furnished substantially similar goods, services, or facilities to the organization when it met the public support test of section 509(2)(2) and after the organization becomes a private foundation the arrangement reflects an arm's-length transaction.

For example, if a partner contributes property (e.g., a tract of raw land) with a basis of 20 and a value of 100, and the partnership contributes it to other within 3 years, at a time when the property's value is 150, the contributing partner is treated as recognizing a gain of 80 under the provision (i.e., the amount of the variation between basis (20) and value (100) of the property at the time of contribution). If the partnership had sold the property at the time of contribution, the partnership's gain would have been at least this amount. Similarly, if the property had a value of 60 at the time of contribution to other partners, the contributing partner would be treated as recognizing a gain of 40 under the provision (i.e., the part of the amount of the variation between basis and value that would have been recognized had the partnership sold the property at its fair market value at the time of distribution). These examples assume no intervening allocations were made or required to be made to the contributing partner under section 704(c).

The character of gain or loss to the contributing partner is the same as the character to the partnership had the partnership sold the property to the distributee at the time of the distribution. As under present-law section 704(c), appropriate adjustments are required to be made to the adjusted basis of the contributing partner's interest in the partnership and to the adjusted basis of the distributed property to reflect any gain or loss recognized under the provision. Thus, the contributing partner's adjusted basis for his partnership interest will be increased or decreased, respectively, to reflect any gain or loss he recognized under the provision upon the distribution of the property to another partner (or partners). Similarly, the partnership's adjusted basis for the distributed property will be increased or decreased, respectively, to reflect any gain or loss the contributor recognized under the provision upon the distribution, and this increase or decrease will be taken into account in determining the distributee's adjusted basis for the distributed property under the rules of section 732.

The bill provides that the term contributing partner includes successor partners. Thus, for example, if the partner who originally contributed property to the partnership sells his interest to a successor partner, the successor is treated as recognizing gain or loss under the provision when the contributed property is distributed to other partners within 3 years of the date the selling partner contributed it. The provision does not affect the ability to adjust basis under present law pursuant to a section 754 election.

Gain or loss is not recognized under the provision to the extent contributed is distributed by the partnership to the contributing partner. A special rule provides that, under regulations, if property contributed by one partner (the "contributing partner") is distributed to another partner (the "distributee partner"), and other property of a like kind is distributed to the contributing partner within a limited time period, then, to the extent of the value of the property actually distributed to the contributing partner, the contributing property is treated as receiving a distribution of property that he contributed. The limited time period is the period that is the lesser of (i) 180 days following the date of the distribution to the distributee partner, or (ii) the due date of the partner's tax return (with regard to extensions) for the taxable year of the distribution to the contributing partner. It is intended that the value of property distributed be determined in accordance with all the facts and circumstances (including, e.g., the purchase price of such property, or the value of cash, or other items contributed to the partnership in exchange for interests in the partnership). The special rule does not apply to property described in sections 1031(a)(2) or (e).

It is intended that the rule of section 704(c), as amended by the bill, be coordinated with the rules governing partnership terminations (sec. 708). Coordination of this provision of the bill with present law on partnership terminations is intended to be limited in scope, and to provide the following results. First, pre-contribution gain or loss otherwise required to be recognized under the provision is not triggered by a constructive termination under section 708(b)(1)(B). Second, a constructive termination does not change the application of the sharing requirements of 704(c) (as amended by the bill) to pre-contribution gain or loss with respect to property contributed to the partnership before the termination. The rationale for this latter result is that a termination could otherwise cause a shift of pre-contribution built-in gain or loss away from the contributed property to other property, which is contrary to the purpose of this provision of the bill.

It is intended, however, that the deemed contribution of property that occurs (under regulations) upon a constructive termination of the partnership will require the application of section 704(c) (as amended by the bill) to the partners' shares of any increase or decrease in the value of the partnership's assets occurring after those assets were acquired (whether by purchase or contribution) by the partnership and before the termination. As a result, partners will recognize gain or loss in connection with any subsequent distribution of partnership property within 3 years of the date of the termination, to the extent of their respective shares of the pre-termination appreciation or depreciation in the value of the partnership property that is not already required to be allocated under 704(c) to the original contributor (if any) of the property.

Gain or loss will not be triggered under the provision solely by reason of the election under section 761(a) of all the members of an unincorporated organization to exclude the organization from subchapter K. No inference is intended as to any of the tax consequences under present law of an election out of subchapter K under section 761(a).

The provision applies only to a transfer of contributed property to a partner in a transaction that is properly characterized as a distribution to that partner acting in his capacity as a partner for purposes of section 731. To the extent that a transfer of partnership property to a partner by the partnership in a purported distribution is part of a disguised sale, the tax consequences of that transfer are governed by the rules generally applicable to sales or exchanges of property (see section 707 (a) and (b), and Reg. section 1.731-1(c)(3)).

The provision is effective with respect to property contributed to a partnership after October 3, 1989, in partnership taxable years ending after that date.

3. REPEAL NET INCOME LIMITATION FOR PERCENTAGE DEPLETION ON MARGINAL OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION (SEC. 6683 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 613A(C)(14) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, independent producers and royalty owners are permitted to claim percentage depletion on the production of domestic crude oil and domestic natural gas. Such allowance for depletion, however, is subject to several limitations. First, an independent producer or royalty owner can only claim percentage depletion on its combined average daily production of domestic crude oil and domestic natural gas that does not exceed 1,000 barrels (or an equivalent amount of natural gas). Second, percentage depletion is further limited (on a property by property basis) to an amount not in excess of 50 percent of the taxpayer's net taxable income from the property, computed without a deduction for depletion (the "net income limitation"). Finally, a taxpayer's overall deduction for percentage depletion is limited to an amount that is equal to 65 percent of the taxpayer's pre-depletion taxable income for the taxable year (the "taxable income limitation").

Reasons for change

The committee understands that in many cases, the gross income generated from certain marginally producing oil and gas property is offset to a significant degree by associated operating costs. By operation of the net income limitation, owners of such property often receive little or no benefit from the percentage depletion deduction under present law. The committee understands that as a result of the minimal net income and lack of percentage depletion deduction which occur with respect to some marginal properties, in certain cases taxpayers have contended that it is not economically feasible to continue the operation of such properties. The committee further understands that once the operation of a marginal property is shut down, it is unlikely that production will be restored in the future.

The committee believes that certain incentives should be provided for marginal oil and gas properties so that the extraction of oil and gas reserves from such properties will continue. In particular, the committee believes that it is appropriate to repeal the net income limitation to permit greater percentage depletion deductions for such taxpayers with respect to the operation of certain marginally producing oil and gas properties.

Under the bill, independent producers and royalty owners are permitted to claim percentage depletion under rules identical to present law, except that with respect to certain marginal production of domestic crude oil and domestic natural gas, the net income limitation will not apply. The present-law net income limitation remains unchanged, under the bill, as it applies to the allowance for percentage depletion on production of oil and gas other than that designated under the bill as marginal.

To illustrate this rule, consider the following example. Assume that a domestic property of an independent producer produces crude oil that generates $200 of gross income during a taxable year and has operating costs (before depletion) of $150. Further assume that the production from the property qualifies as marginal production under the bill. Under the present-law percentage depletion rate of 15 percent, the maximum amount of depletion which could be claimed on such property is $30 ($200 gross income multiplied by 15 percent). However, under present law, the allowable percentage depletion deduction is limited to $25 because of the 50-percent net income limitation ($50 net income multiplied by 50 percent). Under the bill, the net income limitation is repealed for marginal production. Thus under the bill, the taxpayer would be allowed to claim a percentage depletion deduction of $30 (prior to considering other applicable limitations.)

Under the bill, the term marginal production includes (1) domestic crude oil and natural gas produced from a stripper well, and (2) domestic crude oil which is heavy oil (oil that has a weighted average gravity of 20 degrees API or less corrected to 60 degrees Fahrenheit). For purposes of this provision of the bill, a stripper well is an oil or gas well which produced an average of 15 or less equivalent barrels of oil and gas per production day during any 6-month period beginning after December 31, 1985.[1] During the 6-month production period, production must occur at the well's maximum feasible rate of production as determined in accordance with recognized conservation practices designed to maximize the ultimate recovery of crude oil or natural gas in order for the property to qualify as a stripper as well. In the case of a unitization or pooling of multiple wells, the bill requires that production shall be allocated to all unitized wells on the basis of sound engineering principles.

Under the bill, for purposes only of computing percentage depletion, an oil or gas well which qualifies as a stripper well for any period will continue to be treated as a stripper well even if future production from that well exceeds the 15 equivalent barrels per day limit provided in the stripper well definition. However, the 50-percent net income limitation will apply to production from such property in excess of such limitation.

The bill does not affect the 1,000 barrel average daily production limitation on the allowance or percentage depletion. Thus, if an independent producer or royalty owner has marginal producing properties (or a combination of marginal and non-marginal producing properties) that in total generate average daily production in excess of 1,000 barrels, the taxpayer will continue to be limited, as under present law, to the 1,000 barrel per day average for purposes of claiming percentage depletion.

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

4. TREATMENT OF TUXEDOS HELD FOR RENTAL (SEC. 6684 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 168 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Tuxedos held for rental are assigned a class life of 9 years under the accelerated cost recovery system as modified by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Consequently, the depreciation deduction for rental tuxedos generally is determined by using a 5-year recovery period, the applicable convention, and the 200-percent declining balance method switching to the straight-line method for the taxable year in which the depreciation deduction would be maximized.

Reasons for change

In response to a statutory mandate to monitor and analyze actual experience with respect to all depreciable assets, the depreciation Analysis Division of the Office of Tax Analysis of the Department of Treasury issued a report during July of 1989 that recommended a class life of 2 years for tuxedos held for rental.

Explanation of provision

Tuxedos held for rental are assigned a class life of 2 years. Consequently, the depreciation deduction for rental tuxedos is to be determined by using a 3-year recovery period, the applicable convention, and the 200-percent declining balance method switching to the straight-line method for the taxable year in which the depreciation deduction would be maximized. Alternatively, a taxpayer may elect under the alternative depreciation system to determine the depreciation deduction for rental tuxedos by using a 2-year recovery period, the applicable convention, and the straight-line method.

Effective date

The provision applies to rental tuxedos placed in service after December 31, 1989.

5. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN CAPITAL EXPENDITURES INCURRED IN ORDER TO ASSIST THE DISABLED (SEC. 6685 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 190 OF THE CODE)

Present law

A taxpayer may elect to deduct qualified architectural and transportation barrier removal expenses that are paid or incurred during any taxable year in lieu of capitalizing such expenses and recovering the expenses over the recovery period of the property to which the expenses relate. The deduction allowed under this provision for any taxable year is limited to $35,000. For this purpose, an architectural and transportation barrier removal expense is any expenditure for the purpose of making any facility, or public transportation vehicle, owned or leased by the taxpayer for use in connection with a trade or business of the taxpayer more accessible to, and usable by, handicapped and elderly individuals. A qualified architectural and transportation barrier removal expense generally is any architectural and transportation barrier removal expense that satisfies standards contained in Treasury regulations.

Reason for change

The committee believes that businesses should be encouraged to invest in structures, facilities, and equipment that assist disabled customers and employees. For this reason, the bill expands the types of expenditures that will qualify for expensing. In order to make the provision revenue neutral, however, the bill reduces the annual amount that is eligible for expensing.

Explanation of provision

The definition of qualified architectural and transportation barrier removal expense is expanded to include amounts chargeable to capital account that are paid or incurred in connection with a trade or business in order to provide auxiliary aids and services or reasonable accommodations to individuals with disabilities. In addition, the annual limitation on the deduction allowed for qualified architectural and transportation barrier removal expenses is reduced to $25,000.

Effective date

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

6. TAX EXEMPTION FOR OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION (SEC. 6686 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 501(1) OF THE CODE)

Present law

The Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 established the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) as an agency of the United States under the foreign policy guidance of the Secretary of State. The purpose of OPIC is to facilitate the participation of United States private capital and skills in the economic development of less developed countries by conducting insurance, reinsurance, guarantee, and financing operations on a self-sustaining basis for OPIC-approved overseas investment projects of U.S. citizens.

The Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, specifically provides that OPIC is exempt from all Federal, State, and local taxes (22 U.S.C. sec. 2199(J)).

The International Cooperation Act of 1989, H.R. 2655 (reported by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on June 16, 1989, H. Rep. 101-90, and passed by the House on June 29, 1989), would amend and recodify the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, including the provisions governing OPIC, but would not specifically provide that OPIC is exempt from Federal income taxes.

The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 provides that a corporation organized under an Act of Congress which is an instrumentality of the United States is exempt from Federal income tax only if the exemption is provided under such Act as amended and supplemented before July 18, 1984, or if the exemption is provided in the Internal Revenue Code or a revenue Act (Internal Revenue Code sec. 501(c)(1)).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to codify in the Internal Revenue Code the existing exemption from Federal income taxes provided for OPIC.

Explanation of provision

The Internal Revenue Code is amended to specifically provide that OPIC is exempt from Federal income taxes.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

7. DENIAL OF RETROACTIVE CERTIFICATIONS FOR WORK INCENTIVE (WIN) TAX CREDIT (SEC. 6687 OF THE BILL)

Present law

Under prior law, the work incentive (WIN) credit provided a tax credit to employers for the employment of certain qualified individuals. Prior to the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (ERTA), the WIN credit did not specifically require certification of an employee as a qualified individual prior to the date of employment. In 1981, ERTA modified the WIN credit by merging it with the targeted jobs credit. ERTA also required that certification of an individual as a member of a targeted group must be obtained or requested before the date an individual begins work. This change was made generally effective on July 23, 1981, to avoid the potential for substantial revenue losses.

The law is unclear as to whether the requirement that the request for certification be made contemporaneously with employ-

[1] Equivalent barrels is computed as the sum of (1) the number of barrels of crude oil produced, and (2) the number of cubic feet of natural gas produced divided by 6,000. ment applies only to the new targeted jobs credit or to the prior separate WIN credit. The Internal Revenue Service took the position that retroactive certifications under the prior-law WIN credit are not valid.[1] The Tax Court recently held that retroactive certifications are valid for purposes of claiming the prior-law WIN credit.[2]

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the allowance of the WIN credit for retroactive certifications clearly undermines the incentive effect intended under the credit. Past congressional action has been in conformance with this belief but recent judicial action has injected some uncertainty as to the operation of present law. In some instances employers attempt to claim the WIN credit either on audit or through amended tax returns several years after the eligible employee was hired. The committee believes that this provision will eliminate any uncertainty and, by preventing further retroactive certifications, reduce a drain on the Federal Treasury that would result from future reliance on the Tax Court case. This provision was passed by the House in 1987 with an effective date of March 11, 1987.[3] This effective date was retained in order to serve the goals of the provision without creating undue administrative complexity.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that certifications for the WIN credit (sec. 50B(h)(1) of the Code as in effect for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1982) must be made on or before the day the individual begins work.

Effective date

The provision is effective for WIN credits first claimed after March 11, 1987.

8. TREATMENT OF INCOME FROM PERSONAL INJURY AWARDS FOR MINOR CHILDREN (SEC. 6688 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1(I) OF THE CODE).

Present law

As a result of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, the unearned income of a child under age 14 generally is taxed at the top marginal rate of his or her parents.

Reasons for change

Unearned income of minor children is taxed at the marginal rate of the parents in order to reduce shifting of income producing assets among family members and in recognition of the fact that a family is, in a sense, a single economic unit. The committee concluded that personal injury awards were not susceptible to income shifting and when such awards could not satisfy an obligation of support, they did not enrich the family.

Explanation of provision

Income attributable to lump sum damages received by a child on account of personal injuries or sickness would be taxed at the child's rate if such income accrues in a custodial account and is prohibited from being used to satisfy an obligation of support.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

J. Estate and Gift Tax Provisions

1. ESTATE TAX INCLUSION RELATED TO VALUATION FREEZES (SEC. 6691 OF THE BILL, AND SECS. 2036(C) AND 2207B OF THE CODE)

Present law

If a person holds a substantial interest in an enterprise and in effect transfers property having a disproportionately large share of the potential appreciation in such person's interest in the income of, or rights in, the enterprise, and retains an interest in the income of, or rights in, the enterprise, then the transferred property is includible in such person's gross estate (sec. 2036(c)). The estate is entitled to recover from the person receiving the property a portion of the estate tax attributable to the inclusion (sec. 2207B).

Reasons for change

The committee was concerned that the statute's complexity, breadth, and vagueness posed an unreasonable impediment to the transfer of family businesses. The committee was also concerned about the difficulties taxpayers and the Treasury Department encountered in interpreting the statute.[4] Many taxpayers uncertain about the scope of these rules have refrained from legitimate intrafamily transactions.

The current rules are overinclusive because they apply if the transferor retains virtually any retained interest in the income from, or rights in, the enterprise. The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 responded to these concerns by enacting a number of safe-harbors and by allowing a correction period for compliance with the statute. The committee believes, however, that this response was not sufficient to deal fully with the statute's over inclusiveness.

The committee is convinced that additional technical and substantive modifications to the current rules would exacerbate rather than solve the current problems with the statute. The committee is concerned, however, about the potential for abuse in this area. As a result, the committee is studying various alternative ways of addressing this problem and believes that an appropriate solution must be targeted narrowly to prevent egregious valuation abuses.

Code sections 2036(c) and 2207B are repealed.

Effective date

The repeal of sections 2036(c) and 2207B is retroactive from their date of enactment.

2. $2 MILLION EXCLUSION FROM GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER TAX TO GRANDCHILDREN (SEC. 6692 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1433(B)(3) OF THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986)

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 imposed a generation-skipping transfer tax (GSTT) on direct transfers to grandchildren. However, a person may make direct skip transfers of up to $2 million to a grandchild prior to January 1, 1990, without incurring this tax (the "$2 million exclusion"). A transfer to a trust qualifies for the $2 million exclusion only if (1) the grandchild is the only beneficiary; (2) the property will be includible in the grandchild's gross estate; and (3) trust income must be distributed annually after the grandchild attains age 21 (the "distribution requirement").

Reasons for change

The GSTT is designed to tax transfers to grandchildren as if the property passes through the child's estate. As a result, it is imposed at the maximum estate tax rate. The imposition of this tax is warranted where the intervening generation has a significant interest in the property (i.e., a life estate or term of years). The Committee believes that it is appropriate to continue to impose the GSTT on taxable terminations and taxable distributions, while providing different tax treatment for outright transfers to skip persons (or transfers in trust for the skip person's exclusive benefit).

The Committee believes that the primary problem with respect to generation-skipping transfers relates to transfers in trust rather than direct transfers. Prior to 1976, taxpayers could avoid the estate tax by setting up complicated trusts that gave successive life estates to their children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. This technique allowed the individuals in the lower generations to enjoy the property but did not require the property to be included in their estates. However, in the case of an outright transfer to a grandchild, the child receives no economic benefit from the transfer. In light of these considerations, the committee believes that the current law treatment of direct transfers must be modified.

Explanation of provision

The $2 million exclusion for direct transfers is made permanent. In addition, the distribution requirement is eliminated.

Effective date

The provision is effective for transfers made after October 3, 1989.

3. JOINT PURCHASE OF TERM AND REMAINDER INTEREST IN PROPERTY (SEC. 6693) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 167 OF THE CODE)

Present law

The purchaser of a term interest in property is, for income tax purposes, entitled to amortize the cost of the interest over its expected life. The purchaser of a remainder interest in property generally does not include currently in income increases in the value of the interest.

On the other hand, a person who divides an interest in property into two parts cannot create an amortizable asset where none previously existed. Thus, a person who retains a term interest in property while transferring the remainder in that property cannot amortize the cost of the term interest.[1]

Reasons for change

A common method of deferring income tax is for two related persons to purchase jointly a term and remainder interest in property. Typically, a parent will purchase an income interest in property while, at the same time, a child purchases the remainder interest in that same property. Joint purchases can be made of many types of property.

Under present law, the parent reduces taxable income from the term interest by the amortization deduction of the cost of the term interest. The child has gain on the remainder interest when the property is sold or exchanged.

For example, assume that interest rates are 10 percent and that a parent purchases for $435.53 a 6-year term interest in land that has a fair market value of $1,000 and rental income of $100 per year. At the same time, the parent's child purchases the remainder interest in the land for $564.47. The parent receives the income of $100 per year, but is allowed a deduction of $72.59 ($435.53 divided by 6) per year. If the value of the land does not change, the child will recognize gain of $435.53 ($1,000 minus $564.47) on its sale.

If the parent had purchased the land outright for $1,000 and then given the remainder interest in the land to the child, the parent would have been currently taxed on the $100 of rental income, without any amortization deduction. The child would recognize gain only if the amount realized from the sale of the land exceeded $1,000.

The committee understands that the deferral implicit in a joint purchase results from the fact that the remainderman is not taxed currently on the increase in value of the remainder interest. Present law limits the tax reduction possibilities inherent in such deferral by denying the creator of a term interest an amortization deduction. Denial of the deduction to the creator substitutes for taxing the remainderman. The committee believes that such substitute taxation is appropriate whenever related persons own both the term and remainder interests.

No depreciation or amortization deduction is allowed for a term interest in property for any period during which the remainder interest in such property is held (directly or indirectly) by a related person. The provision does not otherwise change the depreciation of the underlying property. For example, the provision would not affect the depreciation allowed to an income beneficiary of a gift made in trust. See sec. 167(h).

When the term interest terminates, the taxpayer is treated as having a loss from the sale or exchange of such interest no greater than the deductions disallowed by the provision.[2]

A term interest in property is a life interest in property, an interest in property for a term of years, or an income interest in a trust. A related person is any person bearing a relationship to the taxpayer described in section 267(b) or 267(e). In determining whether persons are related, the constructive ownership rules of section 267(c) apply.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the provision, including regulations preventing avoidance of the provision through cross-ownership arrangements or otherwise. Such regulations shall prevent avoidance of the provision by one family owning a term interest in one property and a remainder interest in a second property, while another family owns a remainder interest in the first property, and a term interest in the second property. Such regulations would also prevent avoidance through the joint purchases of interests in substantially similar property. For example, a parent could not avoid the provision by purchasing a life interest in stock of a corporation while a child purchases a remainder interest in other stock of the same corporation.

The committee intends that the Treasury regulations prevent the avoidance of the provision through the use of property or properties in which the term interest terminates over time, such as interest in a shrinking portion of property. In appropriate circumstances, such regulations might defer any loss until the taxpayer's interest in the entire property (or all properties) terminates.

The committee does not intend to affect the taxation of a stripped bond under section 1286 or transactions in which the lessor is imputed income under section 467(f).

Effective date

The provision applies to life or terminable interests acquired after July 27, 1989, in taxable years ending after such date.

4. WAIVER OF RIGHT OF RECOVERY FOR CERTAIN MARITAL DEDUCTION PROPERTY (SEC. 6694 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 2207A OF THE CODE)

Present law

For estate and gift tax purposes a marital deduction is allowed for qualified terminable interest property (QTIP). Such property generally is includible in the estate of the surviving spouse. The surviving spouse's estate is entitled to recover the portion of the estate tax attributable to the inclusion of such property in the surviving spouse's gross estate from the person receiving the property, unless the spouse directs otherwise by will. Thus, a will requiring that all taxes be paid from probate property may have the effect of waiving the right to recovery.

Reasons for change

The committee understood that persons utilizing standard testamentary language were often inadvertently waiving the right of recovery. Accordingly, the committee decided that the right of recovery should not be waived absent specific reference to that right.

Explanation of provision

The right of recovery with respect to qualified terminable interest property applies unless the spouse otherwise directs in a provision of the will specifically referring to this provision, i.e., a specific reference to section 2207A.

Effective date

The provision is effective for decedents dying after date of enactment.

5. INCLUSION IN GROSS ESTATE OF GIFTS MADE WITHIN THREE YEARS OF DEATH (SEC. 6695 OF THE BILL AND SECTION 2035 OF THE CODE)

Present law

If property is transferred within three years of the decedent's death from a revocable trust which would be includible in the decedent's estate under section 2038, the value of the gross estate includes the value of the property so transferred (sec. 2035). This rule could be interpreted to include in the transferor's gross estate transfers of less than $10,000 that qualified for the annual exclusion.

Reasons for change

Many persons use revocable trusts as a substitute for wills. By including transfers from such a trust made three years prior to death in the gross estate, present law penalizes such persons. The committee determined that the transfer tax consequences of making a gift from such a trust should be no different than if such gift was made directly.

Explanation of provision

Section 2035 would not apply to any transfer from a trust with respect to which the decedent retained the right to revoke unless section 2035 would apply to such transfer if made directly by the decedent. In addition, the provision makes clarifying changes to section 2035.

Effective date

The provision is effective for decedents dying after the date of enactment.

6. DEFINITION OF QUALIFIED TERMINABLE INTEREST PROPERTY (SEC. 6696 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 2056(b)(7) AND 2523(f) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Since December 31, 1981, a martial deduction has been allowed for qualified terminable interest property (QTIP). In order to qualify as qualified terminable interest property, the surviving spouse must have a qualifying income interest for life, which in turn requires that the spouse be entitled to all of the income from the property, payable annually or at more frequent intervals. Property qualifying under the QTIP rule generally is includible in the gross estate of the surviving spouse for Federal estate tax purposes.

Under proposed regulations, an income interest will not fail to constitute a qualifying income interest for life solely because income between the last distribution date and the date of the surviving spouse's dealth is not required to be distributed to the surviving spouse or the surviving spouse's estate. See Prop. Reg. secs. 20.2056(b)-7(c)(1), 25.2523(f)-1(b). Contrary to the regulations, the United States Tax Court has held that in order to satisfy the QTIP requirements, income accumulated between the date of the last distribution and the date of the spouse's death (the "accumulated income") must be paid to the spouse's estate or be subject to a power of appointment held by the spouse. See Estate of Howard v. Commissioner, 91 T.C. 329, 338 (1988).

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, an income interest does not fail to qualify as qualified income interest for life solely because income for the period after the date of the last distribution and before the date of the surviving spouse's death is not required to be distributed to the surviving spouse. Where the marital deduction is allowed, however, the income for such period is includible in the gross estate of the surviving spouse for Federal estate tax purposes.

No inference with respect to present law is to be drawn from the provision.

The provision applies to decedents dying, and gifts made, after October 3, 1989. The proposal would not require the inclusion in the surviving spouse's gross estate of property for which no martial deduction was claimed.

The estate of a surviving spouse dying after October 3, 1989, is required to include property transferred prior to that date for which a marital deduction was in fact allowed even though the accumulated income from the property was not required to be paid to the surviving spouse.

[2] The exact amount of the loss is to be determined by Treasury Regulations. The committee expects that in the joint purchase of land described in the above example, the parent would receive a loss equal to $435.53 in year six.

Subtitle G. Revsion of Civil Penalties

1. INFORMATION REPORTING PENALTIES (SECS. 6711–6715 OF THE BILL AND NEW SECS. 6721–6724 OF THE CODE AND SECS. 6011 AND 6038 OF THE CODE)

Present law

In General

Any person that fails to file an information return with the Internal Revenue Service on or before the prescribed filing date is subject to a $50 penalty for each failure, with a maximum penalty of $100,000 per calendar year. Information returns relating to interest and dividends are subject to this $50 penalty for each failure, but without any cap on the total amount of penalty that may be imposed. In addition, any person that fails to provide a copy of an information return (a "payee statement") to a taxpayer on or before the prescribed due date is subject to a penalty of $50 for each failure, with a maximum penalty of $100,000 per calendar year. If a person fails to include all of the information required to be shown on an information return or a payee statement or includes incorrect information, then a penalty of $5 may be imposed with respect to each such failure, with a maximum penalty of $20,000 per calendar year. Stricter penalty provisions apply in the case of interest and dividend returns and in the case of intentional failures to comply with the information return requirements.

A penalty may also be imposed for each failure to include a correct taxpayer identification number on a return or statement and for each failure to furnish a correct taxpayer identification number to another person. The amount of the penalty that may be imposed is either $5 or $50 for each failure, depending on the nature of the failure.

Foreign Provisions

Income of foreign persons subject to withholding

Persons having control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of certain types of U.S. income of foreign persons are required to deduct and withhold U.S. tax from such income under chapter 3 of the Code's income tax provisions (secs. 1441–1464). Generally, any person required to serve as a withholding agent under chapter 3 must provide each income recipient an annual withholding statement Form 1042S and must file all required Forms 1042S with the IRS accompanied by a return (Form 1042) summarizing the information on the Forms 1042S (Reg. sec. 1.1461–2). As described above, the Code generally provides penalties for each failure to file a required information return with the IRS and each failure to provide a required payee statement. These penalties do not apply, however, to each failure with respect to Forms 1042S.

Information reporting

Generally, every U.S. person is required to report certain information concerning any foreign corporation that such person controls and information relating to transactions between the corporation and certain specified persons. Failure to provide such information subjects the U.S. person to a monetary penalty plus a denial of foreign tax credits (sec. 6038). These information reporting requirements and this penalty do not specifically refer to all types of information needed to determine tax liabilities with respect to controlled foreign corporations.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the present-law penalties should be modified to encourage persons to file correct information returns even though such returns are filed after the prescribed filing date. The committee believes that it is important to give taxpayers an incentive to correct their errors as rapidly as possible.

Explanation of provisions

Overview

The bill modified the information return penalties provided under present law in order to encourage persons to file correct information returns even though such returns are filed after the prescribed filing date. The committee has established a three-tier penalty structure in which the amount of the penalty varies with the length of time within which the taxpayer corrects the failure. The committee believes that this structure will give taxpayers an incentive to correct their errors as rapidly as possible. The committee also provides that taxpayers may correct a de minimis number of errors and avoid penalties entirely. The bill makes uniform the reporting requirements applicable to magnetic media and requires a study of service bureaus, which file information documents on behalf of other persons.

Failure To File Correct Information Returns

Under the bill, any person that fails to file a correct information return with the Internal Revenue Service on or before the prescribed filing date is subject to a penalty that varies based on when, if at all, the correct information return is filed. If a person files a correct information return after the prescribed filing date but on or before the date that is 30 days after the prescribed filing date, the amount of the penalty is $15 per return, with a maximum penalty of $75,000 per calendar year. If a person files a correct information return after the date that is after 30 days after the prescribed filing date but on or before August 1, the amount of the penalty is $30 per return, with a maximum penalty of $150,000 per calendar year. If a correct information return is not filed on or before August 1 of any year, the amount of the penalty is $50 per return, with a maximum penalty of $250,000 per calendar year.

The committee chose this initial 30-day period for filing correct information returns with a smaller penalty because it believes that it is vital to the integrity of the self-assessment system that taxpayers receive their payee statements on a timely basis (generally, these must be provided by January 31). The preparation of these payee statements given to taxpayers is integrally connected with the preparation of the parallel information returns given to the IRS. The committee believes that this initial 30-day period gives filers of these information returns an appropriate amount of time within which to correct failures with respect to documents prepared for the IRS without jeopardizing the provision of the payee statements directly to taxpayers on a timely basis. Similarly, the committee chose the August 1 date because this is approximately the date on which the IRS begins intensive processing and use of this data. Consequently, submission of the data after this date is effectively equivalent to not providing the data at all. The committee expects that in future years advancements in available technology may permit the IRS to utilize this data earlier in the year. If this proves to be the case, the committee expects the IRS to request that the Congress consider modifying this deadline legislatively.

The bill also provides a special rule for de minimis failures to include the required, correct information. This exception applies to incorrect information returns that are corrected on or before August 1. Under the exception, if an information return is originally filed without all of the required information or with incorrect information and the return is corrected on or before August 1, then the original return is treated as having been filed with all of the correct required information. The number of information returns that may qualify for this exception for any calendar year is limited to the greater of (1) 10 returns or (2) one-half of one percent of the total number of information returns that are required to be filed by the person during the calendar year.

The use of 10 returns for this purpose effectively provides a special small-business rule in this penalty. According to IRS statistics, approximately 84 percent of payors who file information returns with the IRS file 10 or fewer forms. Thus, these payors will have until August 1 to correct without penalty errors of omission or commission on information returns that were originally timely-filed with the IRS. If the total number of returns corrected by the taxpayer exceeds the de minimis threshold, only the number exceeding the threshold is subject to penalty. This specific de minimis rule in no way restricts the ability of the IRS or the courts to grant a waiver based on reasonable cause (discussed below). The reasonable cause waiver is applied before the de minimis rule is applied.

In addition, the bill provides special, lower maximum levels for this penalty for small businesses. Small businesses are defined as firms having average annual gross receipts for the most recent 3 taxable years that do not exceed $5 million. The maximum penalties for small businesses are: $25,000 (instead of $75,000) if the failures are corrected on or before 30 days after the prescribed filing date; $50,000 (instead of $150,000) if the failures are corrected on or before August 1; and $100,000 (instead of $250,000) if the failures are not corrected on or before August 1.

The bill also incorporates into this general structure the penalty for failure to provide information reports to the IRS or statements to payees relating to pension payments.

The committee intends that taxpayers who correct errors in payor statements filed with IRS also make any necessary parallel corrections to payee statements provided to taxpayers. In addition, the committee intends that the substance of the current IRS temporary regulations (Treas. Reg. sec. 301.6723–1T(b)), providing an exception from penalty for inconsequential omissions and inaccuracies, be continued and expanded to apply to information returns, payee statements, and failures to comply with other information reporting requirements (new secs. 6721, 6722, and 6723).

In addition, the committee notes that the IRS permits taxpayers to request extensions of time to file information returns (such as by Form 8809). The committee approves of the existence of administrative procedures to consider requests for extension and expects that these types of procedures will continue to be available to payors.

The bill maintains the present-law rules for failures that are due to intentional disregard of the filing requirement. Failure to correct information returns within a reasonable time after being requested to do so by the IRS could be considered to be intentional disregard. In addition, some have expressed to the committee the belief that the overall caps on these penalties are inappropriate, in that payors who are required to file large number of information returns or payee statements may ignore the requirements to do so and pay the maximum penalty as a "cost of doing business" where it is less than the cost of compliance would be. The committee believes that the general caps serve an important function and should be retained. The committee believes that behavior such as ignoring filing requirements in the manner just described is intentional disregard of those requirements, and that payors who engage in such behavior should be subject to the higher penalties (without caps) that apply in cases of intentional disregard.

Failure To Furnish Correct Payee Statements

Under the bill, any person that fails to furnish a correct payee statement to a taxpayer on or before the prescribed due date is subject to a penalty (as under present law) of $50 per statement, with a maximum penalty of $100,000 per calendar year. If the failure to furnish a correct payee statement to a taxpayer is due to intentional disregard of the requirement, the bill generally provides a penalty of $100 per statement or, if greater, 10 percent[1] of the amount required to be shown on the statement, with no limitation on the maximum penalty per calendar year. The committee has not altered the present-law deadline by which these payee satements must be furnished, because it believes that it is vital to the integrity of the self-assessment system that taxpayers receive their payee statements on a timely basis. Many taxpayers rely on the timely receipt of these payee statements so that these taxpayers can complete their own tax returns on a timely basis.

Failure To Comply With Other Information Reporting Requirements.

Under the bill, any person that fails to comply with other specified information reporting requirements on or before the prescribed date is subject to a penalty of $50 for each failure, with a maximum penalty of $100,000 per calendar year. The information reporting requirements specified for this purpose include any requirement to include a correct taxpayer identification number on a return or statement and any requirement to furnish a correct taxpayer identification number to another person. The bill coordinates this penalty with the penalty for failure to file correct information returns and the penalty for failure to file correct payee statements by making this penalty inapplicable to failures penalized under those provisions.

Waiver, Definitions, and Special Rules

The bill consolidates the waiver standards relating to information reporting into one provision. This bill provides that any of the information reporting penalties may be waived if it is shown that the failure to comply is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect. If a payor correctly reports information that the payor received from a payee, the payor is not subject to penalty for errors that the payee made in reporting the information to the payor (provided that the payor had no reason to believe that the information was incorrect). The committee intends that for this purpose, reasonable cause exists if significant mitigating factors are present, such as the fact that a person has an established history of complying with the information reporting requirements.[2] The separate, higher waiver standard under present law for interest and dividends is repealed. Interest and dividend returns and statements are consequently subject to this general waiver standard. The Committee intends that payors of interest and dividends that comply with the present-law due diligence standards be considered (for purposes of this bill) to have established reasonable cause.

Foreign Provisions

Penalties for failure to file withholding statements

The bill integrates the penalty for failure to file Form 1042S and failure to provide Form 1042S to the payee into the general penalty structure. Thus, the bill treats each Form 1042S required to be filed with the IRS and provided to a payee as an information return and as a payee statement, respectively, as those terms are defined in section 6724. Accordingly, each failure to file any required Form 1042S will be subject to a separate penalty under section 6721, and each failure to provide a payee any required Form 1042S will be subject to a separate penalty under section 6722.

Penalties for failure to report information with respect to certain foreign corporations

The bill clarifies the reporting requirements and penalties imposed by section 6038 by expressly applying those provisions to failures to provide certain information with respect to related parties, such as controlled foreign corporations of which the person subject to the requirements is a U.S. shareholder.

Uniform Requirements for Returns on Magnetic Media

The bill provides that uniform magnetic media requirements apply to all information returns filed during any calandar year. The bill accomplishes this by making statutory the requirement currently contained in IRS regulations that persons filing more than 250 information returns file those returns on magnetic media. The bill makes this requirement applicable to all types of information returns. Thus, the bill repeals the provision of present law that requires persons filing more than 50 information returns relating to payments of interest, dividends, and patronage dividends to file all such returns on magnetic media. The committee also intends that the IRS permit payors to file in as many formats as is feasible, and that IRS requirements keep pace with technological advances. The bill provides that the penalty for failing to file information returns on magnetic media when required to do so applies only to the number required to be so filed that exceeds 250. The penalties for failure to file on a timely basis correct information returns would apply to the first 250 returns.

The bill provides that the IRS is to take into account (among other factors) the ability of the taxpayer to comply at a reasonable cost with the magnetic-media filing requirements. The committee intends that the IRS take into consideration other instances of undue hardship, such as temporary equipment breakdowns or destruction of magnetic media equipment, in granting one-year or multi-year exemptions from this requirement.

Study of Procedures to Prevent Mismatching

The bill requires the General Accounting Office, in consultation with the Treasury Department, to conduct a study on whether, if the name and taxpayer identification number of any person that is set forth on an information return do not correspond to the name and taxpayer identification number of such person contained on the records of the IRS, the IRS should be permitted to disclose to the person that has filed such information return such information as may be necessary to determine the correct name and taxpayer identification number. The study should also consider (1) alternative means of correcting the mismatch between names and taxpayer identification numbers that involve the least amount of disclosure of confidential taxpayer identity information, (2) what exact information it is that IRS has in its records that would help resolve mismatches, (3) how the IRS can better process in a timely manner name change information (for example due to marriage or divorce) received initially by the SSA, which IRS uses to revise its records, and (4) how taxpayers can best inform the IRS of a name or address change, prior to waiting until the next tax return filing date. A report on the study, together with any recommendations, is to be submitted to the tax-writing committees of the Congress by June 1, 1990. In the interim, the IRS should establish a procedure and contact point within the IRS where taxpayers themselves (or information return filers who obtain a exception from the taxpayer) can obtain a listing of the names that the IRS recognizes as valid when matching information returns with a particular taxpayer identification number.

Study of Service Bureaus

The bill requires the General Accounting Office, in consultation with the Treasury Department, to conduct a study of whether service bureaus engaged in the business of transmitting information returns or other documents to the IRS on behalf of other persons should be subject to registration or other regulation. A report on the study together with any recommendations, is to be submitted to the tax-writing committees of the Congress not later than July 1, 1990.

The committee is concerned that some service bureaus may not be effectively communicating with their customers as to difficulties the IRS has encountered with the data the service bureau has transmitted on behalf of payors. This failure of communication may increase the difficulty that both the actual payor and the IRS have in resolving problems with the transmitted data. In addition, it may be difficult for payors to assess the relative competence of individual service bureaus, in that the IRS cannot legally state whether or not it has encountered problems with a particular service bureau. The GAO study should consider problems such as these.

The information reporting provisions of the bill generally apply to information returns and payee statements the due date for which (determined without regard to extensions) is after December 31, 1989.

[1] Five percent for several types of statements.

[2] In addition, the committee intends that reasonable cause generally be considered to exist for failures due to (a) catastrophes such as equipment and software failures or fires, storms, or other casualties, or (b) statutory or regulatory changes (i) that have a major, direct impact upon data processing and (ii) that are made so close to the time that the information reporting is required that, for all practical purposes, the changes cannot be complied with.

2. ACCURACY PENALTIES (SEC. 6721 OF THE BILL AND NEW SECS. 6662-6665 OF THE CODE AND SECS. 6621(C), 6653, 6659, 6659A, 6660, AND 6661 OF THE CODE)

Negligence Penalty

If any part of an underpayment of tax required to be shown on a return is due to negligence or disregard of rules or regulations, a penalty may be imposed equal to 5 percent of the total amount of the underpayment. An underpayment of tax that is attributable to a failure to include on an income tax return an amount shown on an information return is treated as subject to the negligence penalty absent clear and convincing evidence to the contrary.

Fraud Penalty

If any part of an underpayment of tax required to be shown on a return is due to fraud, a penalty may be imposed equal to 75 percent of the portion of the underpayment that is attributable to fraud.

Substantial Understatement Penalty

If the correct income tax liability of a taxpayer for a taxable year exceeds that reported by the taxpayer by the greater of 10 percent of the correct tax or $5,000 ($10,000 in the case of most corporations), then a substantial understatement exists and a penalty may be imposed equal to 25 percent of the underpayment of tax attributable to the understatement. In determining whether a substantial understatement exists, the amount of the understatement is reduced by any portion attributable to an item if (1) the treatment of the item on the return is or was supported by substantial authority, or (2) facts relevant to the tax treatment of the item were adequately disclosed on the return or on a statement attached to the return. Special rules apply to tax shelters.

Valuation Penalties

If an individual, personal service corporation, or closely held corporation underpays income tax for any taxable year by $1,000 or more as a result of a valuation overstatement, then a penalty may be imposed with respect to the amount of the underpayment that is attributable to the valuation overstatement. A valuation overstatement exists if the valuation or adjusted basis of any property claimed on a return is 150 percent or more of the correct value or adjusted basis. The amount of the penalty that may be imposed increases from 10 to 20 to 30 percent of the underpayment attributable to the valuation overstatement as the percentage by which the valuation claimed exceeds the correct valuation increases. Similar penalties may be imposed with respect to (1) an underpayment of income tax that is attributable to an overstatement of pension liabilities and (2) an underpayment of estate or gift tax that is attributable to a valuation understatement.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the number of different penalties that relate to accuracy of a tax return, as well as the potential for overlapping among many of these penalties, causes confusion among taxpayers and leads to difficulties in administering these penalties by the IRS. Consequently, the committee has revised these penalties and consolidated them. The committee believes that its changes will significantly improve the fairness, comprehensibility, and administrability of these penalties.

Explanation of provisions

Overview

The bill consolidates into one part of the Internal Revenue Code all of the generally applicable penalties relating to the accuracy of tax returns. The penalties that are consolidated are the negligence penalty, the substantial understatement penalty, and the valuation penalties. These consolidated penalties are also coordinated with the fraud penalty. The bill repeals the present-law versions of these penalties. The bill reorganizes the accuracy penalties into a new structure that operates to eliminate any stacking of the penalties. The bill is effective for returns the due date for which is after December 31, 1989.

Accuracy-Related Penalty

The accuracy-related penalty, which is imposed at a rate of 20 percent, applies to the portion of any underpayment that is attributable to (1) negligence, (2) any substantial understatement of income tax, (3) any substantial valuation overstatement, (4) any substantial overstatement of pension liabilities, or (5) any substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatement.

(1) Negligence

If an underpayment of tax is attributable to negligence, the negligence penalty is to apply only to the portion of the underpayment that is attributable to negligence rather than, as under present law, to the entire underpayment of tax. This is a significant change from present law. Under present law, if any portion of an underpayment is attributable to negligence, the negligence penalty applies to the entire underpayment (both the portion attributable to negligence and the portion not attributable to negligence). Thus, under present law, a taxpayer who has an underpayment, only a small portion of which was attributable to negligence, is subject to the same penalty as a taxpayer with the same underpayment, all of which is attributable to negligence, even though the behavior of the first taxpayer is arguably less culpable than the behavior of the second taxpayer. The bill rectifies this inequity by applying the negligence penalty only to the portion of the underpayment attributable to negligence.

Negligence includes any careless, reckless, or intentional disregard of rules or regulations, as well as any failure to make a reasonable attempt to comply with the provisions of the Code. In addition, the bill repeals the present-law presumption under which an underpayment is treated as attributable to negligence if the underpayment is due to a failure to include on an income tax return an amount shown on an information return. As a practical matter, even in the absence of a statutory presumption, evidence of such a failure is still strong evidence of negligence.

(2) Substantial understatement of income tax

The accuracy-related penalty that applies to the portion of an underpayment that is attributable to a substantial understatement of income tax is the same as the substantial understatement penalty provided under present law with three principal modifications. First, the rate is lowered to 20 percent. Second, the committee expands the list of authorities upon which taxpayers may rely (currently containd in Treasury regulations) to include proposed regulations, private letter rulings, technical advice memoranda, actions on decisions, general counsel memoranda, information or press releases, notices, and any other similar documents published by the IRS in the Internal Revenue Bulletin. [3] In addition, the list of authorities is to include General Explanations of tax legislation prepared by the Joint Committee on Taxation (the "Blue Book"). Third, the bill requires the IRS to publish not less frequently than annually a list of positions for which the IRS believes there is no substantial authority and which affect a significant number of taxpayers. The purpose of this list is to assist taxpayers in determining whether a position should be disclosed in order to avoid the substantial understatement penalty. Thus, if a taxpayer takes a position that is enumerated on this list, the taxpayer could choose to disclose that position to avoid imposition of the substantial understatement component of the accuracy-related penalty. However, inclusion of a position on this list is not conclusive as to whether or not substantial authority exists with respect to that position and no inference is to be drawn that there is (or could be) substantial authority for a position that is not on the list. If, however, there is litigation as to whether there is substantial authority, and the court concludes that the IRS is correct in the belief that there is not substantial authority for the position, then this penalty would apply. The committee believes that this list will be useful to taxpayers, in that it will assist taxpayers in determining whether substantial authority exists with respect to a particular issue on the list. Although the list is not exclusive, the committee intends that the IRS make the list as comprehensive as practical, which will make it more useful to taxpayers and their advisors. The committee intends that there should be no inference that substantial authority exists with respect to positions that are not included on this list. Disclosure of a position for purposes of this penalty does not necessarily prevent imposition of the negligence penalty. Thus, for example, if a taxpayer discloses a frivolous position, the imposition of the negligence penalty could be appropriate.

(3) Substantial valuation overstatement

The penalty that is to apply to the portion of an underpayment that is attributable to a substantial valuation overstatement is generally the same as the valuation overstatement penalty provided under present law with five principal modifications. First, the bill extends the penalty to all taxpayers. The committee believes that this modification increases the fairness of this component of the accuracy-related penalty, in that the penalty is imposed upon proscribed behavior, regardless of who engages in it. Second, a substantial valuation overstatement exists if the value or adjusted basis of any property claimed on a return is 200 percent or more of the correct value or adjusted basis. Third, the penalty is to apply only [3] The committee's intent is to broaden the list of authorities upon which taxpayers may rely. The committee would, however, permit the Treasury to issue regulations providing that specific items on the committee's list of additional authorities (except for proposed regulations not yet superceded or "Blue Books") that were issued prior to the date of enactment of this bill may not be considered to be substantial authority. For example, Treasury regulations could provide that private letter rulings issued prior to the date they began to be publicly disseminated are not substantial authority. Any such limitation should, however, be as narrow as practicable, in order to further the committee's general intent that the list of authorities on which taxpayers may rely should be broadened.

if the amount of the underpayment attributable to a valuation overstatement exceeds $5,000 ($10,000 in the case of most corporations). This increases five-fold the threshold below which the penalty does not apply to individuals. Fourth, the amount of the penalty for a substantial valuation overstatement is 20 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the value or adjusted basis claimed is 200 percent or more but less than 400 percent of the correct value or adjusted basis. Fifth, as explained below, the bill provides that the rate of this penalty is doubled if the value or adjusted basis claimed is 400 percent or more of the correct value or adjusted basis. The bill retains the special rules in present law that apply to charitable deduction property. The committee believes that raising both the threshold and the minimum percentage will eliminate from the penalty's scope a number of instances of good-faith valuation disputes that may be subject to penalty under present law. As under present law, valuation misstatements that do not fall within the scope of this or the following elements of the accuracy-related penalty may still be subject to penalty if they are attributable to negligence or fraud or give rise to a substantial understatement of income tax.

(4) Substantial overstatement of pension liabilities

The accuracy-related penalty also applies to substantial overstatements of pension liabilities. This penalty is derived from the present-law penalty in section 6659A. The committee has, however, modified the present-law penalty by providing that the taxpayer is subject to this component of the accuracy-related penalty only if the actuarial determination of pension liabilities (taken into account for purposes of computing the deduction under paragraph (1) or (2) of section 404(a)) is 200 percent or more of the amount determined to be correct (under present law, the penalty applies to claims 150 percent or more in excess of the amount determined to be correct). As under present law, this penalty applies only if the underpayment attributable to the valuation overstatement exceeds $1,000.

(5) Substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatement

The accuracy-related penalty also applies to substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatements. This penalty is derived from the present-law penalty in section 6660. The committee has, however, modified the present-law penalty by providing that the taxpayer is subject to this penalty only if the value of any property claimed on an estate or gift tax return is 50 percent or less of the amount determined to be correct. (Under present law, the penalty applies to claims that are 66⅔ percent or less of the amount determined to be correct.) In addition, the committee has modified the present-law penalty by increasing five-fold the threshold below which the penalty does not apply, from $1,000 to $5,000. The committee believes that raising both the threshold and the minimum percentage will eliminate from the penalty's scope a number of instances of good-faith valuation disputes that may be subject to penalty under present law.

(6) Gross valuation misstatements

The bill provides that the rate of the general accuracy penalty is to be doubled (to 40 percent) in the case of gross valuation misstatements. there are three types of gross valuation misstatements. The first is the same as the substantial valuation overstatement component of the accuracy-related penalty, except that the doubling is to apply only to valuation overstatements claimed on a return that are 400 percent or more of the amount determined to be the correct amount. The second is the same as the substantial overstatement of pension liabilities component of the accuracy-related penalty, except that the doubling is to apply only to overstatements of pension liabilities that are 400 percent or more of the amount determined to be the correct amount. The third is the same as the substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatement component of the accuracy-related penalty, except that the doubling is to apply only to valuations claimed on the estate or gift tax return that are 25 percent or less of the amount determined to be the correct amount.

Fraud Penalty

The fraud penalty, which is imposed at a rate of 75 percent, applies to the portion of any underpayment that is attributable to fraud.

The committee has retained the special rule in present law that determines the portion of the understatement that is attributable to fraud. The bill provides, that if the IRS establishes that any portion of an underpayment is attributable to fraud, the entire underpayment is treated as attributable to fraud, except with respect to any item that the taxpayer establishes is not attributable to fraud. The committee has clarified the taxpayer's burden to proof in establishing the items not attributable to fraud (present law is unclear on this issue). The committee has provided that the taxpayer must establish the items not attributable to fraud by a preponderance of the evidence. The committee has not altered the present-law burden of proof imposed on the IRS In establishing fraud initially; the IRS must continue to meet its burden of proof by clear and convincing evidence. The committee believes that it is appropriate that the burden imposed on the IRS be higher than the burden imposed on a taxpayer in these circumstances.

Under the bill, the accuracy-related penalty is not to apply to any portion of an underpayment on which the fraud penalty is imposed. (Under present law, the fraud penalty is coordinated in this manner with the negligence penalty, but not with the other components of the accuracy-related penalty.) However, the accuracy-related penalty may be applied to any portion of the underpayment that is not attributable to fraud.

Definitions and Special Rules

The bill provides special rules that apply to each of the penalties imposed under the new structure. First, the bill provides standardized exception criteria for all of these accuracy-related penalties. The bill provides that no penalty is to be imposed if it is shown that there was reasonable cause for an underpayment and the taxpayer acted in good faith. The enactment of this standardized exception criterion is designed to permit the courts to review the assertion of penalties under the same standards that apply in reviewing additional tax that the Internal Revenue Service asserts is due. By applying this unified exception criterion to all the accuracy-related penalties, the committee believes that taxpayers will more easily understand the standard of behavior that is required. The committee also believes that this unified exception criterion will simplify the administration of these penalties by the IRS.

The committee is concerned that the present-law accuracy-related penalties (particularly the penalty for substantial understatements of tax liability) have been determined too routinely and automatically by the IRS. The committee expects that enactment of standardized exception criterion will lead the IRS to consider fully whether imposition of these penalties is appropriate before determining these penalties.

In addition, the committee has designed this standardized exception criterion to provide greater scope for judicial review of IRS determinations of these penalties. Under the waiver provision contained in present law, the Tax Court has held that it can overturn an IRS determination of the substantial understatement penalty on reasonable cause and good faith grounds only if the Tax Court finds that the IRS abused its discretion in asserting the penalty. The committee believes that it is appropriate for the courts to review the determination of the accuracy-related penalties by the same general standard applicable to their review of the additional taxes that the IRS determines are owed. The committee believes that providing greater scope for judicial review of IRS determinations of these penalties will lead to greater fairness of the penalty structure and minimize inappropriate determinations of these penalties.

The committee believes that the application of standardized exception criteria to the negligence component of the accuracy-related penalty will result in several consequences that are beneficial to taxpayers. First, the complete, item-specific disclosure of a non-frivolous position on a tax return may generally be considered to permit an exception from the negligence penalty insofar as such disclosure would tend to demonstrate that there was no intentional disregard of rules or regulations. Disclosure must be full and substantive, parallel to the disclosure required under the substantial understatement component of the accuracy-related penalty; completing and filling in a tax form is by itself insufficient disclosure for this purpose. In addition, the disclosure must be clearly identified as being made to avoid the imposition of the accuracy-related penalty. Imposition of the negligence component of the accuracy-related penalty would not be eligible for exception due to disclosure where the taxpayer fails to keep proper books and records or to substantiate items properly. Second, the application of standardized exception criteria to the negligence component of the accuracy-related penalty may also permit a taxpayer to avoid imposition of that penalty where the taxpayer makes a good-faith challenge to the validity of an IRS regulation, if the taxpayer discloses (in the manner just described) that the taxpayer is taking the position and makes specific reference to the regulation being challenged. As under present law, frivolous challenges to IRS regulations would be subject to penalty. The committee intends that the terms "reasonable cause" and "good faith" be interpreted under the bill as those terms are interpreted under present law.

Second, the bill provides that an accuracy-related or fraud penalty is to be imposed only if a return has been filed. This is intended to improve the coordination between the accuracy-related penalties and the failure to file penalties. Under present law, the courts have dealt with a number of difficult interpretative issues on the relationship between the penalty for failure to file a tax return and the accuracy-related penalties.

The committee determined that it would clarify the law if the penalty for failure to file were entirely separate and distinct from the accuracy-related penalties. (The bill also provides for an increase in the failure to file penalty where that failure is due to fraudulent failure to file.)

Third, the bill provides a standard definition of underpayment for all of the accuracy-related penalties. This standard definition is intended to simplify and coordinate the definitions in present law; it is not intended to be substantively different from present law.

The bill retains the general rule of present law that interest on these penalties commences with the date the return was required to be filed. The committee believes this rule is appropriate because the behavior being penalized is reflected on the tax return, so that imposition of interest from this date will reduce the incentives of taxpayers and their advisors to "play the audit lottery."

Repeal of Present-Law Penalties

The bill repeals the present-law penalties for negligence and fraud,[4] substantial underestimates of liability,[5] valuation overestimates,[6] and valuation underestimates for purposes of estate or gift taxes.[7] The bill also repeals the special negligence rules applicable to straddles [8] and to amounts shown on information returns.[9] The committee believes that, by repealing the special rule applicable to information returns, the burdens on taxpayers will be reduced. Finally, the bill repeals the higher interest rate that applies to substantial underpayments that are attributable to tax-motivated transactions.[10]

Effective date

The accuracy provisions of the bill generally apply to returns the due date for which (determined without regard to extensions) is after December 31, 1989.

3. PREPARER, PROMOTER, AND PROTESTER PENALTIES (SECS. 6731–6738 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 6673 OF THE CODE AND SECS. 6672, 6694, 6695, 6700, 6701, 6702, 7216, AND 7407 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Return Preparer Penalties

An income tax return preparer is also subject to a penalty of $25 for each failure to (1) furnish a copy of a return or claim for refund to the taxpayer; (2) sign the return or claim for refund; or (3) furnish his or her identifying number.

Penalty for Promoting Abusive Tax Shelters

Any person who organizes, assists in the organization of, or participates in the sale of any interest in, a partnership or other entity, any investment plan or arrangement, or any other plan or arrangement, is subject to a penalty if in connection with such activity the person makes or furnishes a false or fraudulent statement or a gross valuation overstatement. The amount of the penalty equals the greater of $1,000 or 20 percent of the gross income derived or to be derived by the person from the activity. It is unclear under present law whether the term "activity" refers to each sale of an interest in a tax shelter or whether it refers to the overall activity of promoting an abusive tax shelter.

Penalty for Aiding and Abetting the Understatement of Tax Liability

Any person who aids, assists in, procures, or advises with respect to the preparation or presentation of any portion of a return or other document under the tax laws which (1) the person knows will be used in connection with any material matter arising under the tax laws, and (2) the person knows will (if so used) result in an understatement of the tax liability of another person subject to a penalty equal to $1,000 for each return or other document ($10,000 in the case of returns and documents relating to the tax of a corporation.

Frivolous Income Tax Return Penalty

Any individual who files a frivolous income tax return is subject to a penalty of $500.

Sanctions and Costs Awarded by Courts

If it appears to the Tax Court that (1) proceedings before it have been instituted or maintained primarily for delay, (2) the taxpayer's position is frivolous, or (3) the taxpayer has unreasonably failed to pursue administrative remedies, the Court may award damages not to exceed $5,000 to the United States.

Authority To Counterclaim for Balance of Penalty in Partial Refund Suits

Taxpayers may pay a portion of the penalties for failure to collect and pay over tax, for understatement of a taxpayer's liability by an income tax return preparer, for promoting abusive tax shelters, and for aiding and abetting the understatement of tax liability. By doing so, they may obtain judicial review of the imposition of these penalties. Present law may prohibit the Federal Government from counterclaiming for the balance of the penalty in the same lawsuit.

Bonding Requirement

Return preparers may post a bond, thereby preventing any proceeding by the Federal Government under section 7407 seeking to enjoin a return preparer from engaging in prohibited conduct.

Disclosure of Certain Information by Return Preparers

In general, return preparers are subject to penalty for disclosing tax return information that is furnished to the return preparer in connection with the preparation of tax returns. The IRS may by regulation provide exceptions to this general prohibition.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it is appropriate to reconsider, in the context of the entire penalty structure, these specific penalties. These penalties have been enacted and modified on a piecemeal basis, and have not been subject to comprehensive review.

Explanation of provisions

Return Preparer Penalties

The return preparer penalties that apply to each failure to (1) furnish a copy of a return or claim for refund to the taxpayer, (2) sign the return or claim for refund, (3) furnish his or her identifying number, and (4) file a correct information return, are made uniform. The penalty is $50 for each failure and the total penalties imposed for any single type of failure for any calendar year are limited to $25,000.

The committee intends that imposition of the present-law preparer penalty (contained in section 6694) not lead automatically to any disciplinary action, or any initiation of contact with a practitioner, by the Internal Revenue Service Director of Practice. In addition, when the Director of Practice initiates contact with a practitioner but does not yet have sufficient information to determine whether a basis for discipline exists, the committee believes it is important that the Director of Practice inform the practitioner that the contact does not imply any finding of wrongdoing.

Under the bill, the amount of the penalty imposed for promoting abusive tax shelters equals $1,000 (or, if the person establishes that it is less, 100 percent of the gross income derived or to be derived by the person from such activity). In calculating the amount of the penalty, the organizing of an entity, plan or arrangement and the sale of each interest in an entity, plan, or arrangement constitute separate activities. The committee had made these modifications because the courts have differed in their interpretations of the provisions of present law. The committee believes that its modifications will eliminate confusion for cases arising in the future. The bill also clarifies that the penalty applies to direct or indirect actions. The bill provides a six-year statute of limitations for this penalty.

The committee is concerned about the large number of old tax shelter cases that await resolution. The committee recognizes that the Tax Court has, in the last several years, made significant progress in reducing its inventory of old tax shelter cases. The committee expects the Tax Court as well as the IRS to redouble their efforts to resolve or encourage settlement of old tax shelter cases. The committee realizes that delay is often caused by the litigants themselves. The committee encourages the Tax Court to use every means within its disposal, including the sanctions on litigants and attorneys imposed under this bill, to encourage litigants to resolve their disputes as expeditiously as possible. Similarly, the committee encourages the IRS to make every effort to resolve old tax shelter cases, through means such as additional settlement initiatives, better caseload management, and better utilization of the appeals process.

The committee wishes to clarify that, under present law, "investment plan or arrangement" and "other plan or arrangement," as those terms are used in section 6700 of the Code, include obligations issued by or on behalf of State or local governments which are represented to be described in section 103(a) of the Code ("bonds").[11] Therefore, the penalty imposed by section 6700 may apply to bond counsel, investment bankers and their counsel, issuers (and beneficiaries of "conduit" bonds) and their counsel, financial advisors, feasibility consultants and engineers, and other persons, who (1) are involved in the organization or sale of such State or local government bonds and (2) know or have reason to know that their opinions, offering documents, reports, or other statements (or material on which they relied in making such statements) are false or fraudulent as to any matter material to the tax exemption of the interest on the bonds. A person who makes a statement facilitating the issuance or sale of State or local government bonds (including a sale occurring subsequent to the issuance of the bonds) is involved in the organization or sale of such bonds.

[11] For purposes of determining whether an obligation is represented as so described, qualifications or conditions with respect to the opinion of the bond counsel for the issue which are commonly accepted in the marketplace are not to be considered. For exemple, an obligation could still be represented to be described in section 103(a), even though bond counsel's opinion assumed continuing compliance with certain requirements of the Code (e.g., arbitrage rebate).

Whether a person who makes or furnishes or causes another person to make or furnish a statement in connection with the organization or sale of bonds (including a statement that interest on the bonds is exempt from taxation), knows or has reason to know that such person's statement is false or fraudulent as to any material matter depends upon that person's role in the organization or sale. For example, bond counsel, issuer's counsel, and underwriters' counsel would be entitled to reply upon a feasibility study conducted by an engineering firm reputed to be expert in the subject matter and area of the study, unless such counsel independently knew or had reason to know information bringing into question the results of that study. Absent that, counsel would not be required to question the assumptions underlying, or results reached by, the study. Similarly, bond counsel would be able to rely, as to matters of fact or expectation relevant to his or her opinion, on information provided by other parties (including the issuer) absent actual knowledge or a reason to know of its inaccuracy or the use of statements not credible or reasonable on their face. On the other hand, bond counsel must draw their own legal conclusions from that information. For example, bond counsel may rely on an engineer's description of a facility as to its physical characteristics, operations, functions, and performance, but would not be able to rely on such certification for counsel's legal conclusion that the facility qualified under section 142 of the Code. Similarly, an investment banking firm organizing or assisting in the organization of the bonds holding itself out as expert in the particular subject area of the financing would have reason to question the conclusion of a feasibility consultant if that consultant's report omitted consideration of a principal factor typically discussed in feasibility reports used in such financings (e.g., competition for a project's source of supply of materials).

In addition, section 6700 applies even if the Service has insulated bondholders from the effect of a declaration of taxability of a bond sold as tax-exempt by entering into a closing agreement with the issuer of the bonds.[12] Furthermore, so long as there has been a determination that a false of fraudulent statement (which may include a conclusion of law based on a false or fraudulent statement) has been utilized, action under section 6700 is not precluded by failure of the Service to enter into a closing agreement, to declare taxability, or otherwise to penalize the issuer or owners of the bonds in question. In addition, action may be taken under section 6700 prior to delivery of bonds if a false or fraudulent statement is being used in their offering.

The bill amends the penalty for aiding and abetting the understatement of tax liability by imposing the penalty in cases where the person aids, assists in, procures, or advises with respect to the preparation or presentation of any portion of a return or other document if (1) the person knows or has reason to believe that the return or other document will be used in connection with any material matter arising under the tax laws, and (2) the person knows that if the portion of the return or other document were so used, an understatement of the tax liability of another person would result.

In addition, the bill provides that a penalty for promoting abusive tax shelters is not to be imposed on any person with respect to any document if an aiding and abetting penalty is imposed on such person with respect to the same document. Both penalties may however be imposed with respect to separate documents, such as, for example, when a promoter furnishes promotional material at the time of sale and subsequently provides partnership schedules (Forms K-1) to the investors. The committee believes that this penalty should not be used as a means of avoiding the procedural requirements of a John Doe summons under section 7609(f).

The bill also provides a six-year statute of limitations for this penalty.

Frivolous Income Tax Return Penalty

The bill deletes the special provision in present law permitting taxpayers who contest the imposition of this penalty to pay 15 percent of the penalty, which halts further collection proceedings until final judicial resolution of the dispute. Thus, taxpayers who wish to contest imposition of this penalty must pay the full penalty before seeking judicial review of imposition of the penalty. The committee believes that repealing this special 15-percent rule places taxpayers who contest this penalty by way of a refund action in the same position as taxpayers who contest the assertion that they owe additional tax to the IRS. By repealing this special rule, the bill makes suits for refund of this penalty permissible only under the generally applicable rules on suits for refunds. Suits contesting the imposition of this penalty may be brought only in the district courts and the Claims Court.

Sanctions and Costs Awarded by Courts

The bill authorizes the Tax Court to impose a penalty not to exceeed $25,000 if a taxpayer (1) institutes or maintains a proceeding primarily for delay, (2) takes a position that is frivolous, or (3) unreasonably fails to pursue available administrative remedies. The committee intends that the increased penalty (above $5,000) apply primarily (but not exclusively) to tax shelter cases, where the $5,000 maximum provided under present law appears to be ineffective in deterring taxpayers from taking frivolous positions.

The committee has explicitly chosen to call these awards "penalties", rather than "damages" (as under present law), so that it is clear that specific damages incurred by the United States need not be proved before the court may impose this penalty. The committee believes that dealing with these frivolous lawsuits wastes scarce judicial resources and delays the resolution of legitimate disputes. The committee expects that its modifications to this provision will further decrease frivolous lawsuits. The committee also intends to monitor the use of this penalty to ensure that it continues to be used, as it has in the past, only in situations in which its use is appropriate. The committee has also called these awards "penalties" rather than "damages" in the parallel provisions applicable to other courts. The committee has provided that any monetary sanctions, penalties, or costs awarded in a tax case by one of these other courts may be assessed and collected in the same manner as a tax. This permits these sanctions, penalties, and costs, when awarded by one of these other courts, to be collected in the same manner as if they were awarded by the Tax Court.

The committee has eliminated the last sentence from present law section 6673(a) (relating to assessment and payment) because, in light of the use of the term "penalty", the purpose of that last sentence is accomplished by section 6671(a). The committee intends that no substantive modification be made to the assessment and payment procedures because of the deletion of this last sentence of section 6673(a).

The bill also authorizes the Tax Court to require any attorney or other person permitted to practice before the Court to pay excess costs, expenses, and attorney's fees that are incurred because the attorney or other person unreasonably and vexatiously multiplied any proceeding before the Court. If the attorney is appearing on behalf of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the United States is to pay these costs in the same manner as an award of these costs by a district court. This provision is comparable to the authority already provided to district courts under 28 U.S.C. section 1927.

Authority To Counterclaim for Balance of Penalty in Partial Refund Suits

The bill clarifies that, where taxpayers utilize the provisions of present law (other than with respect to frivolous income tax returns) that permit partial (rather than full) payment of certain penalties to obtain judicial review of the imposition of these penalties, the United States may counterclaim as part of the same lawsuit for the remainder of the penalty. Present law may prohibit a counterclaim of this nature; thus, an additional lawsuit must be brought even if the taxpayer loses the case brought after partial payment of the tax. The committee believes that multiple court cases with respect to the same issue wastes scarce judicial resources. Consequently, the committee permits all issues relating to these penalties to be considered in one lawsuit.

Repeal of Bonding Requirement

The bill repeals the provision permitting return preparers to post a bond and thereby prevent any proceeding by the Federal Government under section 7407 seeking to enjoin a return preparer from engaging in prohibited conduct. The committee believes that return preparers should not be able to prevent judicial resolution of the issue of whether the return preparer has engaged in prohibited conduct.

Disclosure of Certain Information by Return Preparers

The bill provides that the IRS regulations relating to the use of tax information by return preparers are to provide that a return preparer may disclose tax information to another return preparer solely for purposes of quality or peer reviews. The purpose of this provision is to enable a return preparer to obtain the benefits of having another return preparer review the first preparer's work. The bill does not permit disclosure of this information by the IRS for these purposes.

Effective dates

The modifications to the return preparer penalties apply to documents prepared after [12] Such closing agreements generally provide that the Service will not tax the interest earned by the bondholders in exchange for certain actions by the issuer, including in some cases payment designed to compensate the Federal Government for all or an appropriate percentage of lost tax revenues.

December 31, 1989. The modifications to the penalty for promoting abusive tax shelters and the aiding and abetting penalty apply to activities after December 31, 1989. The modification to the frivolous income tax return penalty applies to returns filed after December 31, 1989. The modifications to the court-awarded sanctions apply to proceedings pending on, or commenced after, December 31, 1989. The provision relating to counterclaims is effective on the date of enactment. The provision repealing the bonding requirement for return preparers is effective for actions or proceedings commenced after December 31, 1989. The provision relating to disclosures by return preparers is effective on the date of enactment.

4. DELINQUENCY PENALTIES (SECS. 6741-6743 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 6656 OF THE CODE AND SECS. 1463 AND 6651 OF THE CODE)

Failure To File

A taxpayer who fails to file a tax return on a timely basis is subject to a penalty equal to 5 percent of the net amount of tax due for each month that the return is not filed, up to a maximum of 5 months or 25 percent. The net amount of tax due is the excess of the amount of the tax required to be shown on the return over the amount of any tax paid on or before the due date prescribed for the payment of tax.

Failure To Make Timely Deposits of Tax

If any person who is required to deposit taxes imposed by the Internal Revenue Code with a government depositary fails to deposit such taxes on or before the prescribed date, a penalty may be imposed equal to 10 percent of the amount of the underpayment, unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause and not willful neglect. The amount of the underpayment for this purpose is the excess of the amount of the tax required to be deposited over the amount of the tax, if any, deposited on or before the prescribed date.

Failure To Withhold on Income of Foreign Persons

As described above, persons having control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of certain types of U.S. income of foreign persons are required to deduct and withhold U.S. tax from such income under chapter 3 of the Code's income tax provisions (secs. 1441-1464). The amount withheld is credited against the U.S. tax liability of the foreign income recipient.

Where a tax on the U.S. income of a foreign recipient was required to be withheld but the withholding agent failed to do so, and instead the tax is paid by the income recipient, a penalty may be imposed on the recipient or the withholding agent for failure to pay the tax only if the failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment (sec. 1463). By contrast, where a U.S. employer fails to withhold income tax from an employee's wages but the employee pays the tax due, the employer remains liable for any penalties and additions to tax otherwise applicable (sec. 3402(d)).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the flat 10-percent penalty for failure to deposit taxes is very unfair, in that the same penalty applies whether the taxpayer is one day or one year late in making a deposit. The committee believes that it is important to give taxpayers an incentive to correct as rapidly as possible any failures to deposit.

Explanation of provisions

Failure To File

The bill modifies present law by providing that the fraud and negligence penalties are not to apply in the case of a negligent or fraudulent failure to file a return. Instead, the bill provides that in the case of a fraudulent failure to file a return, the failure to file penalty is to be increased to 15 percent of the net amount of tax due for each month that the return is not filed, up to a maximum of 5 percent months or 75 percent. The burden of proof on the fraud element of this increased portion of the penalty is on the IRS (sec. 7454(a)). If the IRS does not sustain its burden, and if the IRS determined in the alternative in the notice of deficiency that the taxpayer is liable for the basic failure to file penalty under section 6651(a)(1), then the Court could consider the basic penalty and the burden of proof in respect thereof would be on the taxpayer. On the other hand, if the IRS does not sustain its burden on the fraud element and failed to make an alternative determination on the notice but did in its answer or other pleading assert that the taxpayer is liable for the basic penalty, then the Court could also consider that penalty but the burden of proof in respect thereof would be on the IRS. Finally, if the IRS does not sustain its burden on the fraud element and failed to either make an alternative determination in the notice or assert the basic penalty in its answer, the Court could not consider that penalty and the taxpayer would not be liable for any failure to file penalty.

The committee has made this modification to improve the coordination of the failure to file penalty with the accuracy-related penalties. The committee intends that the courts and the IRS should consider the same elements when considering the imposition of this new aspect of the penalty as is done under present law when considering imposition of the 6653 penalty where there has been a failure to file a return. Thus, the actions or behavior that trigger the penalty under the bill are to be the same as those under present law.

The bill also modifies the penalty for the failure to make timely deposits of tax in order to encourage depositors to correct their failures. The committee has established a four-tiered penalty structure in which the amount of the penalty varies with the length of time within which the taxpayer corrects the failure. Under the bill, a depositor is subject to a penalty equal to 2 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is corrected on or before the date that is 5 days after the prescribed due date. A depositor is subject to a penalty equal to 5 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is corrected after the date that is 5 days after the prescribed due date but on or before the date that is 15 days after the prescribed due date. A depositor is subject to a penalty equal to 10 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is corrected after the date that is 15 days after the due date but on or before the date that is 10 days after the date of the first delinquency notice to the taxpayer (under sec. 6303). Finally, a depositor is subject to a penalty equal to 15 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is not corrected on or before the date that is 10 days after the date of the first delinquency notice to a taxpayer (under sec. 6303). This will mean that, on average, a taxpayer will generally have approximately 40 days from the due date of the quarterly return that reconciles liability with amounts deposited to make up any shortfall in deposits before the rate of the penalty increases from 10 to 15 percent. This time period could be significantly shorter in cases of jeopardy. In cases of jeopardy, the 15-percent rate applies if the taxes are not deposited on or before the date on which notice and demand for immediate payment is given under section 6861, section 6862, or the last sentence of section 6331(a). For purposes of this penalty, "deposit" means that payment must be made in accordance with the instructions of the IRS.

This penalty structure gives the taxpayer an incentive to correct any underpayments before the IRS discovers the underpayment and demands payment. The committee recognizes the importance of a penalty for failure to deposit taxes, since many of the taxes subject to this penalty are trust fund taxes (i.e., amount withheld from employee wages), held in trust by the depositor on behalf of the employee and the Federal Government. The committee believes that the present-law 10-percent penalty applicable to all failures to deposit tax is too harsh in some circumstances and that depositors complying with the law on or before 15 days after the prescribed due date should pay a penalty significantly less than 10 percent (i.e., 2 percent or 5 percent). In contrast, the committee believes that those depositors who have not made required deposits on or before the date that is 10 days after the date of the first delinquency notice to the taxpayer should pay a more substantial penalty (i.e., 15 percent). As under present law, no penalty is to be imposed if the failure to make a timely deposit is due to reasonable cause and not willful neglect. The committee intends that this penalty not apply in circumstances in which the estimated tax penalties (secs. 6654 and 6655) apply. The bill also repeals the present-law 25-percent penalty on overstated deposit claims.

Failure To Withhold on Income of Foreign Persons

The bill provides that in cases where a tax on the U.S. income of a foreign person was required to be withheld under chapter 3 but was not in fact withheld, and the person who would have been entitled to a credit for any withholding tax paid instead satisfies its own proper tax liability, the withholding agent remains liable for any penalties and additions to tax otherwise applicable for failure to withhold. Thus, under the bill these withholding agents are subject to the same general approach applicable to U.S. employers who withhold income taxes from employees' wages.

Effective dates

The modification to the failure to file penalty applies to returns the due date for which (determined without regard to extensions) is after December 31, 1989. The modification to the penalty for the failure to make timely deposits of tax applies to deposits that are required to be made after December 31, 1989. The modification to the rules on liabilities of withholding agents applies to failures to deduct and withhold taxes after December 31, 1989.

Subtitle H. Technical Corrections Provisions

Amendments to the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988

1. CORPORATE PROVISIONS

a. Method of Computing Net Unrealized Built-in Gain or Loss (sec. 6811(b)(4) of the bill, secs. 1006(d)(22) and 1006(f)(5)(A) of the 1988 Act and secs. 382(h)(6) and 1374(d)(5) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, for purposes of sections 382, 384, and 1374, the computation of net unrealized built-in gain and net unrealized built-in loss does not include certain items of income or loss unless such items are recognized within the recognition period.

Explanation of provision

Items of income or loss that would be treated as built-in gain or built-in loss if recognized within the recognition period are included in the computation of net unrealized built-in gain or net unrealized built-in loss, without regard to when or whether such items are actually recognized within the recognition period. The provision also clarifies that a net operating loss or capital loss carryforward is not treated as a separate item of built-in deduction but simply offsets recognized built-in gain to the extent otherwise permitted under the applicable section.

b. Modification of Conforming Amendment Relating to S Corporations Engaged in Banking Operations (sec. 6811(b)(6), 1361(b)(2)(B) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, a corporation cannot be an S corporation if the corporation is a bank or a thrift institution, regardless of whether or not that corporation can claim any deduction for bad debts under the reserve method.

Explanation of provision

Prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1986 (the "1986 Act"), a corporation could not be an S corporation if the corporation's deductions for bad debts could be taken under the reserve method as a bank (under Code sec. 585) or as a thrift institution (under sec. 593). The 1986 Act disallowed the use of the reserve method for bad debts for large banks (sec. 901(a)(1) of the 1986 Act). As a conforming amendment, the 1986 Act provided that a corporation could not be an S corporation if the corporation was a bank or a thrift institution, regardless of whether or not that corporation could claim any deduction for bad debts under the reserve method (sec. 901(d)(4)(G) of the 1986 Act).

The provision modifies the conforming amendment in the 1986 Act such that a corporation is not eligible to be an S corporation if the corporation could claim a deduction for bad debts under the reserve method as a bank if it were a small bank.

c. Reduction In S Corporation Income Taxed to Shareholders by the amount of built-in gains tax paid (sec. 6811(b)(7) of the bill, sec. 1006(f) of the 1988 Act and sec. 1366(f) of the Code)

Present law

The amount of net recognized built-in gain of an S corporation subject to tax for any taxable year is limited by the taxable income of such corporation. Net recognized built-in gain in excess of such corporation's taxable income is treated as net recognized built-in gain in succeeding years and is subject to tax in such succeeding years. Under present law, the amount of S corporation income taxed to shareholders for any taxable year is reduced by the amount of built-in gains tax imposed on the S corporation.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that the amount of any built-in gains tax paid by an S corporation reduces the amount of S corporation income that is taxed to the S corporation shareholders.

d. Reduction in Built-In Gains Tax By Minimum Tax Credit Carryovers (sec. 6811(b)(8) of the Bill, sec. 1006(f) of the 1988 Act and sec. 1374(b) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, it is unclear whether minimum tax credit carryovers of an S corporation, arising in a taxable year for which the corporation was a C corporation, may offset the built-in gains tax of such S corporation.

Explanation of provision

The provision provides that any minimum tax credit carryover of an S corporation arising from a year the corporation was a C corporation may reduce the built-in gains tax of the S corporation.

e. Determination Of Tax Basis Of Property Transferred to Alaska Native Corporations (sec. 6815(b) of the Bill and sec. 5021(e) of the 1988 Act)

Present law

No provision in any law may affect the date on which a transfer to an Alaska Native Corporation is made for purposes of determining basis for Federal tax purposes.

Explanation of provision

The 1988 Act states that no provision in any law (whether enacted before, on, or after the date of enactment of the 1988 Act) shall affect the date on which a transfer to an Alaska Native Corporation is made for purposes of determining basis for Federal tax purposes. The amendment removes any retroactive effect of this provision in the 1988 Act and permits Alaska Native Corporations to rely on provisions of law that were in effect prior to the 1988 Act with respect to determining the tax basis of their property. No inference is intended regarding the interpretation of such prior law.

2. MINIMUM TAX PROVISIONS (SEC. 6811(C) OF THE BILL AND SECS. 53-59 OF THE CODE)

a. Tax benefit rule

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 provided that the Treasury Department may prescribe regulations providing proper adjustments where the taxpayer will not receive a tax benefit from an item for any taxable year.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that this rule applies whether the tax benefit will result in the current year or in another year.

The bill also clarifies that the repeal of section 58(h) of prior law by the Tax Reform Act of 1986 did not affect the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate to take into account preferences arising in taxable years beginning before January 1, 1987, in determining tax liabilities for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

b. Minimum tax credit

Present law

Present law allows a minimum tax credit for the minimum tax paid in prior years by reason of deferral preferences.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that the minimum tax credit includes any minimum tax imposed in prior years by reason of the 90-percent limitation on the use of the alternative minimum tax foreign tax credit. This position is consistent with the position taken by the Internal Revenue Service in its forms and accompanying instructions. (Under present law, the minimum tax credit includes any minimum tax previously paid because of the 90-percent limitation on the use of net operating loss deductions.)

c. Incentive stock options

Present law

Under present law, for purposes of the individual minimum tax, stock acquired pursuant to the exercise of an incentive stock option is treated without regard to the rules of section 421. Instead, the rules of section 83 apply.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the minimum tax rules applicable to a disqualifying disposition of stock acquired pursuant to the exercise of an incentive stock option where the amount realized is less that the value at the time of exercise follows the regular tax rules of section 422A(c)(2) where the stock is disposed of in the same taxable year the income is taken into account for minimum tax purposes. Thus the amount included in alternative minimum taxable income will not exceed the amount realized on the sale or exchange of the stock over the adjusted basis of the stock.

d. Treatment of acquisition expenses of life insurance companies

Present law

In determining adjusted current earnings, acquisition expenses of life insurance companies are required to be capitalized and amortized in accordance with the treatment required under generally accepted accounting principles, as if such treatment were required for all prior taxable years.

Explanation of provision

The committee wishes to clarify that to the extent that life insurance reserves are relevant in determining the amortization schedule under generally accepted accounting principles, tax reserves (instead of reserves determined under generally accepted accounting principles) are to be used. This clarification is considered necessary in order to treat acquisition expenses consistently under the book income preference and the ACE provision, and should not be considered as establishing a connection between the tax reserve method for a life insurance contract and the income tax treatment of acquisition costs relating to such contract.

3. ACCOUNTING PROVISIONS

a. Treatment of long-term contracts (secs. 6811(d) and 6815(e) of the bill, secs. 1008 and 5041 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 460 of the Code)

Present law

Taxpayers engaged in the production of property under a long-term contract must compute income from the contract under either the percentage of completion method or the percentage of completion-capitalized cost method. Exceptions to these required accounting methods are provided for certain construction contracts of small businesses (generally, those taxpayers with no more than $10 million in average annual gross receipts for the three taxable years preceding the taxable year in which the contract is entered into) and certain home construction contracts.[1]

[1] A contract is treated as a home construction contract only if 80 percent or more of the estimated total contract costs (as of the close of the taxable year in which the contract is entered into) are reasonably expected to be attributable to the building,

Under the percentage of completion method, a taxpayer must include in gross income for any taxable year an amount that is based on the product of (1) the gross contract price and (2) the percentage of the contract completed as of the end of the taxable year. The percentage of the contract completed as of the end of a taxable year is determined by comparing costs incurred with respect to the contract as of the end of the year with the estimated total contract costs.

At the time that a contract reported under the percentage of completion method is completed (or, in the case of amounts that are received or accrued after the completion of the contract, at the time that the amounts are received or accrued), a determination is made whether the taxes paid with respect to the contract for each year of the contract were greater than or less than the amount that would have been paid if gross income had been computed by using the actual gross contract price and actual total contract costs, rather than the anticipated contract price and costs. Interest must be paid by the taxpayer if, after applying this "look-back" method, there is an underpayment of tax by the taxpayer with respect to the taxable year. Similarly, interest must be paid to the taxpayer by the Internal Revenue Service if there is an overpayment of tax with respect to the taxable year.

In applying the look-back method, amounts that are received or accrued after the completion of the contract are to be taken into account by discounting such amounts to their present value as of the completion of the contract. A taxpayer may elect with respect to any contract not to discount amounts received or accrued after the completion of the contract.

Under the percentage of completion-capitalized cost method, a taxpayer must take into account 90 percent of the items under the contract under the percentage of completion method. The remaining 10 percent of the items under the contract must be taken into account under the taxpayer's normal method of accounting (e.g., the completed contract method of accounting). Exceptions to the 90/10 requirement are provided for certain ship construction contracts (40 percent under the percentage of completion method and 60 percent under the taxpayer's normal method of accounting) and certain residential construction contracts (70 percent under the percentage of completion method and 30 percent under the taxpayer's normal method of accounting).

Explanation of provisions

The bill contains several modifications and clarifications with respect to the present-law treatment of long-term contracts.

First, the bill provides that, except for purposes of applying the look-back method, all of the income under a long-term contract must be taken into account no later than the taxable year that follows the taxable year in which the contract is completed. This rule is to apply even though all of the estimated total contract costs have not been incurred as of the end of that taxable year. Because this provision does not apply for purposes of the look-back method, a taxpayer may be entitled to received interest under the look-back method if costs properly allocable to the contract are actually incurred after the end of that taxable year.

In addition, the bill clarifies the exception to the long-term contract rules for certain construction contracts of taxpayers whose average annual gross receipts for the prior three taxable years do not exceed $10 million. Under the bill, the gross receipts of any predecessor of the taxpayer (and certain related persons) are to be taken into account in determining whether this exception applies.

The bill also clarifies that the cost of installing any integral component to real property (e.g., a hearing or air conditioning system) is to be considered a qualifying cost for purposes of the definition of home construction contract and residential construction contract.

The bill contains two clarifications with respect to the look-back method. First, the bill provides that interest payable by a taxpayer under the look-back method is to be treated as an increase in tax for purposes of subtitle F of the Code (other than the estimated tax provisions). Consequently, in the case of a failure to timely pay the interest due under the look-back method, interest and any applicable penalties would apply. Second, the bill provides for a reapplication of the look-back method if costs are properly taken into account after the completion of the contract or if an adjustment is made to the estimated total contract costs after the completion of the contract. In applying the look-back method, costs under a contract that are taken into account after the completion of a contract are to be treated for purposes of discounting in the same manner as items of income.

Finally, the bill clarifies that the regulatory authority granted to the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the avoidance of the long-term contract rules applies to qualified ship contracts.

b. Treatment of certain installment sales by nondealers (sec. 6815(g) of the bill, sec. 5076 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 453A of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, special installment sale rules apply to nondealer sales of property with a sales price in excess of $150,000, other than property used or produced in the trade or business of farming, and timeshares and residential lots with respect to which interest is paid. First, an interest charge is imposed on the tax that is deferred under the installment method to the extent attributable to the amount by which the deferred payments arising from all dispositions of such property during any year exceed $5 million. Second, if any indebtedness is secured directly by an installment obligation that arises out of the disposition of such property, the net proceeds of the secured indebtedness are treated as a payment on such installment obligation.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the sale of personal use property by an individual is not subject to the special installment sale rules that generally apply to a nondealer sale of property with a sales price in excess of $150,000. For this purpose, personal use property is defined as any property substantially all the use of which by the taxpayer is not in connection with a trade or business of the taxpayer or an investment activity.

c. Exceptions to the uniform cost capitalization rules (sec. 6816(b) of the bill, sec. 6026 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 263A of the Code)

Present law

The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 contains two exceptions to the uniform cost capitalization rules. First, the Act provides an exception to the uniform cost capitalization rules for any otherwise deductible expense that is paid or incurred by an individual that is engaged in the business of being a writer, photographer, or artist.

Second, the Act provides an exception to the uniform cost capitalization rules for any otherwise deductible expense that is incurred by a taxpayer in connection with the production of animals in any farming business other than a farming business of a corporation, partnership or tax shelter that is required to use an accrual method of accounting. Prior to the Act, the uniform cost capitalization rules applied to the cost of producing an animal with a preproductive period of more than two years, unless an election was made to use the alternative depreciation system with respect to property used in the farming business. A taxpayer that made such an election for a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1989, is allowed to revoke the election for the first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1988, without the consent of the Treasury Secretary.

Explanation of provisions

Exception for free-lance authors, photographers, and artists.—The bill clarifies that the exception to the uniform cost capitalization rules for certain free-lance authors, photographers, and artists also applies to certain expenses incurred by certain corporations owned by such persons.

Exception for certain producers of animals.—In addition, the bill clarifies that only taxpayers engaged in a farming business that involves the production of animals having a preproductive period of more than two years may revoke prior elections to use the alternative depreciation system with respect to property used in the farming business.

d. Treatment of interest expense under the uniform cost capitalization rules (sec. 6831(c) of the bill, sec. 803 of the 1986 Act, and sec. 263A of the Code)

Present law

Under the uniform cost capitalization rules, certain interest costs and taxes incurred in connection with the production of property are required to be capitalized and, generally, are recovered over the applicable recovery period of the property to which the costs relate. In general, interest costs are required to be capitalized if the indebtedness to which the interest relates is directly attributable to production expenditures incurred in producing certain long-lived property or property with an extended production period. Additional interest costs are required to be capitalized if the interest costs could have been avoided if the production expenditures had not been incurred. For this purpose, production expenditures are defined as all costs required to be capitalized or included in inventory under the uniform cost capitalization rules, including interest that was capitalized in a prior taxable year.

The law in effect before the enactment of the uniform capitalization rules (sec. 189) required the capitalization of certain con-construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of certain dwelling units or certain improvements to real property directly related to such dwelling units.

struction period interest and taxes. These capitalized costs were generally amortized over a 10-year period.

The uniform cost capitalization rules and the repeal of prior law are effective for costs incurred after December 31, 1986, in taxable years ending after such date. Property produced by a taxpayer for use by the taxpayer, however, is not subject to the uniform cost capitalization rules if substantial construction occurred before March 1, 1986. Instead, such property remains subject to the rules of prior law. In addition, certain transition property is excluded from the property capitalization provisions of present law.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that interest incurred after December 31, 1986, is subject to capitalization under present law even though attributable to costs incurred prior to January 1, 1987. The costs incurred before January 1, 1987, that are taken into account in determining the amount of interest to be capitalized, however, are limited to those costs that (1) were required to be capitalized under prior law and (2) would have been taken into account in determining the amount of interest to be capitalized under prior law. This clarification does not alter the treatment of certain property that was provided transition relief under the 1986 Act or the treatment of property produced by a taxpayer for use by the taxpayer if substantial construction occurred before March 1, 1986. In addition, this clarification does not alter the amortization of interest and taxes that were capitalized under the law in effect before the 1986 Act.

In addition, the bill clarifies that certain property that was provided transition relief under the 1986 Act is subject to the capitalization rules of prior law with respect to interest and subject to the uniform cost capitalization rules of present law with respect to other costs, including taxes.

4. FOREIGN TAX PROVISIONS

a. Special rules for transportation income (sec. 6811(h) (8)-(10) of the bill, sec. 1012(e) of the 1988 Act, and secs. 872, 883, and 887 of the Code)

Gross Basis Tax

The 1986 Act generally imposed a four percent tax on the U.S. source gross transportation income of foreign persons. As amended by the 1988 Act, U.S. source gross transportation income means gross income, not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States, but attributable to transportation which either begins or ends (but that does not both begin and end) in the United States. The gross basis tax was not intended to override U.S. income tax treaties with foreign countries. Therefore, a foreign person entitled to a treaty exemption is not subject to the tax.

For a foreign person's transportation income (other than leasing income) to be effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States, the 1986 Act provided that (1) the foreign person must provide regularly scheduled transportation into, out of, or within the United States; (2) substantially all of the person's U.S. source gross transportation income must be attributable to the regularly scheduled transportation; and (3) the foreign person must maintain a fixed place of business in the United States through which the foreign person conducts its U.S. transportation business. Thus, for example, an occasional flight or voyage to the United States will not allow foreign persons to treat themselves as being engaged in a U.S. trade or business and thereby avoid the gross basis tax. For a foreign person engaged in the leasing of ships or aircraft to derive effectively connected transportation income, the foreign person must maintain a fixed place of business in the United States and substantially all of the person's U.S. source gross transportation income must be attributable to the fixed place of business.

Reciprocal Exemption

As amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, the Code provides an exemption from U.S. tax on certain types of transportation income earned by a corporation that is organized in, or a nonresidential alien that is resident in, a foreign country that grants an equivalent exemption to corporations that are organized in the United States or individual residents of the United States. The classifications of income that qualify for the reciprocal exemption are (1) income from the international operation of a ship or ships, (2) income from the international operation of aircraft, and (3) certain earnings from payments for temporary use of railroad rolling stock.

Countries treating foreign-organized corporations as domestic

Certain countries, for purposes of their internal tax laws, generally treat as domestic a corporation organized in a foreign country (such as the United States) if the corporation's primary location for tax jurisdiction purposes (e.g., its place of management and control) is in fact in that country, rather than its place of organization. Treasury has exchanged notes on exemption from tax on transportation income with numerous countries. Generally, in establishing the criteria for the reciprocal tax exemption on transportation income in the 1986 Act, Congress did not intend to condition the exemption of corporations organized in any particular country on that country's grant of an equivalent exemption covering corporations which are properly treated as residents of that foreign country under its tax laws. Thus, a foreign country could be viewed as generally providing U.S. corporations a tax exemption even if it does not exempt from tax corporations organized in the United States, but treated as residents of that country under its laws, assuming those laws would treat a U.S. corporation as a local resident only on the basis that such corporation's center of management or control, or comparable attribute, was in that foreign country.

Possessions of the United States

When Congress enacted the four percent tax on U.S. source gross transportation income, Congress anticipated that this tax, by increasing U.S. taxation of persons from foreign countries that have not provided reciprocal exemptions to U.S. persons, would encourage those foreign countries to amend their tax laws to provide such reciprocal exemptions.

The income tax laws of the United States are currently in effect, completely or partially, in Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands ("CNMI"), the U.S. Virgin Islands, and American Samoa as their own income tax systems. These jurisdictions are termed "possessions" of the United States for tax purposes. To transform the Code into a local tax code, each possession, in effect, substitutes its name for the name "United States" where appropriate in the Code. The possessions generally are treated as foreign countries for U.S. tax purposes. Similarly, the United States generally is treated as a foreign country for purposes of possessions taxation. This word-substitution system is known as the "mirror system." As a result of changes brought about by the 1986 Act, individual possessions are able to take steps that would permit them to amend their tax laws internally. As of this time, certain possessions have taken the necessary steps to permit such internal amendment, but others have not.[1]

Thus, for example, a U.S. corporation operating a transportation business traversing a route between a possession on the mirror system and the United States would generally be subject in the possession to the four percent tax on the possession source gross transportation income, unless United States law provides an exemption from the equivalent tax for corporations organized in the possession. Similary, a corporation organized in that possession operating on the same route would generally be subject in the United States to the four percent tax on the U.S. source gross transportation income, unless the possession's internal law provides an exemption from the equivalent tax to U.S. corporations.

Assuming that the internal laws of both the United States and any possession on the mirror system did impose the four percent tax on mirror possession persons and on U.S. persons, respectively, then a mirror possession currently without authority to amend its internal tax laws would be deprived of the power to eliminate that tax on a reciprocal basis. On the other hand, if the internal laws of the United States do not impose the four percent tax on corporations organized in a mirror possession, or individual citizens and residents of a mirror possession, the exemption is necessarily reciprocal by virtue of the mirror system, thus accomplishing the intended result of the 1986 Act.

Gross Basis Tax

The bill clarifies the 1986 Act's special rules for determining whether transportation income is treated as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States, by providing that those rules only apply to U.S. source gross transportation income, and not transportation income generally. Thus, under the bill, failure to have substantially all of a taxpayer's U.S. source transportation income attributable to regularly scheduled transportation (or, in the case of income from the leasing of a vessel or aircraft, attributable to a fixed place of business in the United States) would not automatically prevent transportation income other than U.S. source gross transportation income from being treated as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States if the general rules would treat such other transportation income as so effectively connected.

[1] Under the 1986 Act, Guam, CNMI, and American Samoa are eligible to amend their financial income tax laws independently of the Code as mirrored, upon the effective date of an "implementing agreement" between the possession and the United States. To date, American Samoa has an implementing agreement in effect, and Guam has entered into such an agreement effective 1991.

Reciprocal Exemption
Countries treating foreign-organized corporations as domestic

The bill clarifies that in general a foreign country may be treated as providing a reciprocal exemption for transportation income to corporations organized in the United States even if the laws of such foreign country would not provide an exemption to a corporation which, although organized in the United States, would be subject to tax on a residence basis by the foreign country. The committee intends that a foreign country not be treated as providing an exemption triggering the Code's reciprocal exemption provisions, however, if the laws of the foreign country would tax U.S. corporations on a residence basis even though the corporation is not primarily based in that foreign country. Nor does the committee intend that an exemption apply to corporations organized in a foreign country that imposes residence-based taxation in a manner that would, in practice, deprive a U.S. corporation of a type of tax benefit that a comparably situated corporation organized in the foreign country would enjoy under U.S. law, assuming that the reciprocal exemption provisions of the Code applied to such corporation. The Treasury is authorized to prescribe those characteristics of residence-based taxation systems which will qualify the exemptions provided by such systems to U.S. corporations as "equivalent exemptions" adequate to trigger the Code's reciprocal exemption provisions.

Possessions of the United States

The bill clarifies that the term "U.S. source gross transportation income" does not include any income taxable in a possession of the United States under the provisions of the Code as made applicable in that possession. By operation of the mirror system, the bill clarifies the existence of an equivalent exemption of U.S. persons from taxation by a possession on the mirror system of their possession source gross transportation income. Thus the bill clarifies that a corporation organized in a possession on the mirror system, operating a transportation business traversing a route between the possession and the United States, is not subject in the United States to the four percent tax on the gross U.S., source transportation income. Under the internal law of that possession, by the same token, a U.S. corporation operating a transportation business traversing the same route is not subject in the possession to the four percent tax on the possession source gross transportation income of foreign persons.

For purposes of providing reciprocal exemptions from U.S. tax on the transportation income of foreign persons, the bill authorizes the Treasury to treat U.S. possessions as foreign countries. Thus the bill clarifies that Treasury may initiate agreements pursuant to which, in cases where a possession is not strictly on the mirror system, corporations organized in that possession, and individual residents of that possession, may be entitled on the same basis as residents of foreign countries to U.S. tax exemption on their transportation income.

b. Exception for same-country interest, dividends, rents and royalties (sec. 6811(h)(3) of the bill, sec. 1221(a)(1) of the 1986 Act, and sec. 954(c)(3) of the Code)

Present law

When a controlled foreign corporation earns subpart F income, including foreign personal holding company income or any other tax haven income, the corporation's U.S. shareholders are generally subject to current U.S. taxation on their pro rata shares of the subpart F income. The term foreign personal holding company income is defined generally to include dividends and interest income as well as rents and royalties (sec. 954(c)(1)(A)). The term excludes, however, certain dividends and interest received from a related person that (1) is created or organized under the laws of the same foreign country as the recipient controlled foreign corporation, and (2) has a substantial part of its assets used in its trade or business located in such same foreign country (sec. 954(c)(3)(A)(i)). The term also excludes certain rents and royalties received from a related person for the use of, or for the privilege of using, property within the country under the laws of which the controlled foreign corporation is created or organized (sec. 954(c)(3)(A)(ii)).

The 1986 Act provided a rule to prevent deductible intercompany payments that benefit from the same-country exception from reducing the total tax haven income of a group of related companies. Under the rule enacted in 1986, interest payments do not qualify for the exception to the extent that such payments reduce the subpart F income of the payor (sec. 954(c)(3)(B)).

Under the literal terms of subpart F, the term "related person" includes pass-through entities such as partnerships and trusts (sec. 954(d)(3)). In the 1986 Act, Congress expanded the definition of the term "related person" in order to end an abuse by which income that would be subpart F income if received from a subsidiary was routed through an entity, e.g. a partnership, that was not included in the definition of a related person. H.R. Rep. 99-426, 99th Cong., 1st Sess. 403 (1985). Congress did not intend by that amendment to permit intercompany payments to reduce the tax haven income of a related group, for example, by the payment of interest by a related pass-through entity which was created or organized in the same country as the interest recipient, or by the payment of rents or royalties by a pass-through entity for the use of property in such country, where the pass-through entity is not the type of person that is subject to subpart F taxation. Nor did Congress intend that pass-through entities be used as devices for transferring the benefit of the same-country exception to payments effectively made by persons from which direct payments would not satisfy the requirements of the same-country exception.

The bill provides that the exception from treatment as foreign personal holding company income for dividends or interest received from a related person that is created or organized under the laws of the same country as the recipient only applies to payments received from a related person that is a corporation. Thus, the bill clarifies that if, for example, two related corporations organize a partnership in a country in which neither partner was created or organized, and if the partnership borrows from a related same-country controlled foreign corporation, the same-country exception will not apply to the interest income received by the controlled foreign corporation from the partnership.

The bill also provides that the exception from treatment as foreign personal holding company income for rents or royalties received from a related person for the use of, or for the privilege of using, property within the country under the laws of which the recipient is created or organized only applies to payments received from a related person that is a corporation. Thus, the bill clarifies that if, for example, two related corporations organize a partnership, and the partnership leases or licenses property from a related controlled foreign corporation, the same-country exception will not apply to the rent or royalty income received by the controlled foreign corporation from the partnership.

c. Dual consolidated losses of insurance companies that are controlled foreign corporations (sec. 6816(k) of the bill, sec. 6135(a) of the 1988 Act, and sec. 953(d) of the Code)

A foreign corporation that would qualify to be taxed as an insurance company if it were a domestic corporation may, under certain circumstances, elect to be treated as a domestic corporation (sec. 953(d)).

Under the 1986 Act, a dual consolidated loss is not allowed to reduce the taxable income of any other member of an affiliated group. Generally, the term "dual consolidated loss" is defined as any net operating loss of a domestic corporation which is subject to an income tax of a foreign country without regard to whether such corporation's income is from sources inside or outside of such foreign country, or is subject to tax on a residence basis (sec. 1503(d)). The Treasury has authority to provide by regulations that the term "dual consolidated loss" does not include any loss which, under the foreign income tax law, does not offset the income of any foreign corporation (sec. 1503(d)(2)(B)).

Typically, a foreign corporation that makes the section 953(d) election is a resident of a foreign country, and if it is subject to income tax in that country on a worldwide or residence basis, its losses are dual consolidated losses unless excepted from that definition by regulations. However, the 1988 Act specifically provided that if such an electing corporation is treated as a member of an affiliated group for purposes of filing a consolidated return, any loss of such an electing corporation is treated as a dual consolidated loss as defined in the dual consolidated loss provisions of the 1986 Act (sec. 953(d)(3)). The Treasury generally does not have authority to promulgate regulations making the loss of an electing corporation not a dual consoldiated loss.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that any loss of a foreign corporation electing to be treated as a domestic insurance company will be treated as a dual consolidated loss and will therefore not be allowed to reduce the taxable income of any other member of the affiliated group for the taxable year or any other taxable year. Thus, the bill clarifies that the treatment of electing corporation losses as dual consolidated losses under section 953(d) precludes any contrary treatment under regulations that may provide exceptions from the definition of dual consolidated losses.

d. Withholding tax paid by partnerships with respect to foreign partners (sec. 6811(h)(6) of the bill, sec. 1012(s)(1)(A) of the 1988 Act, and secs. 1446 and 1463 of the Code)

Present law

Partnerships that conduct a trade or business in the United States are required to pay a withholding tax with respect to a foreign partner's distributive share of the partnership's effectively connected taxable income. The 1988 Act requires partnerships to pay this tax in the manner and at the time prescribed by regulations. The amount of the tax is the applicable percentage (which is dependent on corporate or noncorporate status of the foreign partners) of the effectively connected taxable income of the partnership that is allocable under section 704 to foreign partners. The applicable percentage is the highest rate of tax to which each foreign partner is subject.

A foreign partner is allowed a credit against its tax liability for its share of the withholding tax paid by the partnership. An amount of cash equal to this credit is treated as having been distributed to the foreign partner by the partnership on the last day of the partnership's taxable year for which the tax was paid, thus reducing the partner's basis in the partnership. The Treasury has provided by Revenue Procedure that if the foreign partner disposes of its interest in the partnership prior to the last day of the partnership's taxable year, the partner will be treated as having received this cash distribution on the date of disposition of its partnership interest (Rev. Proc. 89-31, sec. 9.01, 1989-20 I.R.B. 136, 143).

The Treasury has provided that the withholding tax generally must be paid in four installments during the taxable year of the partnership in which the effectively connected taxable income is derived (Rev. Proc. 89-31, sec. 7.014). A partnership that is required to pay this tax, but fails to do so, may be liable for the payment of the tax and any applicable penalties or additions including interest. Generally, taxpayers liable for tax under chapters 1 and 2 (secs. 1-1403) must make estimated tax payments for the current year at least quarterly, and penalties are imposed for underpayment of estimated tax (secs. 6654 and 6655). The withholding tax paid by a partnership with respect to a foreign partner's share of effectively connected income is a chapter 3 (secs. 1441-1464) tax, and thus failure to pay this tax does not trigger underpayment of estimated tax penalties.

Explanation of provision

Rate of Tax

The bill clarifies that with respect to foreign corporate partners, the applicable percentage for computing the amount of withholding tax is the highest rate of tax to which corporations generally are subject, currently 34 percent.

Deemed Distributions

The bill provides that, except as provided in regulations, a foreign partner's share of withholding tax paid by a partnership is treated as distributed to the partner on the date which is the earlier of (1) the date that the tax is actually paid by the partnership to the Internal Revenue Service, or (2) the last day of the partnership's taxable year for which the tax is paid. Assume, for example, that a U.S. partnership has as its taxable year a calendar year and has one foreign partner. The foreign partner also is a calendar year taxpayer. On June 15, 1990, the partnership pays withholding tax of $100 on behalf of the foreign partner related to effectively connected taxable income of the partnership earned during 1990. Under the bill, the foreign partner is treated as having received a distribution of $100 from the partnership on June 15, 1990, thereby causing a $100 reduction in the basis of its interest in the partnership. Further assume that on April 15, 1991, the partnership pays an additional withholding tax of $200 on behalf of the foreign partner related to the partnership's 1990 effectively connected taxable income. As a result of this additional payment of withholding tax, the foreign partner is treated under the bill as having received a $200 distribution from the partnership on December 31, 1990 (the last day of the partnership's taxable year for which the tax is paid).

The committee contemplates that this rule may be appropriately altered by regulations to provide for earlier deemed distributions and reductions of basis in circumstances such as those involving mid-year dispositions of partnership interests. Assume that in the foregoing example the foreign partner disposed of its interest in the partnership on December 15, 1990. The committee anticipates that the Treasury may treat such a partner as having received a distribution of $200 (corresponding to the April 15, 1991 tax payment) on December 15, 1990, thus reducing the partner's basis in its partnership interest for purposes of determining its gain or loss resulting from the disposition.

Penalties, Interest, and Other Additions

Under the bill, the Treasury is authorized to impose penalties for failure to satisfy withholding tax liabilities, which penalties would be similar to those imposed on corporations for failure to pay estimated tax under section 6655. For purposes of imposing such penalties, the bill provides the Treasury authority to treat the withholding tax as a tax imposed by section 11 and to treat any partnership required to pay such tax as a corporation. In addition, the Treasury may provide appropriate adjustments in applying the rule of section 6655 to any underpayments of the withholding tax by a partnership. For example, section 6655 contains an exception which limits a corporation's required annual payment of estimated tax to the lesser of 90 percent of its current year's tax or 100 percent of its preceding year's tax. The committee does not intend that a partnership which fails to satisfy its obligation under section 1446, but that owed no prior year withholding tax, would be excused from the penalty. However, the committee contemplates that a rule similar to the section 6655 rule allowing a corporation to determine its required installment of estimated tax on the basis of annualized income could also be made available to partnerships by the Treasury.

Generally, penalties, interest, and other additions to tax paid by a partnership as a result of failure to pay withholding tax on behalf of a foreign partner will not be creditable by such partner against its substantive tax liability. However, in order to avoid the assessment of underpayment of estimated tax penalties against both the partnership and the foreign partner with respect to the same item of income (i.e., the foreign partner's distributive share of the partnership's effectively connected taxable income), the committee anticipates that the Internal Revenue Service may allow the foreign partner a reduction of its estimated tax underpayment penalty attributable to partnership income, in the amount of any estimated tax underpayment penalty paid by the partnership with respect to failure to pay withholding tax on income that is allocable to that partner.

e. Excise tax on insurance premiums paid to foreign insurers and reinsurers (sec. 6811(h)(11) of the bill, sec. 1012(q)(13) of the 1988 Act, and sec. 4371 of the Code)

In certain cases, an excise tax is imposed (sec. 4371) on each policy of insurance, indemnity bond, annuity contract, or policy of reinsurance issued by any foreign insurer or reinsurer to or for or in the name of a domestic corporation or partnership, or a U.S. resident individual, with respect to risks wholly or partly within the United States, or to or for or in the name of any foreign person engaged in business within the United States with respect to risks within the United States. The excise tax is imposed at the rate of (1) 4 cents on each dollar (or fraction thereof) of the premium paid on a policy of casualty insurance or indemnity bond; (2) 1 cent on each dollar (or fraction thereof) of the premium paid on a policy of life, sickness, or accident insurance, or annuity contract on the life or hazards to the person of a U.S. citizen or resident, unless the insurer is subject to tax under section 842(b) (relating to the taxation of foreign insurance companies); and (3) 1 cent on each dollar (or fraction thereof) of the premium paid on a policy of reinsurance covering any of the contracts taxable under (1) or (2). Present law exempts any amount which is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States from the excise tax on insurance and reinsurance premiums, unless that amount is exempt from net-basis taxation pursuant to a treaty obligation of the United States.

If a foreign company would, were it domestic, be subject to the Code's insurance company tax provisions, and that company carries on an insurance business within the United States, then its income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States is subject to U.S. income tax rules applicable to the income of domestic insurance companies (sec. 842(a)). Thus, the excise tax by its terms applies only to premiums the income from which is not subject to the income tax. No less than a certain required amount of the foreign insurance company's net investment income must be treated as income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States (sec. 842(b)). Life, sickness, accident, and annuity premiums paid to a foreign insurance company are not subject to the excise tax if the company is subject to taxation under this rule for measuring U.S. effectively connected net investment income. However, if a foreign insurance company carries on an insurance business within the United States and collects casualty insurance premiums both effectively connected and not effectively connected with the conduct of that business, then the effectively connected premiums are exempt from the excise tax, but the non-effectively connected premiums on policies covering U.S. risks are subject to the excise tax.

Prior to the 1988 Act, the excise tax did not have a general exemption for U.S. effectively connected amounts. Instead, the Code provided a general exemption from the excise tax in the case of policies signed or countersigned by an officer or agent of the insurer in a state or the District of Columbia, within which such insurer is authorized to do business.[2] During the pre-1988 Act period, the special excise tax exemption for life, sickness, accident, and annuity premiums could in some cases exempt from the excise tax premiums effectively connected with a U.S. insurance business, which premiums otherwise would arguably not have been exempted by the general exemption for policies signed or countersigned in places where the company was authorized to do business. See Neptune Mutual Association, Ltd., of Bermuda v. United States, 862 F.2d 1546 (Fed. Cir. 1988). Moreover, during that period any foreign life insurance company (as contrasted with a non-life company) carrying on a life insurance business within the United States was subject to special U.S. taxing rules.[3] Since the 1988 Act, however, the special excise tax exemption for life, sickness, accident, and annuity premiums paid to foreign insurance companies subject to the rules for imposing income tax on net investment income can only exempt from excise tax premiums paid to a company all or part of the premium income of which is also exempt from the excise tax pursuant to the general exemption for nontreaty-protected amounts effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States.

Explanation of provision

The bill repeals the special exemption from excise tax for life, sickness, accident, and annuity premiums paid to foreign companies subject to tax under the special income tax rules setting the required minimum amount of net investment income treated as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States. Under the bill, any premium received by such a company which is effectively connected with its conduct of a trade or business in the United States would continue to be exempt from excise tax under the general exemption as amended by the 1988 Act. On the other hand, if a company carries on an insurance business in the United States and also collects premiums not effectively connected with its U.S. business on policies of life, sickness, or accident insurance, or annuity contracts, with respect to the lives or hazards to the person of citizens or residents of the United States, then under the bill these premiums are subject to the excise tax. In this respect, therefore, the bill conforms the treatment of life, sickness, accident, and annuity premiums with the treatment of casualty premiums.

f. Foreign currency gains and losses (sec. 6811(h)(7) of the bill, secs. 1012(v) and 6130 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 988 of the Code)

In order to resolve uncertainties and to reduce discontinuities arising under the prior law that applied to exchange gains and losses, Congress in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 provided uniform source and character rules for certain gains and losses from foreign currency-related "section 988 transactions." Certain gains and losses from such transactions are referred to under the Act as "foreign currency gains and losses." The general rule under the Act is that the character of foreign currency gain or loss is ordinary.

The Act allows flexibility to alter the character of exchange gain or loss in appropriate circumstances. For example, as amended by the 1988 Act, the term "section 988 transaction" generally includes certain foreign currency-related transactions such as, among other things, entering into or acquiring any forward contract, futures contract, option, or similar financial instrument. However, the term generally excludes regulated futures contracts and nonequity options which would be marked to market under section 1256 if held on the last day of the taxable year, unless the taxpayer elects not to have this exclusion apply (sec. 988(c)(1)(B)(iii) and 988(c)(1)(D) (i) and (ii)). In a case where the election is made, gain or loss from a foreign currency-related section 1256 contract[4] may therefore be foreign currency gain or loss, and treated as ordinary income or loss (sec. 988(a)(1)(A)). Previously, in the Tax Reform Act of 1984 Congress enacted a provision stating that, for purposes of the Code, gain or loss from trading of section 1256 contracts shall generally be treated as gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset (sec. 1256(f)(3)(A)). In extending section 988 ordinary income and loss characterization to gains and losses from section 1256 contracts in certain cases in the 1986 and 1988 Acts, Congress did not intend that such characterization be defeated by reference to the language of the 1984 Act regarding gains and losses from trading section 1256 contracts.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the income and loss characterization rules in section 988 apply without regard to other income tax provisions in the Code. Thus, where ordinary income and loss characterization applies, pursuant to the terms of section 988, to gains and losses from trading section 1256 contracts, the bill clarifies that such gains and losses are not to be considered gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset pursuant to section 1256(f)(3).

g. Tax-exempt shareholders of DISCs (sec. 6811(h)(12) of the bill, sec. 1012(bb)(6) of the 1988 Act, and sec. 995 of the Code)

Present law

In the 1988 Act, Congress provided that when a tax-exempt entity that is a shareholder of a Domestic International Sales Corporation (DISC) is deemed to receive a distribution from a DISC, actually receives a distribution from a DISC of previously untaxed income, or realizes gain from disposition of DISC shares which is treated as a dividend, then that income is treated as derived from the conduct of an unrelated trade or business (sec. 995(g)). This treatment was intended to prevent taxable entities from seeking to exempt active business income from tax by assigning DISC stock to controlled tax-exempt entities such as their pension or profit-sharing plans.

The provision applies to organizations described in the principal Code provisions that impose tax on unrelated business income (secs. 511(a)(2) and (b)(2)). Generally, sections 511(a)(2) and (b)(2) describe certain organizations exempt from tax (other than tax on income from an unrelated trade or business) by reason of section 501(a) (e.g., qualified pension plans described in section 401(a) and public charities described in section 501(c)(3)), state colleges and universities and related organizations, and certain exempt trusts. Congress did not intend that taxable entities be enabled to exempt active business income from tax by assigning DISC stock to other generally tax-exempt entities which are subject to taxation on their unrelated business income but may not be described in sections 511(a)(2) and (b)(2).

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that if a tax-exempt entity is either described in sections 511(a)(2) or (b)(2), or is otherwise subject to tax under section 511, then income of that entity in the form of deemed DISC distributions, actual DISC distributions of previously untaxed income, and gain from the disposition of DISC shares which is treated as a dividend, is treated as derived from the conduct of an unrelated trade or business. Thus, the bill clarified that if for example an individual retirement account were to own stock in a DISC, such an account being subject to the unrelated business income tax pursuant to section 408(e)(1), then that account would be subject to tax on income from the DISC in the same manner as if the account were instead a pension plan trust described in section 401(a). Similarly, under the bill any other person of any description that owns DISC stock and is subject to the tax on unrelated business income must treat any DISC-related income as income from the conduct of an unrelated trade or business in the same manner as would a pension plan, charity, or other organization exempt from taxation by reason of section 501(a).

foreign insurers and reinsurers carrying on an insurance business in the United States by reference to whether or not the income of such companies was effectively connected with the conduct of a trade of business in the United States. Rather, such companies (other than life insurance companies) were generally subject to U.S. tax only on their income from sources within the United States.

[3] Prior to the 1966 Act any foreign life insurance company carrying on a life insurance business within the United States was generally subject to a special rule taxing its U.S. insurance income in the same manner as a domestic life insurance policy. Beginning with the Life Insurance Company Income Tax Act of 1959, certain adjustments not applicable to U.S. life insurance companies were made applicable to the income of foreign life insurance companies subject to such U.S. income taxation. Corresponding to the special rules for the imposition of U.S. income tax on foreign life insurance companies carrying on a life insurance business in the United States, the Code prior to the 1966 Act had a special exemption from the excise tax for life, sickness, accident, and annuity policy premiums paid to any foreign life insurance company subject to the special income tax rule.

Since the 1966 Act the Code has contained rules (amended from time to time, most notably recently by the enactment of section 842(b) in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987) designed to ensure that no less than a certain required amount of a foreign life insurance company's worldwide investment income is deemed effectively connected with the company's U.S. insurance business and thus is taxed by the United States. In the 1987 Act these rules were strengthened and made applicable to all foreign insurance companies carrying on an insurance business within the United States. Since the 1966 Act the excise tax has been inapplicable to life, sickness, and accident insurance policy premiums, and annuity contract premiums, with respect to the lives or hazards to the person of citizens or residents of the United States, paid to foreign companies subject to these special rules of computing U.S. effectively connected income. (By contrast, when in 1987 the special rules for computing U.S. effectively connected income were extended to foreign non-life insurance companies, Congress did not enact a corresponding exemption from the excise tax for premiums on casualty insurance policies covering U.S. risks paid to foreign companies engaged in a U.S. insurance business.)

[4] The term "section 1256 contract" is defined in section 1256(b) and includes "regulated futures contracts" and "nonequity contracts" as those terms are defined in section 1256(g) (1) and (3).

5. ESTATE AND GIFT TAX PROVISIONS

a. Treatment of Survivor Annuities Under QTIP Rules (sec. 6816(l) of the Bill, sec. 6152 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 2056(b)(7)(C) of the Code)

Present law

A marital deduction is allowed for Federal estate tax purposes for an interest in property passing to a spouse if that interest is not terminable (i.e., the property does not pass to a person other than the spouse on termination of the interest). A special rule, applicable to qualified terminable interest property (QTIP), allows a marital deduction where the surviving spouse has only an income interest in the property if an election is made which results in the inclusion of the property in his or her estate. Under the 1988 Act, unless otherwise elected, the transfer to a surviving spouse of an interest in a survivor annuity in which only the spouse has the right to receive any payment during that spouse's life qualifies for the marital deduction for Federal estate tax purposes under the QTIP rule.

Explanation of provision

A joint and survivor annuity would be treated as qualifying under the QTIP rule under the 1988 Act only if the annuity is includible in the decedent's estate as an annuity. Thus, an annuity created by the decedent's will does not qualify under the amendment made in the 1988 Act.

b. Rates and Unified Credit (sec. 6815(c) of the Bill, sec. 5032 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 2101(b) of the Code)

The Federal estate and gift taxes are unified, so that a single progressive rate schedule is applied to an individual's cumulative gifts and bequests. For decedents dying prior to 1993, the gift and estate tax rates begin at 18 percent on the first $10,000 of taxable transfers and reach 55 percent on taxable transfers over $3 million.

U.S. citizens and resident noncitizens are allowed a unified credit of $192,800 in determining the net tax payable. Nonresident noncitizens are allowed by statute a unified credit of $13,000. However, some treaties allow the estate of a nonresident noncitizen the same unified credit allowed a U.S. citizen multiplied by the proportion of the gross estate situated in the United States.

The estate and gift tax rate for transfers in excess of $10 million is increased by five percent until the benefit of the unified credit and graduated brackets is recaptured. The additional five percent rate for decedents dying and gifts made before 1993 is imposed upon cumulative taxable transfers between $10,000,000 and $21,040,000. This additional five percent rate has the effect of phasing out the graduated brackets and unified credit of $192,800. An estate of a nonresident noncitizen is subject to this five percent addition even if it did not receive a unified credit of $192,800.

Explanation of Provision

Appropriate adjustments are made in the additional five percent rate imposed to reflect the actual credit allowed the nonresident noncitizen. Under the provision, the additional five percent rate applies to the taxable transfers of a nonresident noncitizen in excess of $10 million only to the extent necessary to phase out the benefit of the graduated rates and unified credit actually allowed, either by statute or by treaty.

c. Joint tenancies (sec. 6815(d)(16) of the bill, sec. 5033 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 2040 of the Code)

The creation of a joint tenancy in property is generally treated as a completed gift. Prior to the 1988 Act, such gift between spouses qualified for the marital deduction from the estate and gift tax. Only one-half of the jointly held property was included in the estate.

Effective July 14, 1988, the 1988 Act repealed the marital deduction for gifts made to a noncitizen spouse. That Act also provided that jointly held property was includible in the estate, reduced by the portion of the property for which consideration was received.

In determining estate tax, the value of gifts includible in the gross estate effectively is reduced by the value of the taxable gift when made. Thus, for a joint tenancy created after the 1988 Act, the amount included in the estate effectively is reduced by the amount transferred when the tenancy was created. For a joint tenancy created prior to the 1988 Act, there is no such reduction because the gift was not taxable, (i.e., it qualified for the marital deduction).

Explanation of provision

A gift made by creating a joint tenancy in property prior to July 14, 1988, is treated as consideration belonging to the surviving spouse for purposes of determining the value of the tenancy includible in the decedent spouse's estate. Accordingly, the amount of joint tenancy property included in the spouses's estate is reduced proportionately by the amount of the gift.

d. Marital deduction for property passing to noncitizen spouses (sec. 6815(d) of the bill, sec. 5033 of the 1988 Act, and secs. 2056(d), 2056A and 2523(i) of the Code)

In General

A deduction generally is allowed for Federal estate and gift tax purposes for the value of property passing to a spouse. Except in specified situations, no deduction is allowed if the interest passing to the spouse is terminable (i.e., will terminate upon a lapse of time, the occurrence of a contingency, or on the failure of an event or contingency to occur) (secs. 2056(b), 2523(b)).

Annual Exclusion and Marital Deduction for Property Passing to Noncitizen Spouses

The marital deduction is generally disallowed for the value of property passing to noncitizen spouses. The first $100,000 per year of gifts from a U.S. citizen or resident to a noncitizen spouse, however, is not subject to gift tax. In addition, property passing at death to a noncitizen spouse may qualify for the marital deduction so long as it satisfies the requirements of section 2056(b) and passes in a qualified domestic trust (QDT). Property passing to the spouse outside the probate estate is treated as passing in a QDT if it is transferred to such trust before the estate tax return is filed.

Definition of Qualified Domestic Trust (QDT)

To be a QDT, a trust must meet four conditions. First, the trust instrument must require that all trustees be U.S. citizens or domestic corporations. Second, the surviving spouse must be entitled to all the income from the property in the trust, payable annually or at more frequent intervals. Third, the trust must meet the requirements of Treasury regulations prescribed to ensure collection of the estate tax imposed upon the trust. Finally, the executor must elect to treat the trust as a QDT.

Estate Tax on QDT

An estate tax is imposed upon distributions from a QDT made prior to the surviving spouse's death and upon the value of property remaining in a QDT upon that spouse's death. The tax, however, is not imposed on distributions of income, as defined under local law. The tax is also imposed upon the trust property if a person other than a U.S. citizen or domestic corporation becomes a trustee of the trust or if the trust ceases to meet the requirements of Treasury regulations prescribed to ensure collection of the estate tax.

The amount of the estate tax is the additional estate tax which would have been imposed had the property subject to the tax been included in the decedent spouse's estate. If the estate tax for the decedent spouse's estate has not been finally determined, a tentative tax is imposed using the highest estate tax rate in effect as of the date of the decedent's death. When the decedent spouse's estate tax liability is finally determined, the excess of the tentative tax over the additional estate tax that would have been imposed had the property been included in the decedent's taxable estate is allowed as a credit or refund.

Credit for Tax Previously Paid

If the marital deduction is denied solely because the spouse is a noncitizen at the time of the decedent's death, the estate of the surviving spouse who is a U.S. citizen or resident at death generally is entitled to a credit with respect to estate tax paid on property passing from the decedent. This credit is applied against property treated as passing from the decedent's estate determined without regard to when the decedent spouse died. The credit is also allowed for the estate tax imposed against the QDT. For purposes of determining the amount of the credit, the net value of property treated as passing from the decedent's estate to the surviving spouse is reduced by the amount for which a marital deduction was allowed.

Explanation of provisions

Gift Tax on Amounts Passing to Noncitizen Spouse

The bill clarifies that the $100,000 annual exclusion for transfers by gift to a noncitizen spouse is allowed only for transfers that would qualify for the marital deduction if the donee were a U.S. citizen.[1] For example, a gift in trust does not qualify for the $100,000 annual exclusion unless it is within one of the exceptions to the terminable interest rule.

The bill also provides that a nonresident noncitizen is entitled to a marital deduction or annual exclusion for gift tax purposes in the same circumstances as a U.S. citizen or resident. Thus, gifts from a nonresident noncitizen to a U.S. citizen spouse qualify for the marital deduction. In addition, each year the first $100,000 in gifts from a nonresident noncitizen to a noncitizen spouse is not taxed, so long as the gifts would quality for the marital deduction if the donee were a U.S. citizen. The deduction and annual exclusion apply only if the property passing to the spouse is subject to U.S. gift tax.

[1] This change is made effective for gifts after June 29, 1989.

Marital Deduction for Bequests to Noncitizen Spouse

Under the bill, the estate tax marital deduction is allowed for property passing to a noncitizen spouse if the spouse between a U.S. citizen before the estate tax return is filed, so long as the spouse was a U.S. resident at the date of the decedent's death and at all times before becoming a U.S. citizen. In addition, all property, probate and nonprobate, passing to a noncitizen spouse qualifies for the marital deduction if the property is transferred or irrevocably assigned[2] to a QDT before the estate tax return is filed.[3] Property passing for decedents dying before enactment of the bill is treated as qualifying for the marital deduction if transferred or assigned to a QDT within one year of enactment. The bill also confirms that property passing from a nonresident noncitizen to a noncitizen spouse qualifies for the estate tax marital deduction if it passes in a qualified domestic trust.

Definition of QDT

The bill retains the present-law requirement that property passing to a noncitizen spouse satisfy requirements generally applicable to the marital deduction such as section 2056(b) in order to quality for the marital deduction. The bill modifies the independent requirements a trust must meet in order to qualify as a QDT. Under the bill, only one trustee is required to be a U.S. citizen or domestic corporation, so long as no distribution may be made from the trust without the approval of that trustee. In addition, the bill eliminates the independent requirement that the surviving spouse have an income interest in a QDT.[4] This change allows a trust that meets the terminable interest rule but in which the spouse is not entitled to all the income to qualify as a QDT.

The bill also contains provisons allowing reformation of a trust to meet the independent QDT requirements. The determination of whether a trust is a QDT is made either (1) when the estate tax return is filed, or (2) is a reformation suit to conform to the QDT requirements is commenced before the return is filed, when changes pursuant to the suit are made. If a reformation suit is initiated before the return is filed, the statute of limitations with respect to the decedent's estate does not lapse until one year after the Secretary of the Treasury is notified of the resolution of the suit.

When imposed

Under the bill, lifetime distributions from a QDT and the property remaining in the trust on the surviving spouse's death remain subject to an estate tax based on the decedent's rates and unified credit. The tax is imposed if the trust fails to meet the requirements regarding citizenship of trustees or the regulatory requirements designed to ensure collection. The tax ceases to be imposed if the surviving spouse subsequently becomes a U.S. citizen so long as either (1) the spouse was a U.S. resident at the date of the decedent's death and at all times thereafter, or (2) the spouse elects to treat any distribution upon which tax was imposed as a taxable gift made by (and unified credit allowed against such a distribution as unified credit allowed to) such spouse for purposes of determining future estate and gift tax liability with respect to the spouse.

Amount subject to tax

Under the bill, income distributions to the surviving spouse continue to be exempt from the estate tax on distributions. The Secretary of the Treasury is granted regulatory authority to modify the definition of income for purposes of determining the amount subject to the tax. The committee intends that such regulations define income so as to prevent avoidance of the estate tax.

The committee understands that authority distinguishing income and corpus under section 643(b) would not necessarily be determinative for purposes of the estate tax. The committee also understands that these regulations may clarify the characterization of items that are presently unclear. The committee expects, for example, that the Secretary of the Treasury will provide rules for determining when payments under an annuity would be treated as income for purposes of the estate tax on distributions. The committee expects that payments under an annuity would be treated as corpus to the extent of the value of the annuity when acquired by the QDT.

The bill exempts from the distribution tax amounts paid to the surviving spouse on account of hardship. The bill also provides that payment of the estate tax on distributions is itself a distribution subject to the tax.

Availability of estate tax benefits

The bill allows charitable and martial deductions against the deathtime tax on QDTs so long as that property is includible in the surviving spouse's gross estate (or would have been includible had the surviving spouse been a U.S. citizen) and the requirements of those deductions are otherwise met. The bill also allows the benefits of alternate valuation, special use valuation, capital gains treatment of redemptions of stock to pay estate tax, and extension of time to pay estate tax with respect to the deathtime tax on QDTs if such benefits would be allowed to the surviving spouse's estate.

Treatment of multiple QDTs; tentative tax

The bill provides that the refund of tentative tax imposed pending final resolution of estate tax liability bears interest. The bill also provides rules for the taxation of multiple QDTs. If there is more than one QDT, the tax rate on each QDT is the highest estate tax rate in effect when the decedent died, unless, pursuant to a designation made by the decedent's executor, a U.S. citizen or domestic corporation is responsible for filing all estate tax returns with respect to the QDTs and meets such requirements as the Secretary may prescribe. The Committee intends that these requirements ensure the collection of the estate tax.

Recipient's basis in distributed property

Property distributed during the surviving spouse's life from a QDT receives a carryover basis. The basis of property is increased (but not above fair market value) by the amount of the estate tax allocable to the appreciation in the value of the property occurring after the decedent's death.

Due Date of Returns

The return for the estate tax imposed on QDT property on the death of the surviving spouse is due nine months after date of death. The return for the estate tax imposed on distributions from a QDT during the calendar year in which the spouse dies is due no later than that date.

Credit for Previous Estate Tax

The credit for estate tax previously paid by the decedent spouse is allowed to a surviving spouse who is a nonresident noncitizen at the time of death. In determining the amount of the credit for estate tax imposed against a QDT, the value of property treated as having passed to the surviving spouse is not reduced by the amount that qualified for the marital deduction.

Regulatory Authority

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to prescribe regulations necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of the provisions, including regulations treating an annuity includible in decedent's gross estate as a QDT. Such regulations might treat distributions from a qualified plan as qualifying for the marital deduction even if not assigned to a QDT if the payor of the annuity withholds an amount equal to the distribution tax and meets other conditions designed to ensure collection of the tax.

e. Effect of repeal of marital deduction for noncitizen spouses on treaties (sec. 6815(d)(14) of the bill, sec. 5033 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 2056(d) of the Code)

The 1988 Act

Prior to the 1988 Act, the Code allowed a marital deduction for property passing from a U.S. citizen or resident ("U.S. person") to a surviving spouse but not for property passing from a nonresident noncitizen to a surviving spouse. In 1988, Congress amended the Code to deny the marital deduction for property passing from a U.S. person to a noncitizen spouse (unless the property passes in a qualified domestic trust) and to allow a marital deduction for property passing from a noncitizen to a U.S. citizen spouse.

Existing Treaties

The United States has bilateral treaties in effect with over 15 countries for the avoidance of double taxation and fiscal evasion with respect to one or more of the taxes on estates, inheritances, gifts, and generation-skipping transfers. Generally these treaties provide that property passing from residents of one contracting state will not be subject to transfer taxes in the other state except in specified circumstances, such as the transfer of real property located in the contracting state other than the residence country of the donor or decedent.

Imposition of U.S. estate, gift, and other taxes on nationals of countries with which the U.S. has entered into a tax treaty (either an income tax treaty or an estate and gift tax treaty) is generally limited by so-called nondiscrimination clauses which typically provide that the United States will not impose on treaty-country citizens any taxes (or any requirements connected therewith) different from, or more burdensome than, those to which similarly situated U.S. citizens are subject. For example, article 8 of the estate and gift tax treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom provides that property passing from a U.K.

[2] The Committee understands, that pursuant to the regulatory authority described below, the Secretary of the Treasury will provide rules regarding the treatment of property that is assigned to a QDT but not transferred to the QDT within a fixed period of time. Such regulations might treat the failure to transfer the property as a distribution from the trust subject to the estate tax or as giving rise to disallowance of the marital deduction.

[3] In addition, as under present law, there is no requirement that the QDT be created by the decedent. Thus, the QDT may be created by the executor or the surviving spouse.

[4] To qualify under the terminable interest rule, however, the spouse might be required to have an income interest. See I.R.C. sec. 2056(b)(5), (7).

domiciliary or national which may be taxed in the United States qualifies for a U.S. marital deduction to the extent that a marital deduction would have been allowable if the decedent or transferor had been domiciled in the United States.

Prior to the 1988 Act, the United States entered into at least two bilateral treaties providing a marital deduction to domiciliaries of the treaty countries. Article 11 of the treaty currently in force between the United States and France with respect to taxes on estates, inheritances, and gifts provides that, under certain circumstances, French domiciliaries may, in computing their U.S. estate and gift tax, take the marital deduction that would be allowed to a U.S. domiciliary on November 24, 1978, the date the treaty was signed. When this treaty was negotiated, ratified, and signed, a U.S. citizen or resident was generally entitled to a marital deduction computed by reference to 50 percent of the adjusted gross estate or 50 percent of the amount of gifts made to the spouse.[5]

Article 10 of the treaty between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany with respect to taxes on estates, inheritances, and gifts, similarly to the French treaty, generally provides that property which passes to the spouse of a domiciliary of one of the countries and which is subject to situs country taxation is subject to tax in the situs country only to the extent that the value of the property passing to the spouse exceeds 50 percent of the total value of the property subject to tax in that country.

Relationship of 1968 Act to Treaties

If an actual conflict exists between an earlier treaty and a later statute, as properly construed, the statute prevails (Sen. Rep. No. 100-445, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. 316-28 (1988)). This is true even without an explicit statement of congressional intent to override the treaty (id. at 325). The legislative history of the 1988 Act indicates that Congress did not believe that the 1988 Act marital deduction provisions violated nondiscrimination provisions of existing tax treaties (H.R. Rep. No. 100-795, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. 593 (1988)). In addition, the marital deduction provision contained in the 1988 Act also prevails over conflicting marital deduction provisions contained in prior treaties.

Explanation of provision

The French and German treaty provisions granting a marital deduction for property passing from nonresident noncitizens were negotiated and ratified on the assumption that such property did not qualify for the marital deduction. The 1988 Act did not alter this assumption with respect to property passing to a noncitizen spouse. In consideration of this fact and the policies underlying those provisions, the committee believes that the limitations of the 1988 Act should not apply to such property.[6]

Accordingly, the bill provides that for property passing from a nonresident noncitizen domiciled in a country with which the U.S has an estate or gift tax treaty, the amendments made by the 1988 Act do not apply to the extent inconsistent with a marital deduction provided by the treaty. Thus, property passing from a nonresident noncitizen domiciled in France or the Federal Republic of Germany is allowed the marital deduction provided under those treaties.[7]

The bill allows no additional benefits under the U.K. treaty, however, since that treaty merely puts U.S. and U.S. persons on an equal footing.

6. GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER TAX

a. Disallowance of Double Deductions of Expenses (Sec. 6811(i)(3) of the bill, Sec. 1014 of the 1988 Act, and Sec. 642(g) of the Code)

Present law

In determining the Federal estate tax, a deduction generally is allowed for administration expenses, indebtedness and taxes. Similar deductions are allowed in determining the generation-skipping transfer tax on taxable distributions and taxable terminations.

Generally, administration expenses, indebtedness and taxes that are deducted in determining the estate tax are not also deductible in determining the income tax of the estate. The estate may, however, elect to deduct such amounts in determining its income tax if such amounts are not also deducted in determining the estate tax.

Explanation of provision

Rules similar to those governing the deduction of administration expenses, indebtedness and taxes for income and estate tax purposes are adopted with respect to items deductible in determining the taxable amount for taxable distributions and taxable terminations. Thus, those amounts generally are not deductible in determining taxable income, unless an election is made not to deduct those amounts in determining the taxable amount subject to generation-skipping tax.

b. Basis Adjustments (Sec. 6811(i)(2) of the Bill, Sec. 1014 of the 1988 Act, and Sec. 2654(a) of the Code)

Present law

The basis of property acquired by gift is its basis in the hands of the donor. This is increased, but not above the fair market value of the property, by the amount of gift tax paid allocable to appreciation in the value of the gift while held by the donor. The basis of property transferred in a generation-skipping transfer in generally increased (but not above the fair market value of the property) by an amount equal to the portion of generation-skipping transfer tax attributable to the excess of the fair market value of the property over its adjusted basis before the transfer.

Explanation of provision

The basis adjustment for generation-skipping transfer tax is applied after the basis adjustment for gift tax paid. Thus, the bill confirms that the two adjustments combined cannot increase the basis in the property above its fair market value.

c. Valuation date for transfer for which gift tax return not required (sec. 6811(i)(4) of the bill, sec. 1014 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 2642(b) of the Code)

Present law

If an allocation of GST exemption is made on a timely filed gift tax return required under the Federal gift tax, the value of property for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes is the same as its value for gift tax purposes, and the allocation is effective on and after the date of transfer. No gift tax return is required to be filed for gift tax purposes for a transfer of less than $10,000.

Explanation of provision

The requirement that GST exemption be allocated on a gift tax return required for gift tax purposes is eliminated. The gift tax return must nonetheless be timely. Thus, under the bill, if an allocation to a transfer in trust of less than $10,000 is made on a gift tax return that would be timely filed were a return required, the value of property for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes is the same as its value for gift tax purposes and the allocation is effective on and after the date of transfer.

7. ESTIMATED TAXES OF TRUSTS AND ESTATES (SEC. 6811(I) (5), (6) OF THE BILL, SEC. 1014 OF THE 1988 ACT, AND SEC. 6654(L) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Trusts and estates generally are required to pay estimated taxes in the same manner as individuals. Estates, however, do not pay estimated taxes for taxable years ending within two years of the decedent's death. Likewise, a grantor trust that receives the residue of the probate estate under the grantor's will is exempted from payment of estimated taxes with respect to such taxable years. No exemption is available if no will is admitted to probate.

Explanation of provision

If no will is admitted to probate, a grantor trust that is primarily resposible for paying taxes, debts, and expenses of administration is not required to pay estimated taxes for taxable years ending within two years of the decedent's death.

8. INSURANCE PROVISIONS

a. Treatment of Modified Endowment Contracts (sec. 6815(a) of the bill, sec. 5012 of the 1988 Act, and secs. 72 and 7702A of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, amounts received under modified endowment contracts are treated first as income and then as recovered basis. In addition, loans under modified endowment contracts and loans secured by modified endowment contracts are treated as amounts received under the contract. Finally, an additional 10-percent income tax is imposed on certain amounts received under modified endowment contracts to the extent that the amounts received are includible in gross income.

A modified endowment contract is defined as any contract that satisfies the definition of a life insurance contract but fails to satisfy a 7-day test. A contract fails to satisfy the 7-pay test if the cumulative amount paid under the contract at any time during the first 7 contract years exceeds the sum of the net level premiums that would have been paid on or before such time had the contract provided for paid-up benefits after the payment of 7 level annual premiums.

[5] Article 11 also provides that if the benefit of the marital deduction under U.S. law is substantially reduced, the tax authorities of the two countries will consult on whether this provision should be modified or terminated.

[6] In contrast, by denying the marital deduction to property passing from a U.S. person to a noncitizen, the 1988 Act altered the assumption underlying treaties entered into prior to 1988 with respect to U.S. persons domiciled abroad. The committee does not believe that this change in U.S. internal law should be frustrated by treaty provisions that when adopted provided a marital deduction no better than that available under U.S. internal law.

[7] Moreover, when treaty benefits are not claimed, property passing from such persons to U.S. citizens will be eligible for the statutory marital deduction to the extent provided in the 1988 Act.

Explanation of provision

Distribution Rules

In determining whether an amount not received as an annuity under a modified endowment contract is includible in gross income, all modified endowment contracts issued by the same insurer (or affiliates) to the same policyholder during any 12-month period are aggregated. A similar aggregation rule applies to an amount not received as an annuity under an annuity contract. The bill provides that contracts under qualified pension plans are not subject to the aggregation rules that generally apply to modified endowment contracts and annuity contracts. In addition, the bill provides that the aggregation rules are to apply only to those modified endowment contracts (or annuity contracts) that are issued by the same insurer (or affiliates) to the same policyholder during any calendar year.

The aggregation rules are not to apply to an immediate annuity contract. In addition, the committee did not intend to address the treatment of "combination" or "split" annuities in providing the Treasury Department with the authority to provide regulations that are necessary or appropriate to prevent avoidance of the distribution rules contained in section 72(e). No inference is intended with respect to whether the Treasury Department may treat combination or split annuities as a single contract under its general authority to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to enforce the income tax law.

Material Change Rules

If there is a material change in the benefits or other terms of a contract that was not reflected in any previous determination under the 7-pay test, the contract is considered a new contract that is subject to the 7-pay test as of the date that the material change takes effect and adjustments are made in the application of the 7-pay test to take into account the cash surrender value of the contract as of the date of the material change.

The bill clarifies that an increase in the charge for a qualified additional benefit is not a material change in the benefits under a contract, and, consequently, the 7-pay test is not to be reapplied at such time. An addition of, or an increase in, a qualified additional benefit, however, is a material change in the benefits under the contract and requries a reapplication of the 7-pay test, unless the addition of, or increase in, the qualified additional benefit is not considered a material change under the one of the exceptions to the material change rules.

Under one exception, a material change does not include an increase in the death benefit or a qualified additional benefit provided under a contract if the increase is attributable to (1) the payment of premiums necessary to fund the lowest level of the death benefit and qualified additonal benefits payable in the first 7 contract years (and certain prescribed death benefit increases), or (2) the crediting of interest or other earnings (including policyholder dividends) with respect to such premiums. For this purpose, a death benefit increase may be considered as attributable to the payment of premiums necessary to fund the lowest death benefit payable in the first 7 contract years or the crediting of interest or other earnings with respect to such premiums if each premium paid prior to the death benefit increase is necessary to fund the lowest death benefit payable in the first 7 contract years. Any death benefit increase that is not considered a material change under the preceding sentence, however, is to be considered a material change as of the date that a premium is paid that is not necessary to fund the lowest death benefit payable in the first 7 contract years.

The bill also clarifies that, to the extent provided in regulations, a material change does not include a death benefit increase attributable to a cost-of-living adjustment that is based on an established broad-based index specified in the contract if the increase is funded ratably over the remaining period during which premiums are required to be paid under the contract (rather than over the remaining life of the contract).

Finally, it is intended that a contract which is materially changed is not to be considered a modified endowment contract if the calculation of the 7-pay premium after the material change results in a negative amount provided that no additional premiums are paid during the first 7 years after the material change.

The modified endowment contract provisions generally apply to contracts entered into on or after June 21, 1988. In determining whether a contract is entered into on or after June 21, 1988, for purposes of this effective date, if the death benefit under a contract increases by more than $150,000 over the death benefit under the contract as of October 20, 1988, the material change rules apply as of the date that the death benefit exceeds the threshold. In determining whether the death benefit increase constitutes a material change, the death benefit payable under the contract as of October 20, 1988, increased by $150,000 is to be taken into account rather than the lowest death benefit payable during the first 7 contract years.

A contract is not to be considered entered into on or after June 21, 1988, under this $150,000 increase provision, if, as of June 21, 1988, the terms of the contract required at least 7 level annual premium payments and under which the policyholder makes at least 7 level annual premium payments. If a policyholder fails to make at least 7 level annual premium payments as required under the terms of the contract, the material change rules are to apply to the contract as of the later of (1) the last day of the contract year in which the policyholder failed to make a required level premium payment or (2) the date that the death benefit exceeds the threshold. In determining whether the death benefit increase constitutes a material change, the death benefit payable under the contract as of October 20, 1988, increased by $150,000 is to be taken into account rather than the lowest death benefit payable during the first 7 contract years.

Finally, the 7-pay premium for an insurance contract that is entered into before June 21, 1988, and that is exchanged on or after such date for another contract or that is otherwise treated under the effective date provisions as entered into on or after such date is to be reduced by the cash surrender value of the contract in the same manner as a contract that is materially changed.

b. Treatment of certain workers' compensation funds (sec. 6816(h) of the bill and sec. 6076 of the 1988 Act)

Present law

Under the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, a qualified group self-insurers' fund is not to be assessed a deficiency (and, if assessed, the collection of the deficiency is not to occur) for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1987, to the extent that the deficiency is attributable to the timing of the deduction for policyholder dividends. For taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1987, a fund's deduction for policyholder dividends is allowed no earlier than the date that the State regulatory authority determines the amount of the policyholder dividend that may be paid by the fund.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that if, for the first taxable year beginning on or after January 1, 1987, a qualified group self-insurers' fund changes its treatment of policyholder dividends to take into account such dividends no earlier than the date that the State regulatory authority determines the amount of the policyholder dividend that may be paid, then such change is to be treated as a change in method of accounting and no section 481(a) adjustment is to be made with respect to such change in method of accounting (i.e., a fresh start is provided with respect to the deduction of policyholder dividends of a qualified group self-insurers' fund if the change in method of accounting is made for the first taxable year of the fund beginning on or after January 1, 1987). It is anticipated that a qualified group self-insurers' fund will be allowed to adopt such a method of accounting for its first taxable year beginning on or after January 1, 1987, by filing an amended return for such year on or before the date that is six months after the date of enactment of the bill.

c. Special Estimated Tax Payments (sec. 6816(i) of the bill, sec. 6077 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 847 of the Code)

Present law

Any insurance company that is required to discount unpaid losses for Federal income tax purposes is allowed an additional income tax deduction is an amount that is not to exceed the amount of unreversed discount (i.e., the excess of (1) the amount of undiscounted, unpaid losses attributable to losses incurred after December 31, 1986, over (2) the amount of related discounted, unpaid losses). This deduction is allowed only to the extent that the amount of the unreversed discount was not taken into account in determining the amount of the deduction for an earlier taxable year. In addition, this deduction is allowed only if timely special estimated tax payments are made equal to the tax benefit of the deduction.

An insurance company that is allowed a deduction under this provision also must establish a special loss discount account which is to be increased by the amount of the deduction. The special loss discount account is to be reduced as the discount with respect to which a deduction was allowed reverses and the amount of such reduction is to be included in the gross income of the insurance company. Special estimated tax payments are to be applied against the amount of tax, if any, that is required to be paid as the result of the inclusion of an amount in gross income due to a reduction to the special loss discount account. To the extent that special estimated tax payments are not used to offset additional tax due for any of the first fifteen years beginning after the year for which the special estimated tax payments were made, such special estimated tax payments are treated as section 6655 estimated tax payments for the sixteenth year after the year for which the payments were made.

Explanation of provision

The bill contains several modifications and clarifications with respect to the special estimated tax payment provision of present law.

First, the bill provides that the amount of the deduction for unreversed discount is to be determined by considering lossess incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986, rather than losses incurred after December 31, 1986.[1]

In addition, the bill clarifies that a deduction is allowed for unreversed discount only to the extent that the deduction results in a tax benefit for the taxable year of the deduction or a prior carryback year. This clarification ensures that special estimated tax payments equal to the tax benefit of the deduction are made for the taxable year that the deduction is allowed.

The bill also provides that special estimated tax payments are to be made on or before the due date (determined without regard to extensions) for filing the return for the taxable year for which the deduction is allowed. This provision is necessary in order to clarify the due date of such payments for any taxable year for which a deduction for unreversed discount is allowed due solely to the carryback of a net operating loss. This provision is not intended to affect the revenue neutral nature of the provision, including the amount of interest payable to or by the Federal government where special estimated tax payments are timely made.[2]

The bill clarifies that any amount added to the special loss discount account must be subtracted from such account and included in gross income no later than the 15th year after the year for which the amount was added to the account. As under present law, special estimated tax payments are to be applied to be paid as a result of this inclusion.

The bill also clarifies that the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of the special estimated tax provision includes the authority to prescribe rules that apply in cases where the deduction allowed for any year is less than the unreversed discount as of the close of such year. In addition, it is anticipated that these regulations will provide guidance on the operation of the special estimated tax payment provision in the case of net operating loss carryovers and credit carryforwards.

The bill provides that the earnings and profits of an insurance company is not be reduced by the additional deduction for unreversed discount or increased by inclusions required due to reductions to the special loss discount account. For purposes of the alternative minimum tax, however, the adjusted current earnings of a corporation is to be reduced by the additional deduction for unreversed discount and increased by the inclusions required due to reductions to the special loss disount account.

Finally, the bill provides that the deduction for unreversed discount is not subject to the section 1503(c) limitations on the use of losses in consolidation.

9. PENSION PROVISIONS

a. Treatment of Churches Under Certain Deferred Compensation Programs (sec. 6816(f) of the bill, sec. 6064 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 457 of the Code)

Present Law

Under present law, unfunded deferred compensation plans maintained by an eligible employer are subject to certain special rules (sec. 457). Eligible employers include State or local governments and nongovernmental tax-exempt organizations. The 1988 Act contained a provision that was intended to exempt church plans from the application of section 457.

Explanation of provision

As originally enacted, the 1988 Act provision did not accomplish the intent of exempting church plans from section 457. The provision clarifies the exemption from the application of section 457 for such plans. Under the provision, churches are exempt from the definition of eligible employer.

b. One-time Election With Respect To Elective Deferrals (sec. 6811(f) of the Bill, sec. 1101 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 402(g) of the Code)

Present Law

Under present law, elective deferrals are subject to certain restrictions. An elective deferral is generally defined as (1) any employer contribution under a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (sec. 401(k)) to the extent not includible in gross income under section 402(a)(8), (2) an employer contribution not includible in income under section 402(h)(1)(B), and (3) employer contributions to a tax-sheltered annuity (sec. 403(b) under a salary reduction agreement. An employer contribution is not treated as an elective deferral to a tax-sheltered annuity if it is made pursuant to a one-time irrevocable election made by the employee at the time of initial eligibility to participate in the agreement or is made pursuant to a similar arrangement specified in regulations.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies the regulatory authority in the exception to the definition of elective deferrals (sec. 402(g)(3)) to provide that a contribution is not treated as an elective deferral if, under the the salary reduction agreement, the contribution is made pursuant to (1) a one-time irrevocable election made by the employer at the time of initial eligibility to participate in the agreement or (2) a similar arrangement involving a one-time irrevocable election specified in regulations. As under present law, the regulatory authority does not apply to arrangements other than tax-sheltered annuities.

c. Effective Date With Respect to Deductibility of Certain Contributions by Self-employed Individuals (sec. 6812 of the bill and sec. 4972 of the Code)

Present Law

A nondeductible 10-percent excise tax applies to nondeductible contributions to a qualified employer plan (sec. 4972). This provision was as added by the 1986 Act. The 1988 Act provided that contributions required to meet the minimum funding rules are not subject to the excise tax, even if the contributions exceed the earned income of the self-employed individual. The 1988 Act provision was effective as if included in the Pension Protection Act of 1987.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that the 1988 Act rule relating to the deduction rules for self-employed individuals is effective as if included in the 1986 Pension Protection Act of 1987.

d. Deduction for Payments Relating to Standard Terminations (sec. 6841(b) of the bill and sec. 404(g) of the Code)

Present Law

Present laws provides special rules for the deduction of employer liability payments (sec. 404(g)).

Explanation of provision

The deduction rule relating to employer liability payments treated as contributions to qualified plans is amended to clarify that the rule applies to the case of standard terminations, effective for payments made after January 1, 1986, in taxable years ending after that date.

e. Tax Treatment of Transfers of Interests in Individual Retirement Accounts and Qualified Governmental and Church Plans (sec. 6841(a) of the bill and secs. 408 and 414(p) of the Code)

Present Law

Present Law permits a transfer of an interest in an individual retirement account (IRA) to be treated as a nontaxable transfer if the transfer is to a former spouse pursuant to a divorce decree.

Special tax rules apply under present law to the transfer of an interest in a qualified plan pursuant to a qualified domestic relations order (QDRO). These tax rules do not apply to the transfer of interest in governmental or church plans because the QDRO rules do not apply to such plans.

Explanation of provision

The rule relating to transfers of interests in an IRA incident to a divorce is amended to conform to the treatment generally of such transfers under qualified plans pursuant to the Retirement Equity Act of 1984. The provision permits a transfer of an interest in an IRA to be treated as a nontaxable transfer if the transfer is to a spouse or former spouse under a divorce or separation decree.

The tax rules relating to transfers of interests in a governmental or church plan are also amended to conform generally to the tax rules applicable to other qualified plans pursuant to the Retirement Equity Act. Under the provision, the same tax rules applicable to transfers pursuant to a QDRO apply to transfers of interests in a governmental or church plan pursuant to a domestic relations order as defined in section 414(p)(1) (without regard to section 414(p)(1)(A)).

The provisions are effective for transfers after the date of enactment in taxable years ending after the date of enactment. No inference is intended with respect to whether a transfer of an interest in a governmental or church plan could meet the QDRO requirements under present law.

[1] In this regard, it is intended that any reasonable addition to a reserve that occurs in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986, is to be taken into account in determining the amount of unreversed discount to the extent that the addition is subject to the discounting requirements of section 846.

[2] For example, in the case where a deduction for unreversed discount results in a refund of taxes paid in an earlier taxable year, if the insurance company makes the required special estimated tax payments on or before the date that the refund is paid and the Internal Revenue Service is not required to pay interest with respect to the refund, no interest or penalty is to be imposed on the insurance company. To the extent that the special estimated tax payment is made after the payment of the refund, interest and penalties will apply only from the date that the refund is paid (or, if applicable, the first date with respect to which the Internal Revenue Service was required to pay interest).

f. Definition of compensation for purposes of IRA deduction limit (sec. 6841(c) of the bill and sec. 219 of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, the maximum deduction limit for contributions to an individual retirement account (IRA) is the lesser of $2,000 or 100 percent of compensation.

Explanation of provision

The provision provides that compensation for purposes of the maximum deduction limit includes the earned income and wages of individuals who are not subject to FICA or SECA taxes because of their religious beliefs. The provision is effective for contributions after the date of enactment.

10. EXCISE TAX PROVISION: UNDENATURED DISTILLED SPIRITS (SEC. 6816(J) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 5276 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Educational institutions are exempt from the occupational excise tax on distilled spirits to the extent they procure 25 gallons or less annually of specially denatured distilled spirits. Such acquisitions are for laboratory research purposes.

Explanation of provision

The provision corrects an omission in the exemption for educational institutions from the distilled spirits occupational tax to apply to procuring less than 25 gallons of distilled spirits free of tax, as well as specially denatured distilled spirits. Usually, alcohol used for laboratory research purposes must be free of denaturants and impurities.

Effective date

This provision is effective on the date of enactment.

11. TAX-EXEMPT BOND PROVISIONS

a. Disregard of certain financing in determination of qualification for small-issuer exception (sec. 6816(n) of 148(f)(4)(C)(ii)(II) of the Code)

Present law

Under the Tax Reform Act of 1986, an exemption is provided from the arbitrage rebate requirement for small governmental units. The exception is available only if the governmental unit and all subordinate entities reasonably expect to issue no more than $5 million on tax exempt bonds (other than private activity bonds) during the calendar year.

The 1988 Act clarified the treatment of subordinate entities: (1) An issuer, and all entities which issue bonds on behalf of that issuer, are to be treated as one issuer. The 1988 Act also made other clarifications regarding the small issuer exception.

Explanation of provision

The provision amends Code section 148(f)(4)(C)(ii)(II) as enacted by section 6183 of the 1988 Act to clarify that bonds issued by a governmental unit "to make loans to," rather than "on behalf of," other qualifying governmental units do not count in the determination of whether the issuing governmental unit has exceeded $5 million in total annual bond issuance.

b. Application of future legislation to transitioned bonds (sec. 6831(d) of the bill, sec. 1318 of the 1986 Act, and secs. 103 and 103A of the Code)

Present law

The statutory basis for the tax exemption of interest on qualified bonds was primarily contained in sections 103 and 103A of the 1954 Code prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Section 1301 of the 1986 Act contained the reformation of the law involving tax-exempt bonds including the enactment of significant new provisions. The 1986 Act also contained transition relief where appropriate.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that generally in the case of any bond to which the amendments made by section 1301 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 do not apply by reason of any provision of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, any amendment of the 1986 Code (and any other provision applicable to such Code) included in any law enacted after the date of enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 shall be treated as included in section 103 and section 103A (as appropriate) of the 1954 Code with respect to such bond. Exceptions are provided (1) if such law expressly provides that such amendment (or other provision) shall not apply to such bond, or (2) if such amendment (or other provision) applies to a provision of the 1986 Code for which there is not corresponding provision in sections 103 and 103A (as appropriate) of the 1954 Code and which is not otherwise treated as included in such sections 103 and 103A with respect to such bond.

The provision is effective as if included in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

c. Treatment of certain property subject to use restrictions due to financing with qualified 501(c)(3) bonds (sec. 6815(f) of the bill, sec. 5053 of the 1988 Act, and sec. 145(d) of the Code)

Present law

If the proceeds of bonds issued after October 21, 1988, by a 501(c)(3) organization are used to acquire existing residential rental property for family units, then, to be qualified 501(c)(3) bonds, the property must satisfy the low-income tenant occupancy requirement of section 142(d)(1). This requirement does not apply to bonds used to finance construction or substantial rehabilitation of residential rental property, the original use of which commences with the beneficiary bonds. In addition, this requirement does not apply to any bond issued to refund a bond issued prior to July 15, 1988, if the average maturity date of the refunding issue is not later than the average maturity date of the refunded bonds, if the amount of the refunding bonds does not exceed the outstanding amount of the refunded bond, and if the proceeds of the refunding bond are used to redeem the refunded bond within 90 days of issuance of the refunding bonds.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies two circumstances in which property acquired with the proceeds of qualified 501(c)(3) bonds will be treated as new property for purposes of section 145(d)(2)(A) and, thereby, not subject to the income targeting requirements of section 142(d).

First, if the housing is financed by sources other than tax-exempt debt and is later refinanced with tax-exempt debt, the facility is not considered "existing" housing for purposes of section 145(d) if there was a reasonable expectation that the facility would be so refinanced and the facility was in fact so refinanced within a reasonable period.

Second, if, for the purpose of a tax-exempt financing to replace a taxable financing, the initial use of the property was pursuant to taxable financing and, at the time of the taxable financing, State law prohibited tax-exempt financing for the property so financed, then the property will be treated as new property.

12. RESEARCH TAX CREDIT PROVISION: ELECTION OF REDUCED CREDIT (SEC. 6814(D) OF THE BILL, SEC. 4008 OF THE 1988 ACT AND SECS. 41 AND 280C OF THE CODE)

Present law

Present law, as amended by the 1988 Act, provides that the amount of any deduction allowable to a taxpayer under section 174 or any other provision for qualified research expenditures is reduced by an amount equal to 50 percent of the taxpayer's research credit determined for that year (sec. 280C(c)). However, a taxpayer is permitted to avoid a reduction of the section 174 deduction for a taxable year by electing to forgo entirely its section 41 research credit for the year (sec. 41(h)).

Explanation of provision

The provision permits a taxpayer to avoid a reduction of the section 174 deduction by electing to reduce its section 41 research credit by the amount of tax saved (assuming the taxpayer is in the highest corporate tax bracket) by not making a reduction of its section 174 deduction. An election by a taxpayer to have this provision apply to a taxable year shall be irrevocable and may be made not later than the time for filing the taxpayer's return for such year (including extensions), except that if the taxpayer's return for a taxable year must be filed before 75 days after the date of enactment of this provision, then the election under this provision may be made at any time before 75 days after such enactment.

13. LOW-INCOME HOUSING TAX CREDIT (SEC. 6831(B) OF THE BILL, SEC. 252 OF THE 1986 ACT, AND SEC. 42 OF THE CODE)

Present law

A tax credit is provided to owners of certain low-income rental housing. Property eligible for the credit need not be owned directly by the taxpayer but may be held indirectly through a pass-through entity like a partnership. However, to be eligible for the credit, such housing must be available to the general public and not used for special populations (e.g. employee housing, dormitories or hospitals).

The credit is available for 10 years after the building is placed in service in proportion to the amount of low-income housing provided. No credit is available for buildings unless an allocation of State credit authority is made for that building.

Explanation of provisions

(1) The operation of the credit in the case of trusts and estates is clarified. Specifically, the amount of credit and any penalty with respect to the credit is apportioned between beneficiaries and a trust or estate on the basis of income allocable to each.

(2) The provision clarifies that students in governmentally supported job training programs, defined as the Job Partnership Training Act and similar Federal, State or local programs, are deemed to be eligible tenants for purposes of the credit, subject to other income targeting rules.

(3) The provision clarifies that, in the case of a disposition of an ownership interest during the course of a calendar year, the credit is to be allocated pro rata between the seller and purchaser according to the number of days of ownership.

(4) In order to carry out legislative intent, the provision authorizes the Treasury Department to issue regulations permitting housing credit agencies to correct administrative errors and omissions with respect to allocations.

(5) The provision clarifies that a person purchasing an interest in a building (including an interest in a partnership owning credit property) steps into the shoes of the previous owner of such interest for purposes of the credit. This provision does not alter the application of the recapture and bond posting requirements as in effect under present law.

Amendments to the Revenue Act of 1987

1. ACCOUNTING PROVISIONS

a. Installment sales (sec. 6821(a) of the bill, sec. 10202 of the 1987 Act, and secs. 26, 453 and 453A of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, a taxpayer may elect to use the installment method with respect to certain sales of residential lots and timeshares if interest is paid on the amount of tax that is deferred under the installment method. In addition, for certain sales of property with a sales price in excess of $150,000, interest is required to be paid on the tax that is deferred under the installment method to the extent attributable to the amount by which the deferred payments arising from all dispositions of such property during any year exceed $5 million.

A taxpayer is subject to the alternative minimum tax for a taxable year to the extent that the tentative minimum tax for such taxable year exceeds the regular tax for such taxable year. The regular tax is defined as the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code with exceptions for certain taxes and with reductions for certain credits. There is no exception under present law for the interest that is imposed with respect to certain installment sales.

Explanation of provision

In order to ensure that a taxpayer who is otherwise subject to the alternative minimum tax does not avoid the payment of interest that is imposed with respect to certain installment sales, the bill provides that the term "regular tax" does not include such interest.

b. Required payments of certain entities (sec. 6821(b) of the bill, sec. 10206 of the 1987 Act, and sec. 7519 of the Code)

Present law

Partnerships and S corporations generally are required to conform their taxable years to that of their owners, effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986. Partnerships and S corporations may elect a taxable year other than a required taxable year if certain required payments are made to the Internal Revenue Service. The amount of the required payments for an election year is phased in over a four-year period beginning with election years that begin in 1987 as a means of approximating the four-year spread of income that was provided to certain partners and S corporation shareholders that owned an interest in a partnership or S corporation that was required by the 1986 Act to change to a new taxable year.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the phase-in rule is not to apply for taxable years beginning after 1988 unless more than 50 percent of the net income of the partnership or S corporation for the short taxable year that otherwise would have resulted had the election not been made is allocable to partners or shareholders who would have been eligible to include such income over a four-year period.

2. CORPORATE PROVISION: ADJUSTMENTS TO EARNINGS AND PROFITS AND TO BASIS OF STOCK OF A SUBSIDIARY (SEC. 6821(C) OF THE BILL, SEC. 10222(A) OF THE 1987 ACT AND SEC. 1503(E)(2)(A)(II) OF THE CODE)

Present law

The rules requiring certain adjustments to earnings and profits and to the basis of stock of a subsidiary, for purposes of determining gain or loss on dispostion of such stock, may not apply where the corporation disposing of the stock of a former member of an affiliated group is itself a former member of the group.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that the rules requiring certain adjustments to earnings and profits and to the basis of stock of a subsidiary, for purposes of determining gain or loss on dispostion of such stock, apply where the corporation disposing of the stock of a former member of an affiliated group is itself a former member of the group. The provision is not intended to apply to the extent such adjustments have already been made with respect to a prior disposition.

3. REQUIRED MEALS FOR CREWS OF CERTAIN VESSELS (SEC. 6841(D)(18) OF THE BILL AND SEC. 274 OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, the amount allowable as a deduction for certain expenses for food, beverages, and entertainment is limited to 80 percent of the expense. This 80-percent limitation does not apply to expenses for food or beverages required by Federal law to be provided to crew members of a commercial vessel.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that the exception to the 80-percent limitation applies to food or beverages required by any Federal law (including but not limited to 46 U.S.C. sec. 10303).

Amendments related to pension provisions

1. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986 (SEC. 6861 OF THE BILL)

a. Vesting Standards (sec. 1113 of the Reform Act, sec. 411 of the Code, and sec. 203 of ERISA)

Present law

Under present law, a plan (other than a multiemployer plan) is not qualified unless a participant's employer-provided benefit vests at least as rapidly as under 1 or 2 alternative schedules. A plan satisfies the first schedule if a participant has a nonforfeitable right to 100 percent of the participant's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions upon completion of 5 years of service. A plan satisfies the second schedule if a participant has a nonforfeitable right to at least 20 percent of the participant's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions after 3 years of service, 40 percent at the end of 4 years of service, 60 percent at the end of 5 years of service, 80 percent at the end of 6 years of service, and 100 percent at the end of 7 years of service.

In the case of a multiemployer plan, a participant's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions is required to be 100-percent vested no later than upon the participant's completion of 10 years of service. This exception applies only to employees covered by the plan pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement.

Prior to the Act, special vesting rules applied to class-year plans. A class-year plan was a profit-sharing, money purchase, or stock bonus plan that provided for the separate vesting of employee rights to employer contributions on a year-by-year basis. The minimum vesting requirements were satisfied under prior law if the plan provided that a participant's rights to amounts derived from employer contributions with respect to any plan year were nonforfeitable not later than the close of the fifth plan year following the plan year for which the contribution was made.

The imposition of the new vesting rules described above, including the repeal of class-year vesting, generally apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 1988, with respect to participants who have at least 1 hour of service after the effective date.

Explanation of provision

The repeal of class-year vesting was not intended to adversely affect the vesting status of any participant. To fulfill this intent, the bill provides a special rule applicable to plans that after October 22, 1986, used class-year vesting. Whether a plan falls within this category is to be determined without regard to any amendment adopted after October 22, 1986, eliminating class-year vesting.

Plans that fall within the above category are to apply a special rule to any employee who (1) has an hour of service before the adoption of any amendment eliminating class-year vesting; (2) has an hour of service on or after the first day of the first plan year for which the repeal of class-year vesting is applicable to such employee with respect to the plan; and (3) has not incurred a 5-year break in service immediately before performing the hour of service described in (2). Under this special rule, for the year described in (2) above and any subsequent year, the employer's nonforfeitable right to the employee's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions is to be determined under the class-year vesting schedule that was eliminated if such schedule would yield a large nonforfeitable right than the new vesting schedule. Compliance with this rule will not cause the plan to fail the minimum participation rule (sec. 401(a)(26)).

In addition, the bill clarifies that a matching contribution is not treated a forfeitable merely because the contribution is forfeitable if the contribution it matches is an excess contribution (sec. 401(k)(8)(B)), an excess deferral (sec. 402(g)(2)(A)), or an excess aggregate contribution (sec. 401(m)(6)(B)).

b. Coordination of present and prior law

Present law

The Act contained several provisions to facilitate compliance with the provisions of the Act. Under one such provision, the Act generally allowed plans that operated in compliance with the new requirements of Title XI of the Reform Act to delay the corresponding plan amendments to a specified time.

Under present and prior law, benefits and contributions under a qualified plan may not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees. Under prior law, a plan was not considered discriminatory merely because an employee's benefits under the plan were reduced in accordance with certain requirements to take into account the employee's social security benefits (sec. 401(1)).

The Act modified the integration rules to limit the permitted disparity between benefits for highly and nonhighly compensated employees. The Act's rules are generally effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1988. The Act contemplated that the Secretary would prescribe rules coordinating the benefits provided under the rules of prior law and the Act. In the case of a final pay defined benefit pension plan that is frozen as of January 1, 1989, and that was integrated in accordance with prior law, proposed Treasury regulations generally have the effect of precluding benefits from being calculated based on the final average pay of the participant when the participant retires (rather than the date the plan was frozen).

Explanation of provision

The bill delays the time by which required amendments are to be made for an additional year, so that plan amendments are generally not required until before the first plan year beginning on or after January 1, 1990. The same conditions that originally applied to the delayed amendment rules continue to apply. Thus, for example, the plan must be operated in accordance with applicable requirements.

The bill also provides the same delayed amendment rules (other than those relating to a model amendment to be prescribed by the Internal Revenue Service) with respect to the plan amendments required by Title XVIII of the Act (the technical corrections title) or by the bill itself or by the technical corrections to the Act. These changes further the intent of Congress to ease the administrative burdens on employers that maintain plans by delaying the date required for certain amendments so that, in general, all required amendments can be made in a single year.

In addition, the bill provides that a collective bargaining agreement is not to be treated as terminated merely because a plan is amended pursuant to the agreement to meet the requirement of Title XI or Title XVIII of the Act. The bill does not intend to create an inference that such an amendment otherwise would be considered a termination of a collective bargaining agreement, or that an amendment made solely to conform a plan to a requirement added by another Act, is considered a termination.

The committee intends that the Secretary further facilitate the coordination between prior and present law by prescribing rules that permit a defined benefit pension plan that has frozen accruals to calculate benefits based on final average pay in accordance with a benefit formula in existence on the effective date of the Act's integration rules (and at all times during the existence of the plan or, if a shorter period of time, since 1986) if appropriate conditions, as prescribed by the Secretary, are satisfied. It is intended that among the conditions to be imposed, the Secretary will include a requirement that the employer maintain a nonintegrated plan in years after 1988 that provides a minimum benefit level (i.e., 1 percent of compensation), the employer does not maintain any top-heavy plans, and the benefit formula in effect prior to 1988 would satisfy the 50-percent offset requirement in present law.

c. Health Care Continuation Rules (sec. 1895 of the Reform Act, sec. 4980B of the Code, and secs. 602 and 607 of ERISA)

(1) Covered Employees

Present law

The health care continuation rules generally require that employers provide qualified beneficiaries with the opportunity to continue to participate for a specified period in the employer's health plan despite the occurrence of a qualifying event that otherwise would have terminated such participation. In general, qualified beneficiaries are defined to include certain "covered employees" and certain family members of covered employees.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, the definition of covered employee includes any individual who is (or was) provided coverage under a group health plan by virtue of the performance of services by the individual for 1 or more persons maintaining the plan. Thus, the term "covered employee" can include an individual by virtue of the individual's performance of services as, for example, an independent contractor for a third party or as a partner for his or her partnership.

Pursuant to this provision, for purposes of the health care continuation rules, references to employer or employee in the statute are considered to include persons receiving or performing services other than in an employer-employee relationship. In addition, persons receiving services are subject to the employer aggregation rules of section 414(t) and the employee leasing rules of section 414(n) to the same extent as if such persons were employers with respect to the service performer.

The changes made by this provision are mandated by national health policy and concerns, are limited solely to the health care continuation rules, and are not intended to alter or change in any manner the current statutory and common law relationship between an individual and the person for whom the individual performs services.

This provision applies to plan years beginning after December 31, 1989.

(2) New Coverage

Present law

Under the health care continuation rules, continuation coverage may be terminated upon the occurrence of certain events. One such event is the coverage of the qualified beneficiary under the group health plan of an employer other than the employer providing the continuation coverage.

Explanation of provision

The bill deletes the provision allowing continuation coverage to be terminated upon the coverage of the qualified beneficiary under the group health plan of an employer other than the employer providing the continuation coverage.

This provision is intended to carry out the purpose of the health care continuation rules, which was to reduce the extent to which certain events, such as the loss of one's job, could create a significant gap in health coverage. The fact that a qualified beneficiary receiving group health coverage from another employer is willing to pay up to 102 percent of the applicable premium for continuation coverage (which he or she may be required to pay by the employer providing the continuation coverage) is a strong indication that the new employer group health coverage has left a significant gap in the qualified beneficary's health coverage. This is especially true when the new employer group health coverage excludes coverage for a preexisting condition that is covered by the continuation coverage.

This provision generally applies to events occurring after December 31, 1989. In addition, the provision applies to qualified beneficiaries who elect continuation coverage in 1989, and who pay for and continue to pay for continuation coverage. Thus, the provision would prohibit the termination of continuation coverage other than in accordance with the provision in the case of qualified beneficiaries who receive continuation coverage at any time after October 3, 1989. The provision would not apply, however, to a qualified beneficiary who was receiving continuation coverage in 1989, and whose coverage terminated before October 4, 1989, except to the extent the beneficiary had paid for the coverage.

(3) Payment

Present law

Under the health care continuation rules, if a qualified beneficiary elects continuation coverage under a plan, the plan is to permit payment for continuation coverage during the period preceding the election to be made within 45 days of the date of the election.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarified that a plan may not require the payment of any premium before the day which is 45 days after the day on which the qualified beneficiary made the initial election for continuation coverage. This delayed due date for the initial premium does not prevent the collection of a premium for the period of delay.

The provision is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1989.

(4) Multiple Qualifying Events

Present law

Under present law, the maximum period of continuation coverage depends on the nature of the qualifying events. For example, if the qualifying event is the death of the covered employee or the covered employee's becoming entitled to medicare, the maximum period is 36 months. On the other hand, if an individual obtains health care continuation rights by virtue of a reduction of hours or separation from service of the covered employee, the maximum period of continuation coverage is 18 months.

If a qualified event that gives rise to 18 months of coverage is followed within the period of continuation coverage by an event that gives rise to 36 months of coverage, the period of coverage is extended to 36 months from the date of the original event. In addition, if the individual obtains health care continuation rights by virtue of a reduction of hours of the covered employee and the covered employee separates from service with 18 months following the reduction in hours, the maximum period of continuation coverage is 36 months from the date of reduction of hours even though both events give rise to only 18 months of continuation coverage.

Explanation of provision

It is inappropriate to extend the period of continuation coverage to 36 months when a separation from service occurs following reduction in hours because the maximum period of coverage following either event is only 18 months.

Under the bill, if an individual obtains health care continuation rights by virtue of a reduction of hours and then, within 18 months, the employee separates from service, the maximum period of continuation coverage is 18 months from the date of the reduction of hours.

Under present law, if a covered employee who is still working is entitled to medicare coverage and then separates from service or has a reduction of hours, the separation or reduction in hours may be treated as the qualifying event. Thus, the spouse and dependents of the covered employee would only be entitled to 18 months of continuation coverage rather than 36 months as was intended. The provision provides that if a covered employee is entitled to medicare and within 18 months of such entitlement, separates from service or has a reduction in hours, the duration of continuation coverage for the spouse and dependents is 36 months from the date the covered employee became entitled to medicare.

The committee intends that if a covered employee has a qualifying event that results in 18 months of coverage and the covered employee becomes entitled to medicare coverage before the expiration of the 18 months, a qualified beneficiary (other than the covered employee) who is at that time covered under the group health plan is entitled to continuation coverage for a total of 36 months from the date of the original qualifying event. Thus, this rule is the same as if, for example, a reduction in hours were followed by the death of the employee. Failure to comply with this rule is not a good faith interpretation of the continuation coverage rules.

The provision is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1989.

d. Technical corrections to the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 (sec. 1898 of the Reform Act, sec. 417 of the Code, and sec. 205 of ERISA)

Present law

Under present law, a plan is required to notify participants of their rights to decline a qualified preretirement survivors annuity before the applicable election period. Under the Act, the period during which notice is required to be provided to an individual is the latest of the following periods: (1) the period beginning with the first day of the plan year in which the participant attains age 32 and ending with the close of the plan year in which the participant attains age 35; (2) a reasonable period of time after the individual becomes a plan participant; (3) a reasonable period of time after the survivor benefit applicable to a participant is no longer subsidized (as defined in sec. 417(a)(4)); (4) a reasonable period of time after the survivor benefit provisions (sec. 401(a)(11)) become applicable with respect to a participant; or (5) a reasonable period after separation from service in the case of a participant who separates from service before attaining age 35.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the notice period in the case of a participant who separates from service before age 35 overrides any other period during which notice might be required. In such a case, the bill provides that the notification period is a reasonable period after separation from service without regard to any other required notice periods.

This provision is effective for distributions after the date of enactment of the bill.

2. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO THE OMNIBUS RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1986 (SEC. 6871 OF THE BILL, SECS. 9202 AND 9203 OF THE RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1986, SEC. 411(a)(8) OF THE CODE, AND SEC. 3(24)(B) OF ERISA)

Present law

Under present law, for purposes of the qualified plan rules, the term "normal retirement age" means the earlier of (1) normal retirement age under the plan, or (2) the latest of (a) age 65, (b) in the case of a participant who commences participation in the plan within 5 years before attaining normal retirement age under the plan, the 5th anniversary of the commencement of participation, or (c) in the case of a participation not described in (b), the 10th anniversary of the commencement of participation.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, normal retirement age is defined to mean the later of (1) age 65, or (2) the 5th anniversary of the time a plan participant commenced participation in the plan.

3. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO THE PENSION PROTECTION ACT (SEC. 6881 OF THE BILL)

a. Minimum funding standard and deductions

i. Modifications of minimum funding standard (sec. 9303 of the Pension Protection Act, secs. 404 and 412 of the Code, and sec. 302 of ERISA).

(1) Deficit reduction contribution

Present law

Under the Act, additional minimum funding requirements apply to defined benefit plans (other than multiemployer plans) if the assets of the plan are less than 100 percent of current liability. For such plans, the amount otherwise required to be charged to the funding standard account is increased by the sum of (1) the excess of (a) the deficit reduction contribution over (b) certain charges and credits to the funding standard account, plus (2) the unpredictable contingent event amount. The deficit reduction contribution is equal to the sum of (1) the unfunded old liability amount, and (2) the unfunded new liability amount.

Unfunded old liability generally includes unfunded liabilities as of the beginning of the first plan year beginning after December 31, 1987 (determined without regard to plan amendments after October 16, 1987). The unfunded old liability amount is increased by the amount necessary to amortize over 18 plan years the unfunded existing benefit increase liability, which in general is certain increases in liabilities due to benefit increases under collective bargaining agreements ratified before October 17, 1937. Unfunded existing benefit increase liability is unfunded current liability determined by (1) taking into account only liabilities attributable to the benefit increase, and (2) by reducing plan assets by the plan's current liability determined without regard to the benefit increase.

Unfunded new liability is the unfunded current liability determined without regard to the unamortized portion of the unfunded old liability and the liability with respect to any unpredictable contingent event benefits (without regard to whether or not the event has occurred).

The Act's new funding rule for unpredictable contingent event benefits is effective with respect to plan years beginning after December 31, 1988. However, the new rule does not apply to benefits with respect to which the event on which the benefit is contingent occurred before October 17, 1987. Such benefits are funded under the pre-Act rules; that is, generally as an experience loss.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, as under the Act, unfunded existing benefit increase liability is unfunded current liability determined by (1) taking into account only liabilities attributable to the benefit increase, and (2) by reducing plan assets by the plan's current liability determined without regard to the benefit increase. The bill clarifies that the calculation in (2) does not reduce plan assets below zero.

Under the bill, unfunded new liability is the unfunded current liability determined without regard to (1) the unamortized portion of the unfunded old liability, (2) the unamortized portion of the unfunded existing benefit increase liability, and (3) the liability with respect to any unpredictable contingent event benefits (without regard to whether or not the event has occurred). The bill thus conforms the treatment of unamortized existing benefit increase liability to the treatment of unamortized old liability for purposes of determining unfunded new liability.

The bill provides that the new funding rule for unpredictable contingent event benefits applies to such benefits with respect to which the event on which the benefit is contingent occurs in a plan year beginning after December 31, 1988. Benefits with respect to which the contingency occurs in a plan year beginning before January 1, 1989, are subject to the otherwise applicable funding rules, generally as an experience loss. This change in the effective date is made to eliminate issues arising with respect to transition from the pre-Act funding rule to the Act's funding rule for benefits with respect to which the contingency occurs after October 16, 1987, and before a plan year beginning after December 31, 1988.

(2) Current liability

Present law

The Act provides that, in determining current liability, certain preparticipation service is to be disregarded. Unfunded current liability is the excess of the plan's current liability over plan assets. For this purpose, plan assets are reduced by any credit balance in the funding standard account.

Explanation of provision

In accordance with the legislative history, the bill provides that the rule disregarding certain preparticipation service does not apply with respect to a participant who does not, at the time of becoming a participant, have years of service in excess of the years required for plan eligibilty.

The bill also provides that the rule disregarding preparticipation service is elective. The rule was intended to provide relief for employers in certain situations, for example, if the employer establishes a new plan that takes into account past service. The rule does not need to be imposed where the employer does not need such relief. The bill provides that the election not to take advantage of the rule may be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary. Of course, if an employer does disregard preparticipation service, such service is disregarded for all purposes in calculating current liability. Thus, for example, it would be disregarded for purposes of the deduction rules as well as the minimum funding rules.

The bill provides that assets are to be reduced by any credit balance in the funding standard account for purposes of the new funding requirements (sec. 412(1)), and that, in other places where the term "unfunded current liability" is used, the Secretary may provide for such a reduction. Unfunded current liability is relevant not only for purposes of the new minimum funding requirements, but also for a number of other purposes under the Act. In calculating unfunded current liability, it is appropriate to reduce assets by any credit balance in the funding standard account for some purposes (such as the new funding rules) but not for others.

It is anticipated that no reduction will be made for purposes of the rule permitting deductions up to the amount of unfunded current liability (Code sec. 404(a)(1)(D)), the lien on missed contributions (Code sec. 412(n)), the security requirement for certain benefit increases (Code sec. 401(a)(29)), or the additional Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC) premium (ERISA sec. 4006(a)(3)(E)).

(3) Valuations

Present law

Present law provides that a determination of experience gains and losses and a valuation of the plan's liability is to be made not less frequently than once every 3 years, except that such determination is to be made frequently to the extent required in particular cases under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that plan valuations are to be made not less frequently than annually. Annual valuations are necessary under the Act's minimum funding rules and the new full funding limit because the minimum and maximum contributions for a plan year depend on the plan's funded status for the year.

(4) Steel employee plans

Present law

The Act provides a special funding transition rule with respect to steel employee plans. The contribution required under this special rule is, in general, the sum of (1) the required percentage of the current liability of the plan, plus (2) a portion of the unpredictable contingent event benefit liability. The required percentage depends in part on the plan's funded current liability percentage for this purpose, the unpredictable contingent event benefit liability. The required percentage depends in part on the plan's funded current liability percentage. In calculating the funded current liability percentage for this purpose, the unpredictable contingent event benefit liability and contributions relating to such liability are disregarded.

Explanation of provision

For purposes of calculating the funded current liability percentage under the steel employee plan rule, the bill provides that unpredictable contingent event benefit liability, contributions relating to such liability, and income on such contributions are disregarded. The exclusion of income on such contributions is consistent with the Act's intent to provide a separate funding rule for unpredictable contingent event benefit liability.

ii. Time for contributions (sec. 9304 of the Pension Protection Act, sec. 412(c) and (m) of the Code, and Sec. 302(c) and (e) of ERISA).

Present law

The Act requires that installment payments of estimated contributions be made throughout the plan year. This requirement applies to plans subject to the minimum funding standards other than multiemployer plans.

A special installment payment rule applies with respect to unpredictable contingent event benefits. Under this rule, the otherwise required installment is increased by the greater of (1) the amount of unpredictable contingent event benefits paid during the 3-month period preceding the month in which the installment is due, and (2) 75 percent of the amount which would be determined for the plan year if the unpredictable contingent event benefit liabilities were amortized in equal annual installments over 7 plan years.

If a required installment is not paid in full by the due date for the installment, then the funding standard account is charged with interest on the underpayment at the rate that is the greater of (1) 175 percent of the applicable Federal mid-term rate, or (2) the plan rate in effect under section 412(b)(5).

The Act clarifies that the employer is required to notify plan participants and beneficiaries and the PBGC if the employer fails to make required contributions with respect to a plan.

The Act provides that a lien arises if required contributions are not paid and the unpaid balance of required contributions exceeds $1 million. The lien provision is effective with respect to plan years beginning after December 31, 1987. Contributions originally due before the effective date, including contributions that would have been due before the effective date but were waived, are not subject to the lien, but are taken into account in determining whether the $1 million threshold is met.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the installment payment requirement applies only to defined benefit plans (other than multiemployer plans) that are subject to the minimum funding requirements. Thus, under the bill, the installment payment requirement does not apply to money purchase pension plans. This is consistent with the general purpose of the pension provisions of the Act, which is to address problems associated with single employer defined benefit pension plans.

The bill modifies the special installment payment rule with respect to unpredictable contingent event benefits to conform the rule to the funding rule for such benefits. Under the bill, the otherwise required installment (determined without regard to unpredictable contingent event benefits) is increased by the greater of (1) the unfunded percentage (as determined under sec. 412(1)(5)(A)) of unpredictable contingent event benefits paid during the 3-month period preceding the month in which the installment is due, or (2) 25 percent of the amount required to be contributed for the plan year under the amortization rule for such benefits (sec. 412(1)(5)(A)(ii)).

The bill adds a sanction for failure to notify plan participants and beneficiaries of the failure to make required contributions. Under the bill, a court may require an employer who fails to comply to pay the affected participants and beneficiaries up to $100 per day from the date of the failure. This sanction is consistent with the existing sanctions under ERISA for failure to provide participants and beneficiaries with required information.

The bill conforms the Act to the legislative history by providing that the notice requirement with respect to participants and beneficiaries is effective with respect to plan years beginning after December 31, 1987.

The bill clarifies that the interest rate on underpayments of required installments is the greater of (1) 175 percent of the applicable Federal mid-term rate, or (2) the rate of interest used under the plan to determine costs (including any adjustments required for plans subject to the new funding rules under section 412(1)). Thus, under the bill, the interest rate on underpayments will be at least equal to the interest rate the plan is using under the minimum funding rules.

iii. Funding waivers (secs. 9306 and 9307 of the Pension Protection Act, sec. 412(f) of the Code, and sec. 303 of ERISA).

Present law

Under the Act, the interest rate on waived contributions in the case of a plan other than a multiemployer plan is the greater of (1) 150 percent of the applicable Federal mid-term rate, or (2) the rate of interest used under the plan in determining costs.

Prior to the Act, a funding waiver could not be granted with respect to a plan for more than 5 of any 15 consecutive plan years. Under the Act, a waiver cannot be granted with respect to a plan for more than 3 of any 15 consecutive plan years. This provision of the Act applies to any waiver application submitted after December 17, 1987, and any waiver granted pursuant to such an application. In applying the Act's new limit on the number of waivers, the number of waivers which may be granted pursuant to applications submitted after December 17, 1987, is to be determined without regard to waivers granted with respect to plan years beginning January 1, 1988.

The bill provides that, for purposes of determining the interest rate on waived contributions, adjustments required for plans subject to the new funding rules under section 412(1) are taken into account in calculating the plan's interest rate. Thus, under the bill, the interest rate on waived contributions will be at least equal to the interest rate the plan is using under the minimum funding rules.

Under the bill, the reduction in the number of waivers that can be granted within a 15-year period is effective with respect to waivers for plan years beginning after December 31, 1987. In determining whether the new frequency requirement is satisfied, waivers granted with respect to plan years beginning before January 1, 1988, are not taken into account. Waivers for plan years beginning before January 1, 1988, are subject to the pre-Act frequency limit. Under the effective date provisions of the Act with respect to frequency of waivers, it would be possible to obtain a waiver that did not count for purposes of the pre-Act frequency limit or the Act's frequency limit. These changes address this situation.

iv. Limitation on interest rate (sec. 9307(e) of the Pension Protection Act, sec. 412(b) of the Code and sec. 302(b) of ERISA).

Present law

Under the Act, the interest rate used for certain purposes under the minimum funding rules is required to be (1) within a specific permissible range, and (2) within that range, consistent with the interest rate which would be used by an insurance company to establish the amount it would charge an employer to satisfy the liabilities under the employer's plan. The permissible range under the Code is, in general, not more than 10 percent above and not more than 10 percent below the weighted average of the rates of interest on 30-year Treasury securities during a 4-year period.

Explanation of provision

To reflect the legislative history, the bill provides that these special interest rate rules apply for purposes of determining current liability and for purposes of determining a plan's required contribution under the funding rules applicable to plans with assets less than current liability. Thus, the bill clarifies that these special rules do not apply for all purposes under the minimum funding rules. For purposes for which these special rules do not apply, the plan's interest rate is required to be reasonable in light of the experience of the plan and reasonable expectations.

The bill conforms the definition of the permissible range in ERISA to the Code definition of the permissible range.

v. Effective date of changes relating to amortization periods (sec. 9307(f) of the Pension Protection Act).

Present law

In the case of plans other than multiemployer plans, the Act reduced the period for amortizing experience gains and losses from 15 years under prior law to 5 years. This change is effective for years beginning after December 31, 1987. In Notice 89-52, the Internal Revenue Service provided transitional relief with respect to the effective date of the change in the amortization period for gains and losses.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the change in the amortization period for experience gains and losses applies to gains and losses established in years beginning after December 31, 1987, to conform to the legislative history of the Pension Protection Act. The bill also provides a special transition rule for certain 1987 gains and losses. Under this rule, any experience gain or loss determined by a valuation occurring as of January 1, 1988, is treated as established in a year beginning before January 1, 1988. An employer may elect to amortize gains and losses (1) in accordance with the general effective date without regard to the special rule for valuations occurring as of January 1, 1989, (2) in accordance with the special rule, or (3) in accordance with the IRS Notice.

b. Employer access to plan assets; limitations on employer reversions upon plan termination (sec. 9311 of the Pension Protection Act, and sec. 4044(d) of ERISA)

Present law

The Act provides that a plan amendment or provision providing for or increasing a reversion to the employer is not effective before the end of the fifth calendar year following the date the provision or amendment is adopted. The Act also provides a transition rule for certain plans that allows plan amendments within one year of the effective date to take effect without regard to the 5-year rule.

The Act also made other changes relating to the distribution of assets on termination that are effective, in general, with respect to distress terminations with regard to which notices of intent to terminate are provided after December 17, 1987, and plan terminations instituted by the PBGC after December 17, 1987.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies the effective date of the 5-year rule. First, the bill clarifies that the rule applies, in general, to plan provisions or amendments adopted after December 17, 1987.

Second, the bill clarifies the transition rule. Under the bill, a plan that does not contain any provision regarding the distribution of residual assets can be amended, within one year from December 17, 1987, to provide for an employer reversion without regard to the 5-year rule. If, however, after December 17, 1987, a plan provides for distribution of residual assets to employees, then the transition rule does not apply.

With respect to the other changes relating to distribution of assets, the bill clarifies that the changes also apply to standard terminations with respect to which the notice of intent to terminate is issued after December 17, 1987.

c. Treatment of plan terminations

i. Elimination of ERISA section 4049 trust (sec. 9312 of the Pension Protection Act, and sec. 4022 of ERISA).

Present law

Prior to the Act, the employer's liability payments for unfunded benefits in excess of guaranteed benefits were paid to a special trust established under section 4049 of ERISA. The Act eliminates the section 4049 trust, and provides that the employer's entire liability following plan termination is to be paid to the PBGC. The PBGC then is to play both guaranteed and nonguaranteed benefits to participants and beneficiaries. The amount of nonguaranteed benefits paid to participants and beneficiaries depends on the applicable recovery ratio.

In the case of terminations where the unfunded benefit liabilities exceed a certain amount, the applicable recovery ratio is based on the actual recovery from the employer (the "large plan" rule). In the case of other terminations, the applicable recovery ratio is based on the average recovery from prior terminations with respect to which the notice of intent to terminate is provided after December 17, 1987 (the "small plan" rule). In order to enable the PBGC to establish the recovery ratio for plans subject to the small plan rule, in the case of terminations with respect to which notices of intent to terminate are provided on or before December 17, 1990, payments to participants and beneficiaries are based on recovery from the particular termination. The Act provides that the transition rule does not apply if the recovery ratio is not finally determined as of December 17, 1990.

The provisions relating to the elimination of the section 409 trust apply to distress terminations with respect to which notices of intent to terminate are provided after December 17, 1987, and terminations instituted by the PBGC after such date.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that, in determining the recovery ratio under the small plan rule, the termination taken into account are those with respect to which the notice of intent to terminate was provided after December 17, 1987, and within the 5 fiscal years of the Federal Government ending before the year in which the date the notice of intent to terminate the plan for which the recovery ratio is being determined was provided.

The bill provides that the transition rule for small plans applies to all terminations with respect to which the notice to terminate is provided after December 17, 1987, and on or before December 17, 1990. Thus, the transition rule is not limited to situations where the recovery ratio is finally determined as of December 17, 1990. This limit on the transition rule unduly limited the application of the transition rule.

The bill clarifies that the provisions apply to all terminations where notice of intent to terminate is provided after December 17, 1987. The bill also makes additional conforming changes are needed to reflect the examination of the section 4049 trust.

ii. Standards for termination (sec. 9313 of the Pension Protection Act, and sec. 4041(c) of ERISA

Present law

In order to terminate a plan in a distress termination, the plan sponsor and each member of the sponsor's controlled group must demonstrate that it meets one of several distress criteria as of the date of plan termination. In a distress termination, the plan administrator is required to provide certain information relating to plan assets and benefits to the PBGC.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the distress criteria must be satisfied as of the proposed date of plan termination, and clarifies that the information relating to plan assets and benefits is to be provided as the proposed termination date and, if applicable, the proposed distribution date.

d. PBGC Premiums (Sec. 9331 of the Pension Protection Act, and Sec. 4006 of ERISA)

Present law

Under present law, an additional PBGC premium is required to be paid with respect to a single-employer defined benefit pension plan if the plan has unfunded vested benefits. Also under present law, contributions to a plan are not deductible if they exceed the full funding limitation (sec. 404). Under the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987, the full funding limitation is the excess (if any) of (1) the lesser of (a) 150 percent of current liability, or (b) the accrued liability under the plan (determined in a specified manner), over (2) the value of the assets of the plan (sec. 412(c)(7)).

Explanation of provision

Under present law, it is possible that deductible contributions to a plan cannot be made to a plan for a plan year because of the full funding limitation, but that an additional PBGC premium is required with respect to the plan. In order to avoid this result, the bill provides that if deductible contributions to a plan cannot be made for a plan year because of the full funding limitation, no additional premium is required with respect to the next year.

e. Miscellaneous pension provisions

i. Security rules for underfunded plans (sec. 9341 of the Pension Protection Act, sec. 401(a)(29) of the Code, and sec. 307 of ERISA).

Present law

In the case of a defined benefit plan (other than a multiemployer plan), if a plan amendment is adopted and the funded current liability percentage of the plan (taking into account the amendment) is less than 60 percent, then the contributing sponsor (or any member of the contributing sponsor's controlled group) is required to provide security to the plan. The amount of the security is the excess of (1) the lesser of (a) the amount of plan assets necessary to increase the funded current liability percentage under the plan to 60 percent, or (b) the amount of the increase in current liability under the plan attributable to the plan amendment, over (2) $10 million.

The security provisions are contained both in the Code (as a qualification requirement) and in ERISA. The Code provision provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue regulations with respect to partial releases of the security by reason of increases in the funded current liability percentage.

The provisions generally apply to plan amendments after December 22, 1987. Under a special rule, in the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements ratified before December 22, 1987, the provisions do not apply to plan amendments adopted pursuant to such collective bargaining agreements.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that, in determining the amount of security that must be provided, the increase in current liability attributable to the plan amendment and all plan amendments after December 22, 1987, are taken into account. Thus, for example, an employer cannot avoid the security requirement by adopting a series of plan amendments, each one of which separately results in an increase in current liability that is below the $10 million threshold but which together increase current liability by more than the $10 million threshold.

The bill provides that the security provision does not apply to plans that are not subject to the minimum funding requirements. Thus, for example, the provision does not apply to church or governmental plans.

The bill conforms the ERISA provision to the Code provision by clarifying that the Secretary of the Treasury has regulatory authority with respect to partial release of the security.

The bill provides that a contributing sponsor that is required to provide security is required to notify the PBGC of the plan amendment. This change conforms the statutory provisions to the legislative history. The PBGC may assess a penalty, payable to the PBGC, of up to $1,000 for each day the required notice is not provided. This penalty is consistent with the penalty added by the Act for the failure to provide certain other information to the PBGC. Under the bill, as under the Act, the penalty is to reflect the materiality of the failure to provide the required information.

With respect to the special effective date for collectively bargained plans, the bill provides that extensions, amendments, or modifications of the bargaining agreement on or after December 22, 1987, are disregarded.

The bill also extends the $1,000 penalty, described above, to failures to notify the PBGC of the failure to make required contributions.

ii. Reporting requirements (sec. 9342 of the Pension Protection Act, and sec. 103(d) of ERISA).

Present law

Under the Act, the annual report for the plan must contain additional information regarding the funded status of the plan if the value of plan assets is less than 60 percent of current liability.

The Act authorizes the Secretary of Labor to assess a civil penalty of up to $1,000 for each day the plan administrator fails to file an annual report.

Explanation of provision

The bill reflects the legislative history by providing that the reporting requirement applies with respect to a plan if the value of plan assets is less than 70 percent of current liability. The bill also clarifies that, in the case of plans with assets less than 70 percent of current liability, the annual report is to include the percentage which the value of plan assets is of current liability.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Labor to bring a civil action to collect the penalty for failure to file an annual report. The bill also clarifies that the plan administrator is liable for the penalty.

iii. Coordination of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 with provisions of ERISA (sec. 9343 of the Pension Protection Act, and sec. 403 of ERISA).

Present law

Under ERISA, plan assets cannot be returned to the employer prior to termination of the plan, except in certain limited circumstances. Prior to the Act, section 403(c)(3) of ERISA provided for the return of contributions which would otherwise be excess contributions as defined in section 4972(b) of the Code, to the extent that section 4972 provides for return of the contributions. In a conforming change, the Act replaced the references to section 4972 of the Code with a reference to section 4979 of the Code, which relates to contributions that do not satisfy the special nondiscrimination rules applicable to qualified cash or deferred arrangements and similar arrangements.

Explanation of provision

The bill deletes section 403(c)(3) of ERISA. It is no longer necessary in light of recent changes in the Code.

Prior to the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA), section 4972 of the Code provided an excise tax on excess contributions to certain plans maintained by self-employed individuals, and for the return of such contributions in order to avoid the excise tax. As part of TEFRA's changes conforming the rules applicable to plans maintained by self-employed persons generally to the rules applicable to other qualified plans, section 4972 (in its then present form) was repealed.

Neither present-law section 4972 of the Code nor present-law section 4979 of the Code provides for return of contributions to the employer. Thus, neither section should be a basis for the exception to the general rule prohibiting return of assets to the employer prior to plan termination.

IV. PLAN INVESTMENT IN EMPLOYER SECURITIES (SEC. 9345 OF THE PENSION PROTECTION ACT, AND SEC. 407 OF ERISA).

Present law

The Act amended the definition of qualifying employer security. This change was intended to apply only to plans that are not individual account plans.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the new definition of qualifying employer security applies only to plans that are not individual account plans.

V. INTEREST RATE ON ACCUMULATED CONTRIBUTIONS (SEC. 9346 OF THE PENSION PROTECTION ACT, SEC. 411(C)(2) OF THE CODE, AND SEC. 204(C)(2) OF ERISA).

Present law

Present law prescribes rules for determining what portion of an employee's total accrued benefit under a defined benefit pension plan is derived from employer contributions and what part is derived from employee contributions. Present law provides that the accrued benefit derived from employer contributions is the excess of the total accrued benefit over the accrued benefit derived from employee contributions.

In the case of a defined benefit pension plan providing an annual benefit in the form of a single life annuity beginning at normal retirement age, the accrued benefit derived from employee contributions is, in general, an annual benefit equal to the employee's accumulated contributions multiplied by the applicable conversion factor.

An employee's accumulated contributions are equal to the sum of (1) mandatory contributions made by the employee; (2) interest under the plan to the end of the last plan year to which ERISA does not apply; and (3) with respect to each subsequent plan year, interest on the amounts determined under (1) and (2) at a rate equal to 120 percent of the mid-term applicable Federal rate (AFR) as in effect for the first month of the plan year. Prior to the Pension Protection Act, the interest rate in (3) is 5 percent. However, the accrued benefit derived from employee contributions cannot exceed the greater of (1) the employee's accrued benefit under the plan, or (2) the accrued benefit derived from employee contributions determined without regard to interest.

There has been some uncertainty as to the effect of the Pension Protection Act interrest rate rules for employee contributions, and the proper method for determining the accrued benefit derived from employee contributions. In addition, the present-law rules for determining an employee's accrued benefit produce inconsistencies in some cases. In order to resolve these issues, the bill modifies the rules relating to the accrued benefit derived from employee contributions.

The bill provides that, in calculating an employee's accumulated contributions, interest on mandatory contributions is credited (1) for the period up to the date for which the determination is being made at the rate determined under the present-law rules, and (2) for the period beginning with the determination date and ending on the date on which the employee attains normal retirement age, at the interest rate used under the plan in calculating the present value of accrued benefits (sec. 417(e)(3)). The conversion of the employee's contributions (plus interest) to an annuity is calculated using the interest rate used under the plan in determining the present value of accrued benefits (sec. 417(e)(3)).

The bill also eliminates the present-law limitation on the accrued benefit derived from employee contributions.

Some employers may have already amended their plans to conform to the interest rate rule of the Pension Protection Act, or may have adopted a new plan that conforms to such rule. If such plans are amended to conform to the bill, in some cases this might be considered a prohibited reduction in accrued benefits (sec. 411(d)(6)). Accordingly, the bill provides a transition rule that permits such plans to be amended to conform to the new rules without violating the reduction in accrued benefit rules.

Subtitle I. Child Care and Earned Income Credit Provisions

1. CREDIT FOR DEPENDENT CARE EXPENSES AND CERTAIN HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUMS (SECS. 6901, 6902, AND 6904 THROUGH 6906 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 21, 6401, AND NEW SEC. 3507A OF THE CODE)

Present law

Child and Dependent Care Credit

Under present law, an individual who maintains a household that includes one or more qualifying individuals is entitled to a nonrefundable tax credit equal to a percentage of the employment-related child or dependent care expenses paid by the individual for the taxable year to enable the individual to work (sec. 21). The maximum amount of the credit is 30 percent of allowable employment-related expenses. This 30 percent is reduced by one percentage point for each $2,000 (or fraction thereof) of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income (AGI) between $10,000 and $28,000. The credit rate is 20 percent for taxpayers with AGI in excess of $28,000.

The maximum amount of expenses that may be taken into account in calculating the credit is limited to $2,400 per year in the case of one qualifying individual and $4,800 in the case of more than one qualifying individual. In addition, the maximum amount of expenses taken into account cannot exceed the individual's earned income or, in the case of married taxpayers, the lesser of the individual's earned income or the earned income of his or her spouse. A special rule applies for determining the income of the taxpayer's spouse if the spouse is a full-time student or mentally or physically incapable of caring for himself or herself.

A "qualifying individual" is (1) a dependent of the taxpayer who is under the age of 13 and with respect to whom the taxpayer is entitled to claim a dependent exemption, (2) a dependent of the taxpayer who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself, or (3) the spouse of the taxpayer, if the spouse is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself.

Tax Provisions Relating to Individual Health Insurance

Present law generally does not provide tax benefits specifically designed to encourage the purchase of health insurance by individuals; however, present law does provide certain tax benefits for health insurance in particular circumstances.

Under present law, health insurance that is paid by an employer is generally excluded from an employee's gross income. This exclusion also applies for employment tax purposes. In addition, self-employed individuals are entitled to deduct 25 percent of the amount paid for medical insurance for the individual or his or her spouse or dependents; this provision is scheduled to expire for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989. These provisions are subject to the application of nondiscrimination rules and certain other requirements.

Taxpayers who itemize deductions may deduct expenses for medical care (not compensated by insurance or otherwise) of the taxpayer or his or her spouse or dependents to the extent such expenses exceed 7.5 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. Premiums paid for health insurance qualify for the deduction.

Reasons for change

The committee intends to address two important needs of low-income working families—health insurance and child care. The committee recognizes the financial strain that the costs of these items place on low-income families and is concerned that low-income working families obtain assistance in obtaining child care and health insurance.

The committee makes two major changes to the dependent care credit in order to achieve its goals. First, the dependent care credit is modified to provide a refundable credit for expenses for health insurance that covers a child. The committee is concerned that low-income families, especially the children in these families, have adequate access to health care and are protected from the financial burden that large medical bills can place on low-income families.

Second, the bill makes the existing dependent care credit 90 percent refundable. The committee believes that the credit should be refundable so that low-income families with children obtain financial assistance in caring for the children while the parents are employed. The committee believes that refundability of the credit will remove an important barrier to the economic advancement of low-income families in that adequate child care while parents work will now be more affordable.

Explanation of Provision

The bill allows an additional credit for expenditures for certain health insurance policies and makes the present-law dependent care credit partially refundable for certain taxpayers.

Health Insurance Credit

The bill amends the dependent care credit to add a new refundable credit for health insurance expenses. The bill provides that an individual who maintains a household containing one or more qualifying individuals is entitled to a credit equal to a percentage of the individual's qualified health insurance expenses. The maximum credit percentage is 50 percent of the qualified health insurance expenses. This 50 percent is reduced by 5 percentage points for each $1,000 (or fraction thereof) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income (AGI) exceeds $12,000. Thus, the credit is zero for taxpayers with AGI in excess of $21,000.

Qualified health insurance expenses are amounts paid during the taxable year for health insurance that includes coverage for one or more qualifying individuals. For purposes of this credit, a qualifying individual is a dependent of the taxpayer who is under age 19 and with respect to whom the taxpayer can claim a dependent exemption.

Up to $1,000 of qualified health insurance expenses may be taken into account in calculating the credit. However, the maximum expenses taken into account cannot exceed the earned income of the taxpayer, reduced by employment-related expenses taken into account in determining the child care credit. Expenses, to the extent paid, reimbursed, or subsidized by the Federal government or a State or local government, are not eligible for the credit. Also, expenses for which the health insurance credit is claimed may not be deducted under the rules for health insurance of the self-employed.

Eligible taxpayers may claim credits for both dependent care and health insurance expenses.

For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991, the health insurance credit will be refundable on an advance payment basis (similar to the present-law earned income credit).

Refundable Dependent Care Credit

The bill makes the present-law dependent care credit partially refundable. That is, taxpayers who do not have sufficient taxable income to offset the credit will be entitled to receive in cash 90 percent of the amount of the credit not offset against tax liability. However, under the provision, taxpayers with adjusted gross income (AGI) in excess of $28,000 are not entitled to claim the refundable credit, but instead are eligible for the nonrefundable dependent care credit as under present law.

For purposes of determining the amounts of credit that are refundable and nonrefundable, other credits and deductions are applied before the dependent care credit, except for the earned income tax credit which is applied after the dependent care credit.

For example, suppose a taxpayer has tax liability of $70 after the application of all credits and deductions except the dependent care tax credit and the earned income tax credit, $100 of dependent care credit (before the refundability limitation), and $150 of earned income tax credit. The taxpayer offsets $70 of tax liability with $70 of the dependent care tax credit. Of the remaining $30 of dependent care credit, $27 (90 percent of $30) may be obtained as a refund while all of the $150 of earned income credit is refundable.

For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990, the dependent care credit will be refundable in the manner described. For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991, the dependent care credit will be available on an advance payment basis (similar to the present-law earned income credit).

Expenses, to the extent paid, reimbursed, or subsidized by the Federal government or a State or local government, are not eligible for the credit. For example, child care expenses that are disregarded for purposes of calculating payments under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children Program which would otherwise have reduced payments under such program and expenses reimbursed under the transitional child care assistance program of the Family Support Act of 1988 are not expenses eligible for the credit.

The committee expects that the Secretary of the Treasury will provide regulations to prevent abuse of the dependent care tax credit. The committee, for example, does not intend the dependent care credit to be available in certain reciprocal dependent care arrangements that do not enable gainful employment beyond the child care arrangement.

For example, assume two neighbors agree to pay each other to care for the other's children and the child care expenses incurred by each neighbor do not enable each individual to be gainfully employed in some manner aside from providing care to the neighbor's children. In such a case, the committee does not intend the expenses to be eligible for the credit. However, the committee does not intend to prevent individuals otherwise legitimately employed as dependent care providers from obtaining the credit on eligible dependent care expenses.

Child Health Demonstration Projects

The bill authorizes the appropriation of $25 million for each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1994 to enable the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct demonstration projects to evaluate and extend health insurance to children under age 19 who are not covered by other public or private health programs.

The Secretary is authorized to enter into agreements with public and private organizations (for example, schools and hospitals) to provide health insurance coverage to such children. The Federal government is to share up to 50 percent of the cost of programs under such agreements.

The health care program provided by an organization pursuant to such an agreement cannot restrict enrollment on the basis of a child's medical condition or impose waiting periods or exclusions for preexisting conditions. The program can also cover the parents of the child. The Secretary may permit the organization to charge for the health care.

The Secretary is directed to publish criteria governing the eligibility and participation of organizations in the demonstration projects by January 1, 1990.

GAO Study/IRS Information Program

The General Accounting Office (GAO), in consultation with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), under the provision, is required to conduct a study to determine (1) the effectiveness of the advance payment system and (2) how to implement such a system to avoid administrative complexity for small business. A report to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means with recommendations is required within one year after enactment.

The IRS is required to undertake efforts to inform the public of the availability of the credit in order to assure that persons who may be eligible will know the requirements for receiving the credit and how to apply for it.

Effective dates

The refundability feature and the modifications to the present-law dependent care credit, including the credit for health insurance expenses, generally are effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990. The availability of the advance payments of credit is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991.

2. modification and expansion of earned income credit for families with young children (sec. 6903 of the bill and secs. 32 and 3507 of the Code)

Present law

An eligible individual who maintains a home for one or more children is allowed an advance refundable tax credit based on the taxpayer's earned income (sec. 32). In 1989, the earned income tax credit (EITC) is equal to 14 percent of the first $6,500 of earned income. The credit is phased out at a rate of 10 percent of the amount of adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) that, in 1989, exceeds $10,240. The $6,500 and $10,240 amounts are adjusted annually for inflation, so that the maximum amount of credit and the maximum amount of income eligible for the credit, increase with inflation.

The credit is available to married individuals filing a joint return who are entitled to a dependency exemption for a child, a head of household, and a surviving spouse.

Because the earned income credit is refundable, eligible individuals may have no Federal income tax liability and yet receive monies from the Federal government. Certain Federally-supported means-tested programs disregard the earned income credit for purposes of determining eligibility for the program. Aid to Families with Dependent Children, for example, is one such program.

Reasons for change

The earned income tax credit is intended to provide relief through the tax system to low-income working families with children. The committee recognizes that the obligaiton of caring for young children places additional financial burdens on low-income working families. The earned income credit is adjusted, therefore, to provide an additional amount of credit to families with a young child. Since the committee recognizes that financial obligations of families with more young children are even more substantial, the credit amount is increased further if the family supports more than one young child.

The committee also believes that the interaction of the earned income credit with Federal-supported housing assistance programs should not act as a disincentive for work and, therefore, the earned income credit should be disregarded in determining eligibility for housing assistance.

Explanation of provisions

Supplemental Credit for Families with Young Children

The bill provides a supplemental earned income credit amount if any of the taxpayer's children are under the age of 4. The credit amount is calculated as 7 percent of earned income up to the present law breakpoint of $6,500 (as adjusted for inflation) for taxpayers with one child under age 4; the credit percentage for taxpayers with two or more children under age 4 is 10 percent.

Under the bill, the supplemental earned income credit is reduced by 10 percent (15 percent for taxpayers with two or more children under age 4) of the adjusted gross income (or earned income, if greater) that exceeds $10,000. The $10,000 amount is adjusted for inflation that occurs after 1991, but in no case will the phase out of the supplemental credit start at less than $12,000. In addition, the maximum amount of the credit is limited to $500 for taxpayers with one child under age 4, $750 for those with two.

The supplemental earned income credit is advance refundable in the same manner as the present-law earned income credit.

Treatment of Earned Income Credit for Housing Assistance

A modification of the earned income credit provides that the earned income credit is not treated as income for purposes of determining eligibility for Federal housing assistance programs.

Effective date

The provisions generally are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990, except that the provision concerning the treatment of the credit for housing assistance programs is effective for determinations made after December 31, 1989.

Subtitle J. Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) (secs. 6921-6923 of the bill and secs. 219 and 72(t) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, the maximum deductible contribution than can be made to an individual retirement account (IRA) is generally the lesser of $2,000 or 100 percent of an individual's compensation. Individuals who are not active participants in an employer-sponsored retirement plan, single taxpayers with adjusted gross income (AGI) of less than $25,000, and married taxpayers with AGI of less than $40,000, may make the maximum deductible contribution. For taxpayers who are active participants in employer-sponsored retirement plans, the IRA deduction is phased out for single taxpayers with AGI between $25,000 and $35,000, and for married taxpayers with AGI between $40,000 and $50,000.

Taxpayers who are not entitled to the maximum IRA deduction may make nondeductible contributions to IRAs. As is the case with earnings on deductible IRA contributions, earnings on nondeductible contributions accumulate on a tax-deferred basis.

Amounts withdrawn from IRAs (other than nondeductible contributions) are includible in income when withdrawn. Early withdrawals, e.g., withdrawals prior to age 59½, death, or disability, are generally subject to an additional 10-percent income tax (sec. 72(t)).

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned about the national rate of personal savings, and believes that individuals should be encouraged to save. The committee believes that the ability to make deductible contributions to an IRA is a significant savings incentive. Under present law, however, this incentive is not available to all taxpayers. Further, the present-law income thresholds for IRA deductions are not indexed for inflation, so that fewer Americans will be eligible to make a deductible IRA contribution each year.

The committee believes it is appropriate to encourage individual savings by making an IRA deduction available to all taxpayers. Expanding the IRA deduction will provide all Americans with a meaningful incentive to save for their retirement years.

The committee is also concerned that Americans are not saving enough to ensure that their children will be able to afford a college education. College costs have risen dramatically in recent years. The ability to obtain a college education is an important factor in ensuring that the United States remains competitive with other nations. Housing costs have also increased, reducing the ability of many to purchase a home. Accordingly, the committee believes that there should be appropriate incentives to save for education and home ownership, and that taxpayers should be able to use without penalty amounts saved in an IRA for such purposes.

In general

The deductibility of an individual's contributions to an IRA is expanded under the provision. In general, the provision permits a deduction of one-half of the otherwise nondeductible portion of the contribution made by an individual. The provision also allows withdrawals from an IRA without imposition of the additional 10-percent income tax to the extent the amount withdrawn is used for either the purchase of a first home or certain education expenses.

Expansion of present-law deduction rules

Under the provision, an individual who contributes to an IRA may deduct the amount of the contribution that is deductible under present law, plus 50 percent of the contribution that is not deductible under present law. This additional 50-percent deduction is only allowed with respect to contributions that would otherwise have been deductible but for the active participant rule. The present-law maximum dollar limitation ($2,000) and other limitations relating to deductibility (e.g., the requirement that the IRA owner be under the age of 70½) continue to apply.

For example, assume that the combined AGI of a married taxpayer and the taxpayer's spouse is $45,000, and that the individual is an active participant in an employer-sponsored retirement plan. Assume further that the taxpayer makes a $2,000 contribution to an IRA. Under the present-law active participant rule, the taxpayer may deduct $1,000 of the contribution. Under the provision, the taxpayer may deduct $1,500, that is, the amount deductible under present law ($1,000), plus one-half of the amount of the contribution that is not presently deductible

[1] This provision is substantially the same as the provisions of S. 1678, The Savings and Investment Incentive Act of 1989, which was introduced on September 27, 1989, by Senator Bentsen and others.

($500). Alternatively, if the same taxpayer made a contribution of only $1,500, then the taxpayer could deduct $1,250 [$1,000 + (.50 X $500)].

The provision also provides that interest on loans the proceeds of which are directly traceable to an IRA contribution is nondeductible.

Withdrawals by First-Time Homebuyers

Under the provision, withdrawals by first-time homebuyers that are used within 60 days to acquire, construct, or reconstruct the taxpayer's principal residence are not subject to the 10-percent additional income tax. A first-time homebuyer is an individual who has not had an ownership interest in a principal residence during the 2-year period ending on the date of acquisition of the principal residence to which the withdrawal relates. The date of acquisition is the date the individual enters into a contract to purchase a principal residence or begins construction or reconstruction of such a residence. The provision requires that the spouse of the taxpayer is also required to meet this requirement as of the date of acquisition. Principal residence is defined as under the provisions relating to the rollover of gain on the sale of a principal residence (sec. 1034).

Any amount withdrawn from an IRA for the purchase of a principal residence is to be used within 60 days of the date of withdrawal. The 10-percent additional income tax is imposed with respect to any amount not so used. However, if the 60-day rule cannot be satisfied due to a delay in the acquisition of the residence, the taxpayer may recontribute to an IRA all or part of the amount withdrawn prior to the end of the 60-day period. Any amount recontributed is generally treated as a rollover contribution (sec. 408(d)), except that the frequency limitation on rollovers between IRAs does not apply.

Rules relating to expenses for education

Under the provision, withdrawals used by a taxpayer during the year for qualified higher education expenses for the year are not subject to the 10-percent additional income tax. Qualified higher education expenses are tuition and fees paid to an eligible educational institution, books, supplies, and equipment required for courses at an eligible educational institution. Amounts withdrawn may be used for education currently provided to the taxpayer, or the taxpayer's spouse, dependents, or grandchildren. For example, amounts withdrawn may not be used to pay outstanding student loans without imposition of the additional tax.

The amount that may be withdrawn for educational expenses for a taxable year without imposition of the additional 10-percent income tax is reduced by any amount that is excludable from the taxable income of the taxpayer under the provisions relating to educational savings bonds. Of course, no amount may be withdrawn to the extent that the expenses have been provided or reimbursed by the employer of the taxpayer.

Effective date

The expansion of the deduction provisions is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990. The provisions relating to the exceptions to the 10-percent additional income tax apply to distributions after December 31, 1989, in taxable years ending after such date. The provision relating to interest on funds borrowed to make IRA contributions is effective for debt incurred after the date of enactment, in taxable years ending after such date.

Subtitle K. Amendments to the Financial Institutions Reform, Recover, and Enforcement Act of 1989

1. TREATMENT OF TRANSACTIONS IN WHICH FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE PROVIDED (SEC. 6931 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 597(B)(2) OF THE CODE)

Present law

Under present law, in the case of transactions other than taxable asset acquisitions, the Treasury Department has the regulatory authority to provide for the proper treatment of Federal financial assistance and appropriate adjustments to basis or other tax attributes to reflect such treatment.

Reasons for change

The committee wishes to clarify that it was not intended that the Treasury Department's regulatory authority to provide for appropriate adjustments to basis or other tax attributes be limited to adjustments which directly reflect the proper tax treatment of Federal financial assistance.

Explanation of provision

The provision clarifies that, in the case of transactions other than taxable asset acquisitions, the Treasury Department has the regulatory authority to prescribe rules for appropriate adjustments to basis or other tax attributes to properly take into account collateral tax effects of Federal financial assistance.

Effective date

The provision is effective as if included in the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989.

2. TAX-EXEMPT DEBT OF STATE HOUSING FINANCE AGENCIES (SEC. 6932 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 141 OF THE CODE AND NEW SEC. 145 OF THE CODE)

Present law

In general, interest on private activity bonds issued by State or local governments is taxable. Bonds, the proceeds of which are used directly or indirectly to make or finance loans to persons other than government units are private activity bonds. In contrast, interest on qualified private activity bonds (a subset of private activity bonds) is tax-exempt. There are a number of categories of qualified private activity bonds, including: (1) exempt facility bonds; (2) qualified mortgage revenue bonds; (3) qualified small issue bonds; (4) qualified student loan bonds; (5) qualified redevelopment bonds; and (6) qualified 501(c)(3) bonds. Qualified private activity bonds generally are subject to annual State volume caps of the larger of (1) $50 multiplied by the State population; or (2) $150 million.

State and local bonds issued to provide mortgages to finance the disposition of single family residences owned by a State housing finance agency are not qualified private activity bonds unless all provisions of Code section 143 relating to qualified mortgage revenue bonds are met. State and local bonds issued to provide mortgages to finance the disposition of residential rental projects owned by a State housing finance agency to a private business user are not qualified private activity bonds.

State and local bonds issued to purchase single family residences or multi-family rental housing could be considered arbitrage bonds (as defined in Code section 148(a)) to the extent the property purchased is investment property with a yield higher than that of the bonds issued.

Reasons for change

The committee believes the extension of the implicit subsidy of tax-exempt finance for the acquisition of residential properties from the Resolution Trust Corporation and other United States Government agencies would facilitate the purchase of these assets by State housing finance agencies. By encouraging a market in these residential properties, the committee believes receivership proceeds will be enhanced, reducing the ultimate cost of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989. Moreover, by providing for the tax-exempt financing of specified purchases of these residential properties from State housing finance agencies, the committee intends to make available additional affordable housing.

Explanation of provision

The provision creates exceptions to the private business use test, the private security or payment test, and the private loan financing test (all related to private activity bonds) for certain State housing finance agency bonds. A State housing finance agency bond issue would qualify for this exception if at least 95 percent of the proceeds were used to: (1) acquire single family residences or residential rental projects from the Resolution Trust Corporation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Housing Authority, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Federal National Mortgage Association, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, the Government National Mortgage Association, or any other agency of the United States Government; (2) issue mortgages to finance the disposition of single family residences acquired by a State housing finance agency from the above agencies to purchasers who meet the owner-occupancy requirements, the purchase price restrictions, and the family income restrictions of Code section 143 (related to qualified mortgage revenue bonds); or (3) finance the disposition of multi-family residential rental projects acquired by the State housing finance agency from the above agencies to private owners who would comply with the low-income targeting requirements of Code section 142(d). In all cases, all the dwellings being acquired or financed must be located within the jurisdiction of the State housing finance agency.

In order for these State housing finance agency bonds to be utilized as intended, the bonds are subject to the same restrictions as mortgage revenue bonds (Code section 147(h)(1)). However, the arbitrage restrictions, the State volume limitations, and all other requirements for tax-exempt private activity bonds continue to apply to these State housing finance agency bonds unless specifically exempted.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Income Security Provisions

NOTE.—Section 310(g) of the Congressional Budget Act provides that it is not in order to include in a reconciliation bill any recommendations concerning the social security programs of Old-age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance. However, based on action by the House of Representatives, it appears that the House will bring numerous issues relating to social security to the budget reconciliation conference. In order to permit a Senate position on social security issues to be developed and brought to conference, the Committee on Finance has included such issues in its reconciliation decisions. The Finance Committee's social security recommendations are described in this part of the report under the headings: "Social Security" and "Social Security and Supplemental Security Income." The legislative language to implement these recommendations is not, however, included in the materials submitted to the Budget Committee so as not to violate the prohibition in Section 310(g) of the Budget Act. It is the intention of the Committee on Finance to package these social security related provisions as a separate amendment which will be offered on the floor if the Senate chooses to waive the applicable points of order so as to permit those provisions to be included in the Senate reconciliation bill.

Social Security

SOCIAL SECURITY AS AN INDEPENDENT AGENCY

Present law.—Responsibility for administering the Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (OASDI) program is vested in the Secretary of Health and Human Services. The program is administered by the Social Security Administration, which is headed by a Commissioner appointed by the President. SSA also administers the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program.

Proposed change.—The proposal would establish the Social Security Administration as an independent agency with responsibility for the Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance program, and for the Supplemental Security Income program.

There would be a 9-member part-time Advisory Board appointed for 6-year terms as follows: 5 appointed by the President (no more than 3 from the same political party), 2 each (no more than 1 from the same political party) by the Speaker of the House (in consultation with the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee on Ways and Means) and the President pro tempore of the Senate (in consultation with the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee on Finance). Presidential appointees would be subject to Senate confirmation. They would serve staggered terms. The chairman would be appointed by the President.

The Board would generally be responsible for giving advice on policies and operational issues. It would have authority to hire its own staff.

Specific functions of the Board would include: making recommendations as to the most effective methods of providing economic security through social security and supplemental security income; making recommendations relating to the coordination of such programs with other programs providing economic and health security; making an independent assessment of the annual report of the Board of Trustees and advising the President and the Congress on the implications of the assessment; recommending to the President names to consider in selecting his nominee for the positions of Social Security Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner; reviewing and assessing the quality of service that the agency provides to the public; assessing annually the state of the agency's computer technology; reviewing and assessing the agency's progress in developing needed management improvements; increasing public understanding of the social security system; reviewing the development and implementation of a long-range research and program evaluation plan for the agency; reviewing and assessing any major studies of social security; and conducting such other reviews and assessments as may be appropriate.

The agency would be headed by a Commissioner appointed by the President for a 4-year term coinciding with the term of the President, and subject to confirmation by the Senate. The Commissioner would be compensated at the rate for level I of the Executive Schedule (equivalent to Cabinet officer pay). The Commissioner would be selected on the basis of proven competence as a manager, and would be responsible for the exercise of all powers and the discharge of all duties of the Social Security Administration, have authority and control over all personnel and activities of the agency, and serve as a member of the Board of Trustees.

The President would also appoint a Deputy Commissioner, who would be subject to Senate confirmation.

Other positions established within the agency (and appointed by the Commissioner) include: a Beneficiary Ombudsman to sponsor and support beneficiary interests, a Solicitor of Social Security to provide legal advice to the Commissioner and to manage the agency's litigation workload, and a Chief Administrative Law Judge. An independent panel would nominate candidates for the position of Chief Administrative Law Judge. In addition, there would be an Inspector General appointed in accordance with the Inspector General Act.

The Commissioner (jointly with the Director of the Office of Personnel Management and the Administrator of General Services, as appropriate) would be directed to carry out demonstration projects under which the Commissioner would be able to appoint computer specialists and other professional and technical specialists without regard to the civil service classification system; perform functions relating to recruitment and examination programs for entry level employees and classification and pay range for pay ranges for identified job categories; establish higher compensation levels for geographic areas where there is difficulty in recruiting and retaining qualified employees; exercise authority relating to the acquisition, operation, and maintenance of facilities; and exercise authority relating to leasing, purchasing, or maintaining automated data processing equipment. The demonstration projects would last for a period of six years.

The Director of OPM would be directed to authorize for the Social Security Administration a substantially greater number of Senior Executive Service positions than were authorized on the date of enactment.

Appropriations requests for staffing and personnel of the Administration would be based upon a comprehensive work force plan, as determined by the Commissioner.

The Social Security Commissioner would be directed to consult on an on-going basis with the Secretary of Health and Human Services to assure (1) the coordination of the Social Security and Medicare programs and (2) that adequate information concerning Medicare benefits will be available to the public.

Rules, regulations, determinations, contracts, collective bargaining agreements, recognitions of labor organizations, and licenses in effect under the authority of the Secretary of Health and Human Services would continue under the authority of the independent agency until modified or terminated in accordance with law. The Committee directs SSA management to consult with organizations of supervisors and managers in the field on a regular basis.

INCREASE THE RETIREMENT TEST

Present law.—The primary purpose of the social security program is to provide an income for older individuals who are retired. As a way of determining whether an individual is retired, the program looks at the individual's age and earnings. Those age 70 or above are automatically considered retired and get full benefits without regard to earnings. Those under age 70 are considered retired and eligible for full benefits only if their earnings are lower than a specified exemption level. In 1990, the exemption level for retirees age 65 to 69 is now estimated to be $9,360. Above that level, individuals will have their social security benefits phased out on the basis of a $1 reduction in benefits for every $3 of earnings.

Proposed change.—The proposal would increase the amount of earnings totally exempt from reduction under the retirement test for individuals age 65 to 69 to $11,700 in 1990 and to $14,520 in 1991—an increase of roughly $5,000 over present law. In addition, starting in 1991, the proposal would lower the rate of reduction on earnings for an additional $5,000 above that exempt amount. For earnings between $14,520 and $19,520, the reduction rate under the retirement test would be 25 percent in place of the current law rate of 33⅓ percent which would continue to apply to earnings above that level.

TREATMENT OF DEFERRED COMPENSATION

Present law.—The "contribution and benefit base" is the amount of annual earnings for each individual that is subject to social security taxes and countable towards benefit eligibility. Each year, this base is indexed to take into account the growth in wages covered by the social security system. This indexing factor also is applied to increasing several benefit determination factors, and in particular the so-called bend points of the formula for determining initial benefit eligibility. For the past several years, however, certain types of deferred compensation (e.g. 401(k) contributions) have not been included in measuring wage growth because of the way in which these items are reported on W-2 forms even though these wage payments are in fact subject to social security tax and therefore a part of "covered wages". This exclusion has slowed the growth of the wage indexing series used to increase the base.

Proposed change.—Effective for the 1990 determination of the tax and benefit base, the amount of that base would be increased by an additional 2% ($900) to take into account the past failure to include the deferred compensation payments. For subsequent years, deferred compensation would be factored into the indexing for both the base and the various affected benefit elements. Benefit factor increases would first be increased in 1993. The 1990 increase would not be used to raise the benefit factors; instead the funds generated would be used to offset the retirement test increase described above.

EARNINGS AND BENEFIT STATEMENTS

Present law.—There is no statutory requirement that the Social Security Administration provide individuals with earnings and benefit statements. Upon request, SSA currently will provide an individual with such a statement.

Proposed change.—When fully effective in 1999, the proposal would require that biennial earnings and benefit statements be sent to all those who have paid social security taxes. These statements would show what they have contributed to the social security program, estimate their future benefits at retirement (or at least describe those benefits in the case of persons under age 50), and describe the benefits that will be provided by Medicare. In the short run, the proposal would require that such statements be provided when requested and, starting in 1995, that they be provided to all individuals age 60 and above.

CHILD ADOPTED AFTER PARENT'S ENTITLEMENT TO BENEFITS

Present law.—Minor and disabled children of individuals who had paid social security taxes may qualify for benefits when those individuals die, become disabled, or retire in old age. In the case of natural children, these benefits are paid without regard to whether the child was born before or after the indivual retired or became disabled. In the case of adoptive children, however, the law requires that the child must have been adopted before the individual became eligible for disability or retirement benefits (or, at least, must have been dependent on the individual at that time.)

Proposed change.—A minor child adopted after a worker becomes entitled to retirement or disability benefits would be eligible for child's insurance benefits regardless of whether he or she was living with and dependent on the worker prior to the worker's entitlement.

CONTINUATION OF DISABILITY BENEFITS PENDING APPEAL

Present law.— A disability insurance beneficiary who is determined to be no longer disabled may appeal the determination through three levels of appeal: a reconsideration by the State Disability Determination Service; a hearing before an SSA administrative law judge (ALJ); and a review by the Appeal Council.

The beneficiary has the option of requesting that benefits be continued through the ALJ level of appeal. If the earlier unfavorable determinations are upheld by the ALJ, the benefits paid during the period of appeal are considered overpayments and are subject to recovery by the agency. (If an appeal is made in good faith, benefit repayment may be waived.) Medicare eligibility also continues, but Medicare benefits are not subject to recovery.

This option was originally enacted in 1983, and was accompanied by a requirement that the Secretary of HHS conduct a study of its impact on the OASDI trust funds and on appeals to ALJs. This report has not yet been completed. The Congress has extended the option several times, most recently in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988. The latest extension authorized the payment of benefits pending appeal of termination decisions made on or before December 31, 1989. Payments may continue through June 30, 1990.

Proposed change.—The period in which disability benefits may be paid, and Medicare eligibility continued, while an appeal is pending (through the ALJ level) would be extended for one additional year. Upon application by the beneficiary benefits would be paid while an appeal is in progress with respect to unfavorable determinations made on or before December 31, 1990, and would be continued through June 1991 (i.e., through the July 1991 check).

CONSOLIDATION OF OLD COMPUTATION METHODS

Present law.—The rules for computing the initial benefit amount payable to social security claimants have been changed many times since the program was enacted in the 1930's. In adopting new computation rules, Congress frequently allowed continued use of the old rules for individuals who would benefit from them. There are now a number of computation methods, particularly those that were established before 1965, that continue to apply to very small numbers of people. These computations have largely phased out for workers coming on the rolls, and new claims are from the relatively few remaining eligible survivors. These old computation methods currently require manual computation.

Proposed change.—All of the remaining initial computation methods that currently require manual intervention would be eliminated and consolidated. Any retired workers whose benefits are computed under one of these old computation methods and who are still working would have their benefits recomputed under a newer computation method.

LIMITATION ON NEW ENTITLEMENT TO SPECIAL AGE-72 PAYMENTS

Present law.—Special age 72 benefits (so-called "Prouty benefits" after Senator Winston Prouty of Vermont) were enacted in 1966 to provide some payment to individuals who, when the program began or when coverage was extended to their jobs, were too old to earn enough quarters of coverage to become fully insured. When enacted in 1966, it was expected that new entitlement under this provision would not be possible for anyone reaching age 72 after 1971. This is because individuals age 72 after 1971 who met the quarters-of-coverage requirements for Prouty benefits also would have the amount of the Prouty benefits was less than the amount of the minimum benefit payable at age 62. However, due to subsequent changes in the law, it is now theoretically possible for certain people who will reach age 72 after 1990 and who receive the frozen minimum benefit (due to a change in the law in 1977) or who receive less than the minimum benefit (due to its elimination in 1982) to become newly eligible for Prouty benefits.

Proposed change.—The proposal would include the unintended payment of Prouty benefits (due to the interaction of the Prouty benefit provision with subsequent changes in the law affecting the minimum benefit) by providing that Prouty benefits would not be payable to any individual reaching age 72 after 1971. This change would not affect any current beneficiaries.

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO PRESCRIBE MAGNETIC MEDIA REPORTING REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO PAYROLL AGENTS

Present law.—Section 6011(e)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code directs the Secretary of Treasury to prescribe regulations providing standards for determining which returns must be filed on magnetic media or in other machine-readable form. Pursuant to this authority, the Secretary has issued regulations that require employers having 250 or more employees to file returns on magnetic media. the Secretary's regulatory authority does not extend to payroll agents who are engaged in the business of preparing payroll data or filing returns for employers. As a result, high volume payroll agents need not file on magnetic media returns prepared on behalf of employers eligible for the low volume exception.

Proposed change.—The Secretary's authority to set magnetic media reporting standards would be extended to payroll agents of employers.

ELIMINATION OF ADVANCED CREDITING TO THE TRUST FUNDS OF SOCIAL SECURITY PAYROLL TAXES

Present law.—The Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Disability Insurance Trust Fund are credited by the Treasury Department on an advance basis at the beginning of each month with estimated revenues from social security payroll taxes for the entire month. This advance crediting provision was enacted as part of the Social Security Amendments of 1983, and was designed to help address the problem of the solvency of the trust funds which at that time had very low reserves. Combined trust fund assets at the end of 1989 are projected to be equivalent to 66 percent of 1990 outgo, and this "contingency ratio" is projected to grow rapidly in future years.

Proposed change.—Social security taxes would be credited to the trust funds periodically during a month as they are received.

TRIAL WORK PERIOD DURING ROLLING 5-YEAR PERIOD FOR ALL DISABLED BENEFICIARIES

Present law.—Under present law, disability beneficiaries who are still disabled but who want to return to work despite their disabling condition are entitled to a 9-month trial work period. (The months need not be consecutive.) During this period disabled beneficiaries may test their ability to work without affecting their entitlement to disability benefits. Any work and earnings are disregarded in determining whether the beneficiary's disability has ceased.

Only one trial work period is allowed in any one period of disability. In addition, an individual who is entitled to disabled worker's benefits for wihch he has qualified without serving a waiting period (i.e., the worker was previously entitled to disabled worker's benefits within 5 years before the month he again becomes disabled), is not entitled to a trial work period.

Proposed change.—All beneficiaries would be given an opportunity to test their capacity to engage in substantial gainful activity over a sustained period of time before their benefits would be stopped by providing that a disabled beneficiary would exhaust his 9-month trial work period only if he performed services in any 9 months within a rolling 60-month period, and repealing the provision which precludes a reentitled disabled worker from being eligible for a trial work period.

EXTENSION OF DISABILITY INSURANCE PROGRAM DEMONSTRATION PROJECT AUTHORITY

Present law.—Section 505(a) of the Social Security Disability Amendments of 1980 (P.L. 96-265), as extended by the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (P.L. 99-272), authorizes the Secretary to waive compliance with the benefit requirements of titles II and XVIII for the purpose of conducting work incentive demonstration projects to encourage beneficiaries to return to work. This authority will expire June 10, 1990.

Proposed change.—The work incentive demonstration project authority would be extended for three years, through June 10, 1993.

SUSPENSION OF AUXILIARY BENEFITS WHEN THE WORKER IS IN AN EXTENDED PERIOD OF ELIGIBILITY

Present law.—Present law provides a 36-month extended period of eligibility to an individual entitled to disability benefits who completes a 9-month trial work period but who continues to have a disabling impairment. During this period, a disabled worker who engages in substantial gainful activity in any month (i.e., earns $300 or more, or, beginning January 1990, $500 or more) retains eligibility for medicare benefits, but no cash benefits are payable for that month.

Proposed change.—Language would be added to clarify that no monthly cash benefits are payable to auxiliary beneficiaries in any month in which the disabled individual is in an extended period of eligibility and does not receive benefits because he is performing substantial gainful activity. This is current administration practice.

AUTHORITY TO AMEND WAGE RECORDS AFTER EXPIRATION OF TIME LIMITATION

Present law.—The Secretary is required to establish and maintain records of workers' wages and self-employment income. Errors in these records may be corrected at any time up to 3 years, 3 months, and 15 days after the year in which the earnings occurred. after this time, various revisions may be made including ones in which an employer neglected to report covered wages. However, no revision is permitted where an employer misreported the amount of the earnings.

Proposed change.—The current list of revisions to earnings records that may be made after 3 years, 3 months, and 15 days from the year of the earnings would be expanded to permit the record to be changed where an entry for an employer is present but incorrect.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME

REPRESENTATIVE PAYEE REFORMS

Present law.—When it appears to the Secretary that the interest of an applicant entitled to social security benefits would be served thereby, the Secretary may certify payment either to the individual or to a relative or some other person (representative payee). If certification of payment is made to a person other than the individual entitled to the payment, such certification must be made on the basis of an investigation, carried out either prior to such certification or within 45 days after certification, and on the basis of adequate evidence that the certification is in the interest of the individual. The Secretary is required to ensure that all such certification are adequately reviewed.

The Secretary is also required to establish a system of accountability monitoring in cases involving a representative payee whereby the representative payee reports not less often than annually with respect to the use of the payments. The Secretary is required to establish and implement statistically valid procedures for reviewing these reports in order to identify instances in which representative payees are not properly using the payments. The requirement for annual reporting does not apply to a parent or spouse who lives in the same household as the beneficiary.

Similar provisions apply with respect to individuals who apply for SSI benefits.

An individual or entity convicted of a felony under sections 208 or 1632 of the Social Security Act may not be certified as representatives payee.

Proposed change.—Present law requirements relating to representative payees would be expanded and modified as follows:

The Secretary's determination that it is in the interest of a beneficiary to have payments made to a representative payee would have to be in writing.

The present law requirement that certification for payment to a representative payee be made on the basis of adequate evidence that the certification is in the interest of the individual would be modified to require substantial evidence, with the additional stipulation that priority be given to the immediate needs of the individual. In addition, the Secretary would be required to promulgate regulations to encourage, where appropriate, face-to-face contact with the representative payee and the beneficiary. The Secretary would also be required to develop and promulgate, through regulations, procedures to implement the investigatgion including (1) verification of the identity, including at least the social security account number, of any individual who applies to be a representative payee; (2) a determination insofar as feasible of whether the individual has been convicted of a felony under the Social Security Act or under any other Federal or State law; and (3) a determination, based on the Secretary's records, of whether the services of the individual as a representative payee have previously been terminated or suspended.

The amendment would prohibit the payment of large lump-sum retroactive benefits to a new representative payee until the investigation of the payee has been completed.

Effective March 1, 1991, the amendment would also require the Secretary to have in place a centralized, current file of the address and social security account number of each representative payee, the address and social security account number of each beneficiary for whom a representative payee is providing services, and the name and social security account number of each person who has been convicted of a felony under the Social Security Act or whose services have been previously terminated by the Secretary. On a demonstration basis, the Secretary would be required to correlate information in the file to determine whether multiple beneficiaries reside at the same address and, if so, upon request, would transmit this information to the agency or agencies of a State which are primarily responsible for regulating care facilities, providing for protective services, or serving as long-term care ombudsmen.

The Secretary would be required to provide to each beneficiary (other than a child living with his parents), and each person authorized to act on behalf of an individual who is legally incompetent or is a minor, a formal notice of the initial determination of the need for a representative payee. This notice must be provided in advance of any benefits being paid to a representative payee.

An individual who is a creditor of a beneficiary would be precluded from serving as the beneficiary's representative payee except under certain conditions.

The Secretary would be required to make good faith efforts to locate a suitable representative payee for each beneficiary for whom a suitable payee cannot readily be found. All local social security offices must have available a current list of local public and nonprofit community-based social services agencies that provide services as a representative payee.

If an individual (who has not been adjudged legally incompetent) is being paid benefits directly, the Secretary must continue to make direct payments until he completes his determination concerning the ability of the beneficiary to manage his benefits, and concerning the selection of the representative payee.

If an individual is newly eligible for benefits and it is determined that a representative payee is necessary, the Secretary must pay the individual directly until he has completed his investigation of and has selected the representative payee, or until such time as the individual has exhausted appeal rights. This requirement does not apply in the case of lump sum payments, or to a beneficiary who is likely to suffer substantial harm if payments are made directly, or who is eligible on the basis of disability and is medically determined to be a drug addict or alcoholic.

A representative payee must be terminated or suspended if the Secretary or a court of law determines that the payee acted in violation of representative payee requirements or has otherwise not acted in the best interest of the beneficiary for whom he was authorized to perform such services, or has misused an individual's benefits.

Failure of the Secretary to investigate or monitor a representative payee that results in misused benefits would constitute an underpayment of benefits and the Secretary would be required to make repayment to the beneficiary.

In addition, in the case of termination of representative payee services based on misuse of benefits by a representative payee, the Secretary would be required to make a good faith effort to obtain restitution of misused funds.

Present law requirements with respect to monitoring representative payees would be amended to require the Secretary to provide for increased monitoring for certain categories of high-risk representative payees.

SSA would be directed to prescribe by regulation reasonable maximum fees which may be charged to an individual by a qualified organization for expenses incurred in providing services performed by the organization as the individual's representative payee. The GAO would be directed to conduct a study of the advantages and disadvantages of allowing qualified organizations that charge fees to serve as representative payees services to individuals who receive social security and SSI benefits, and to report its findings to the Ways and Means Committee in the House and the Committee on Finance in the Senate no later than January 1, 1992.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in collaboration with the Department of Veterans Affairs, would be required to conduct a study of the feasibility of the Department assuming lead responsibility for those individuals receiving benefits under both the Department and SSA. Among the issues to be addressed would be the need for the Department to conduct a criminal background check of the individual selected to serve as a beneficiary's fiduciary and the development of a formal channel of communication between the Department and SSA to ensure that SSA was apprised upon termination of any veteran's benefits. Upon termination of such benefits, SSA would be required to initiate or resume oversight responsibility.

In addition, the study would determine the Department's ability to annually provide to the Congress a report containing information on the number of cases in which a change in the fiduciary was required and the reason for the change; the number of cases in which misuse of beneficiary funds was discovered and the disposition of such cases, including the penalties imposed, whether the fiduciary was handling the funds of other beneficiaries, an whether those beneficiaries resided at the same address.

CONTINUATION OF BENEFITS ON ACCOUNT OF PARTICIPATION IN A NON-STATE VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION PROGRAM

Present Law.—Social Security or supplemental security income benefits based on disability or blindness to a beneficiary who has medically recovered may not be terminated or suspended because the disability or blindness has ceased if (1) the individual is particiapting in an approved State vocational rehabilitation program, and (2) the Commissioner of Social Security determines that completion of the program, or its continuation for a specified period of time, will increase the likelihood that the individual may be permanently removed from the disability or blindness benefit rolls. The Disability Advisory Council has recommended that the same benefit continuation provisions should be extended to beneficiaries who medically recover while participating in other approved vocational rehabilitation programs.

Proposed change.—The proposal would adopt the recommendation of the Disability Advisory Council to provide that those DI or SSI beneficiaries who medically recover while participating in an approved non-State vocational rehabilitation program would have the same benefit continuation rights as those who medically recover while participating in a State vocational rehabilitation program.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS RELATING TO ACCOUNTABILITY FOR TELEPHONE SERVICE CENTER COMMUNICATIONS

Present law.—SSA currently operates 37 teleservice centers (TSCs) that respond to inquiries from the public. In addition to providing general program information, these TSCs can schedule appointments at local offices and provide individual service, including discussing an individual's eligibility and taking specific actions regarding the individual's benefits. In recent years SSA has attempted to increase the amount of services and actions handled over the telephone by implementing a toll-free 800 number and reallocating staff resources to telephone service workstations, and by promoting its telephone service abilities with the public. Approximately 60 percent of the beneficiary population is currently covered by the new 800 number system. As the other 40 percent—who now use telephone service directly to local offices—are phased into the new nationwide system, local office numbers will no longer be listed in phone books and calls through them will be diverted to the 800 number system. In addition, non-listed local office numbers will be changed or dropped in the future thereby curtailing or eliminating other telephone channels the public has with local offices.

Proposed change.—The Secretary would be required to carry out demonstration projects testing a set of accountability procedures in at least 3 teleservice centers. Callers who provide adequate identifying information would be provided with written confirmation of the date and nature of their calls, including the name of the employee with whom they spoke, a description of any action the employee said would be taken, and any advice the caller was given. Routine communications would be excluded.

The Secretary would be required to report to the Committees on Ways and Means and Finance on these demonstrations, including costs and benefits, difficulties encountered, and an assessment of the feasibility of implementing the procedures nationally.

STANDARDS APPLICABLE IN CERTAIN DETERMINATIONS OF GOOD CAUSE, FAULT, AND GOOD FAITH

Present law

Good cause.—A Social Security beneficiary who (i) works for more than 45 hours during a month in noncovered employment outside the U.S., (ii) ceases to have a child in care, or (iii) has earnings in excess of the annual exempt amount under the earnings test, is subject to a penalty for failure to report these facts to SSA. However, if the individual can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Secretary that he or she has good cause for failing to make a timely report, the penalty is waived. In addition, disability benefits are terminated when a beneficiary fails, without good cause, to cooperate with the Secretary in reviewing his or her entitlement or in following a treatment which is expected to restore his or her ability to work.

Fault.—The Secretary may waive overpayments to beneficiaries in cases where the individual is without fault and recovery would defeat the purposes of the program or would be against "equity and good conscience". SSA regulations state that in determining whether an individual was without fault, consideration will be given to the individual's age, intelligence, education, and physical and mental capabilities.

Good faith.—A beneficiary receiving benefits based on disability whom the Secretary determines is no longer disabled has the option of having his or her benefits continued through a hearing before an Administrative Law Judge (ALJ). Benefits paid during this period are considered overpayments. If the beneficiary acted in good faith in pursuing the appeal, repayment can be waived. SSA regulations establish a presumption that appeals are made in good faith unless the beneficiary fails to cooperate with the agency during the appeal.

Proposed change.—In making specified determinations of good cause, fault and good faith, the Secretary would be required to take into account any physical, mental, educational, or linguistic limitations that the individual has. This requirement would apply to the following situations: (1) when an individual is without fault in causing an overpayment; (2) when an individual has acted in good faith in appealing a termination of his disability benefits; (3) when there is good cause for failing to timely report certain information affecting eligibility for benefits; and (4) when there is good cause for failure to participate in a reassessment of an individual's disability entitlement or in a treatment program.

ASSISTANCE TO THE HOMELESS

Present law.—SSA has participated in projects designed to assist the homeless in qualifying for Social Security or SSI benefits. No provision exists expressly delineating responsibilities for SSA with regard to enrolling potentially eligible homeless people.

Proposed change.—The Secretary would be required to establish a program to identify homeless individuals who may be eligible for Social Security or SSI benefits and to provide reasonable assistance to them in making application. The Secretary's program would include efforts (coordinated with State or local government or nonprofit organizations) to facilitate and enourage application by homeless individuals for Social Security and Supplemental Security Income benefits.

NOTICE REQUIREMENTS

Present law.—The Secretary must use understandable language in notifying individuals of a denial of disability benefits. The law is silent regarding the language of other notices.

Blind SSI applicants and recipients may opt to be informed by telephone of a decision or action affecting them within 5 days of the mailing of written notices of such action, to have such notices sent by certified mail, or to receive them through some other means established by the Secretary. These options are not available to blind Social Security applicants and recipients.

Proposed change.—With regard to notices about Social Security and SSI benefits, the Secretary would be required to use clear and simple language and to include information on how to contact the appropriate local social security office (including providing a telephone number) in notices generated by local and central SSA offices.

With regard to the blind, the notification options currently available to SSI applicants and recipients would be extended to Social Security applicants and recipients.

REPRESENTATION OF CLAIMANTS

Present law.—Social Security and SSI claimants and beneficiaries may use attorneys and legal assistance representatives in pursuit of their claims and in taking other action before the agency. The Secretary, however, is not required to advise them of options regarding their possible use of attorneys and legal aid representatives. When a claimant or beneficiary decides to use one, SSA requires the individual to sign a form designating an attorney or other person as his or her representative. The hard copy form then becomes the record of authorization for all subsequent dealings between the agency and the representative. SSA is under no legal requirement to maintain an automated list of attorneys and legal aid representatives who have this written authorization to assist claimants and beneficiaries with their cases before the agency.

Proposed change.—The Secretary would be required to maintain an up-to-date electronic record, accessible to SSA field offices through the agency's computer system, of the identities of legal representatives of all Social Security and SSI claimants. In addition, the Secretary would be required to include in benefit denial notices information on options for obtaining attorneys to represent the individual's interests before the agency. Such notices also would include information about the availability of legal services organizations that provide assistance free of charge to qualified claimants.

APPLICABILITY OF ADMINISTRATIVE RES JUDICATA; RELATED NOTICE REQUIREMENTS

Present law.—If a claimant for Social Security disability benefits successfully appeals an adverse determination by the Secretary, benefits may be paid retroactively for up to 12 months prior to the date of the original application. If, however, instead of appealing, the claimant reapplies and is subsequently found to be disabled as of the date originally alleged, there are circumstances where retroactive benefits would be limited to 12 months from the date of the subsequent application (rather than the date of the first). This occurs when SSA determines that it cannot reopen the original decision under its "reopening rules". (SSA's administrative policy permits a case to be reopened within 12 months of an initial determination for any reason; and within 4 years (2 years for SSI claims) if there is new and material evidence or the original evidence clearly shows on its face that an error was made in the original decision.)

A reapplication in lieu of an appeal also could result in an outright denial of Social Security benefits without even considering an individual's medical evidence. This occurs when (i) the claimant's insured status ran out before the date of the original denial or the recency of work test cannot be satisfied since then, and (ii) there is no new and material evidence and no facts or issues that were not considered in making the prior decision. In this latter situation, SSA applies the legal principle of res judicata to deny the subsequent claim. Under this principle—the use of which is prescribed by SSA regulations—SSA will not consider the same claim over and over again.

Prior to May, 1989, SSA's standard denial notice informed claimants that they could reapply at any time, but did not explain the potential adverse consequences of reapplying versus appealing a denial. A May, 1989 modification to notices informs claimants that reapplying may result in a loss of benefits, but does not mention the possibility of their becoming totally ineligible.

Proposed change.—When an individual can demonstrate that he or she failed to appeal an adverse decision because of reliance on incorrect, incomplete, or misleading information provided by SSA, his or her failure to appeal could not serve as the basis for denial by the Secretary of a second application for such benefits for any period. The Secretary also would be required to include in all notices of denial, a clear, simple description of the effect on possible entitlement to benefits of reapplying rather than making an appeal. This provision will apply to adverse decisions made on or after September 1, 1990.

AUTHORITY FOR SECRETARY TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT MISINFORMATION PROVIDED TO APPLICANT IN DETERMINING DATE OF APPLICATION

Present law.—By regulation, if an individual expresses his intention to file for Social Security or SSI benefits in a telephone call to SSA, the SSA representative is required to establish a "protective application" at the time of the call. This procedure enables an applicant to establish the date of the call as the filing date if the applicant subsequently qualifies for benefits. If the individual does not express his or her intention to file for benefits, a "protective filing date" is not assigned, even if failure to express such interest is caused by misinformation communicated in the call by the SSA representative.

Proposed change.—When an individual can demonstrate to the Secretary's satisfaction that he or she failed to file for Social Security benefits as a result of misinformation provided after December 1982 concerning eligibility provided by SSA, the individual would be deemed to have applied on the later of (i) the date the incorrect information was provided, or (ii) the date the individual met all the requirements for entitlement. The amendment would apply with respect to benefits for months after December 1982 based on written requests filed on or after the date of enactment. A similar provision would apply to SSI benefits on a prospective basis.

SAME DAY PERSONAL INTERVIEWS AT SSA FIELD OFFICE

Present law.—Nothing in current law requires SSA offices to respond promptly to individuals who visit them on matters of personal urgency or under time deadlines imposed by the agency.

Proposed change.—When an individual visits a field office during normal business hours, SSA would be directed, whenever possible, to provide the individual with a face-to-face interview with an SSA employee before the close of the business day. In the case of an individual who visits an office in response to a time-limited notice for action sent by SSA or because his or her Social Security or SSI check was lost, stolen, or not received, the Secretary would be required to assure that the individual receives a face-to-face interview with an SSA employee before the close of the business day.

SOCIAL SECURITY ATTORNEYS' FEES

Present law.—When Social Security and SSI claimants represented by an attorney in pursuing an appeal of an unfavorable decision before the agency, the attorney must have his fee approved by the Social Security Administration. If the fee is approved, the agency directly makes payment to the attorney out of any past due Social Security benefits (but not more than 25 percent of the past due benefits). Direct fee payments are not made out of past-due SSI benefits.

Proposed change.—Under the proposal there would be no review by the Social Security Administration of attorneys' fees agreed upon by the attorney and the claimant which do not exceed 25 percent of past due (or interim) benefits unless the fee totals more than $3,000 or a review is requested by the claimant or the administrative law judge who heard the appeal on the basis that the claimant was inadequately represented or that the fee is excessive in light of the services rendered. Attorneys could also ask for a review if they believe a higher fee should be set. The Secretary would have authority to increase the $3,000 limit.

In the case of individuals who are concurrently entitled to both Social Security and SSI benefits, the Secretary would be directed to reduce the amount of the Social Security benefit by the amount payable to the attorney before reimbursing a State for any assistance payments it may have made to the individual.

SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME

COMMISSION ON CHILD DISABILITY

Present law.—The Social Security Act definition requires that in order to qualify for Disability Insurance benefits an individual must be unable to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of a medically determinable physical or mental impairment that has lasted, or is expected to last, at least 12 months, or is expected to result in death. The determination must be made on the basis of medically acceptable clinical and laboratory diagnostic techniques.

In establishing the Supplemental Security Income program for needy aged, blind, and disabled individuals in 1972, the Congress agreed to use the same definition of disability under that program that is used for the Disability Insurance program. However, since the SSI program provides eligibility on the basis of disability without regard to age, the statute recognizes that ability to engage in substantial gainful activity may be an inappropriate or impossible test to apply to infants and children. For an applicant under age 18, the law provides that the child will be found to be disabled if he suffers from any medically determinable physical or mental impairment of comparable severity to what would be considered disabling in the case of an adult recipient.

Regulations require that a child must have an impairment(s) that meets or equals in severity an impairment in the Listing of Impairments. If the severity of an adult's impairment does not meet or equal the severity of an impairment in the listings, he can still be found disabled if his impairment prevents him from doing any substantial gainful work that exists in the national economy, considering his vocational factors (age, education, and work experience). This test (or a similar test of functional capacity) is not applied to children.

Questions have been raised about the appropriateness of the standards that are being used for determining disability in children. It has been alleged that the existing system inappropriately excludes some children who are clearly suffering from very severe disabilities. There has also been a Circuit Court decision holding that the present methods for determining disability do not adequately consider the functional limitations which some medical conditions impose upon children.

Proposed change.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services would be required to establish a 15 member commission to conduct a study, in consultation with the National Academy of Sciences, of the definition of disability for determining whether a child is eligible for disability benefits under the Supplemental Security Income program, including the appropriateness of the present definition and the method of assessment that is used in making the determination. In its study and recommendations the Commission shall also address (1) whether it is appropriate to use an individualized functional assessment in determining whether a child is disabled, and if it is appropriate, what criteria should apply to such assessment; (2) the validity of a presumption of disability for children under age four who have a genetic, congenital, or perinatal disorder; and (3) how the Childhood Listing of Impairments should be revised, including the degree to which age-appropriate medical and functional criteria can validly be included in the listing; (4) whether the need by families for assistance in meeting the high costs of medical care for children with physical or mental impairments might appropriately be met through expansion of Federal health assistance programs (including Medical Assistance under title XIX of this Act); and (5) such other issues as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

The 15 members of the Commission must include representatives from the field of medicine who are expert in the evaluation and treatment of disability in children, the study of congenital, genetic, or perinatal disorders in children, or the measurement of developmental milestones and developmental deficits in children. Other members of the Commission shall be representative of the fields of psychology, education and rehabilitation, law, insurance, administration of disability programs, or such other fields of expertise as the Secretary determines is appropriate.

The Commission must be appointed within 90 days after enactment, and must report by September 1, 1991.

The Committee does not intend that this and other amendments relating to childhood disability approved by the Committee should be interpreted by the courts as either supporting or not supporting the concept that an individualized functional assessment must be used in determining whether a child meets the definition of disability.

PREEFFECTUATION REVIEW REQUIREMENT FOR DISABLED CHILDREN

Present law.—The Social Security Administration has recently issued preliminary findings from a childhood disability study requested last year by the Committee on Finance. The study involved a review of 927 title XVI childhood disability claims that were denied in 1987. The preliminary findings from this study indicate that there are unacceptably high numbers of errors in decision-making that result in denial of SSI benefits to disabled children. For example, the study showed that 42 percent of denials were made in error in the case of the "Growth Impairment" listing; 29 percent of denials were in error in the case of the "Cardiovascular System" listing; 13 percent of denials were in error in the case of the "Digestive System" listing; and more than 10 percent of denials were in error in the case of "Mental and Emotional Disorders." These errors involve both clear decisional errors and documentation deficiencies. The study also indicates that certain types of impairments are significantly more prone to error than others.

Proposed change.—Beginning January 1990, the Social Security Administration would be required to review 50 percent of all childhood disability denials made by State Disability Determination Services. Beginning as soon as is feasible, but no later than September 1990, SSA would be required to review 50 percent of all decisions (with a larger percentage of denials than of allowances) before they become effective. The review would apply to decisions on initial claims, reconsiderations, and continuing disability investigations. SSA would be directed to target its review on those determinations which it identifies as most likely to be incorrect. This requirement for review shall apply to determinations made prior to the beginning of fiscal year 1993.

In addition, SSA would be directed to develop a schedule for updating and revising the medical listing that are now being use in determining childhood disability and to submit that schedule to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means.

Finally, the Committee directs the Social Security Administration to improve its procedures for gathering evidence of a child's daily activities and the effect of the physical and/or mental impairment on the child's ability to function.

REQUIRE INVOLVEMENT OF PEDIATRICIAN IN CHILD DISABILITY DETERMINATIONS

Present law.—There is no statutory requirement that a pediatrician or other appropriate specialist be involved in the evaluation of a childhood disability case.

Proposed change.—In determining the eligibility or continuing eligibility for a child under age 18 for disability benefits, the Secretary of HHS shall make every reasonable effort to assure that a qualified pediatrician or other specialist appropriate to the specific disability evaluates a child's case.

OUTREACH PROGRAM FOR DISABLED CHILDREN

Present law.—There is no statutory requirement that the Social Security Administration conduct ongoing outreach activities to identify children who may be eligible for disability under the Supplemental Security Income program and encourage their participation in the program.

Proposed change.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services would be directed to conduct an ongoing program of outreach to children who are potentially eligible for SSI on the basis of disability.

$30 MONTHLY SSI PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN DISABLED CHILDREN WITHOUT REGARD TO PARENTS' INCOME

Present law.—When disabled children are institutionalized, their parents' income is not taken into account for determining eligibility for Supplemental Security Income. Consequently, they can receive the $30 monthly personal needs allowance provided by SSI to eligible individuals who are in medicaid institutions regardless of the level of their parents' income. In the case of a disabled child living at home, however, the parents' income is counted in determining whether the child qualifies for SSI benefits. For purposes of medicaid eligibility, States are permitted to provide eligibility without regard to parents' income to certain disabled children living at home who would otherwise be institutionalized. Such "home care" children, however, do not qualify for SSI payments.

Proposal.—Children who are now ineligible for SSI but who get medicaid coverage under State home care provisions would be allowed to receive the $30 SSI personal needs allowance that would be payable to them if they were in an institution. This will be payable regardless of the amount of their parents' income.

SSI BENEFITS FOR DISABLED CHILDREN OF SERVICE PERSONNEL ABROAD

Present law.—SSI eligibility is limited to individuals who are physically present inside the United States. A member of the armed services who has a disabled child may, if the family income is low enough, qualify for SSI benefits on behalf of the child. If the service member is assigned overseas, however, the child will lose eligibility as long as the child remains out of the country.

Proposed change.—The amendment would allow continued SSI eligibility for a disabled child residing with a parent who is assigned outside of the United States while on active military service.

TREAT ROYALTIES AS EARNED INCOME

Present law.—In determining SSI eligibility and benefit amounts, income received in the form of royalties and honoraria are considered unearned income. This results in a dollar-for-dollar loss of SSI benefits.

Proposed change.—Any royalty which is earned in connection with the publication of an individual's work, or any honorarium which is received for services rendered would be treated as earned income for purposes of SSI eligibility and benefit determination. This would mean that income from these sources would be disregarded to the same extent that income from other types of earnings is disregarded (i.e., the first $65 of monthly earnings plus 50 percent of additional earnings).

SPECIAL SSI BENEFITS FOR INDIVIDUALS WHO LOSE DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS

Present law.—A basic test used in determining whether an individual is disabled for purposes of Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) or for SSI benefits is whether the individual has earnings that constitute performance of "substantial gainful activity" (SGA). If he does, he cannot qualify for benefits. The Secretary of HHS has defined SGA as earnings of $300 a month. New regulations provide for increasing the SGA limit to $500 a month beginning in January.

In order to allow disabled SSI recipients to return to work without facing a severe disincentive, the Congress enacted legislation creating "special status" benefits under section 1619 of the Social Security Act. Section 1619 allows SSI recipients who continue to be disabled, but who, despite their impairments, begin to work at earnings above the SGA level, to continue to receive "special" SSI cash benefits. The benefit amount is reduced as earnings rise. Medicaid benefits are also continued.

Different rules apply with respect to Social Security disability beneficiaries who return to work at earnings above the SGA level. In the DI program, an individual may work without having his earnings affect his benefits during a 9-month trial work period. After the trial work period, disability benefits stop if the individual engages in SGA. However, the individual is entitled to receive a social security benefit for any month in which he does not perform SGA in the 36-month period that begins after the month in which the trial work period ends.

A Social Security disability insurance beneficiary who loses SSDI benefits because his earnings exceed the SGA level cannot subsequently qualify for regular SSI benefits (because he does not meet the basic disability definition). He therefore also cannot qualify for "special status" benefits under section 1619 which are available only to individuals who first qualify for regular SSI benefits.

Proposed change.—The amendment would permit an individual whose Social Security disability benefits cease because of work activity and who could be eligible for SSI but for the fact that he continues to engage in substantial gainful activity and, therefore, cannot establish initial eligibility for SSI disability benefits, to become eligible for cash and Medicaid benefits under section 1619. The individual would be deemed to have been eligible for SSI in the month prior to the month that Social Security disability benefits are not payable because of work activity, and his application would be deemed to have been filed in that prior month, provided that he files an SSI application during the 12-month period beginning with the first month in any period of months that a Social Security disability benefit was not payable because of work activity.

TREATMENT OF IMPAIRMENT-RELATED WORK EXPENSES

Present law.—Impairment-related work expenses of a disabled individual are excluded from earnings for purposes of determining (1) whether earnings for any month constitute substantial gainful activity, (2) the monthly benefit amount, and (3) continuing eligibility.

Proposed change.—Impairment-related work expenses would also be excluded in determining initial eligibility and reeligibility for SSI benefits and State supplementary payments.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION SERVICES FURNISHED DURING CERTAIN MONTHS OF NONPAYMENT OF SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME BENEFITS

Present Law.—The Secretary is required to refer blind and disabled individuals who are receiving SSI benefits to State vocational rehabilitation agencies and is authorized to reimburse these agencies for the reasonable and necessary costs of the vocational rehabilitation services that are provided to recipients under certain specified conditions. Reimbursement is not allowable with respect to services provided to individuals who are not receiving cash benefits but who are eligible for medicaid benefits because they are in "special status" under 1619(b), are in suspended benefit status, or are receiving Federally-administered State supplementary payments but not Federal SSI benefits.

Proposed change.—The proposed change would implement a recommendation of the Disability Advisory Council to authorize reimbursement for vocational rehabilitation services provided to individuals who are not currently receiving Federal SSI benefits but who are in "special status" under section 1691(b), are suspended benefit status, or are receiving Federally-administered State supplementary payments.

SSI OUTREACH PROGRAM FOR ADULTS

Present Law.—There is no requirement that the Social Security Administration conduct a continuing outreach program to provide information about Supplemental Security Income benefits to low-income aged, blind and disabled individuals who are not receiving such benefits.

Proposed change.—The Social Security Administration would be required to establish an ongoing outreach program to inform low-income aged, blind and disabled individuals about the SSI program. The outreach program would be targeted on specific categories of individuals who are receiving social security benefits: widows and widowers, disabled adult children, and individuals age 75 or over who are likely to be eligible for SSI benefits. In conducting the program, SSA would be required to consult and cooperate with other Federal, State and private agencies which serve aged, blind, or disabled individuals and have knowledge of potential recipients of SSI benefits.

GIFTS OF TRANSPORTATION TICKETS

Present Law.—A domestic commercial transportation ticket received as a gift by an SSI recipient is not counted as income if it is not covertible to cash (e.g., if it is charged on the donor's credit card). However, if a ticket is convertible to cash it is counted as unearned income and reduces the individual's SSI benefit on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

Proposed change.—The value of gifts of domestic commercial transportation tickets given to an individual or eligible spouse would be disregarded if they are used by the individual or spouse and not converted to cash.

EXCLUSION OF INTEREST ON BURIAL SPACES

Present law.—A burial fund with a value of up to $1,500, including interest on the fund, is excluded in determining whether an individual meets the SSI resources test. Burial spaces are also excluded, but interest on the spaces is not excluded except under specified conditions.

Proposed change.—In determining income and resources for purposes of SSI eligibility, interest and other accruals on burial spaces would be excluded.

REDUCE TIME DURING WHICH INCOME AND RESOURCES OF SEPARATED COUPLES MUST BE TREATED AS JOINTLY AVAILABLE

Present law.—A husband and wife who are both eligible for SSI benefits and who have not been living apart for more than 6 months are treated as an eligible couple rather than as 2 individuals. The benefit for which they are eligible is 150 percent of the benefit for an individual. If they separate, they are considered to be a couple until they have lived apart for more than 6 months, at which time they are each eligible for individual benefits.

Proposed changes.—A married couple would be treated as separate individuals for purposes of SSI eligibility and benefit determination beginning with the first month following the month of separation.

CONCURRENT SSI/FOOD STAMP APPLICATIONS

Present law.—P. L. 99-570 (the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986) amended the Social Security Act to require the Secretaries of HHS and Agriculture to develop a procedure to allow institutionalized individuals who are about to be released to make a single application for both SSI and food stamp benefits.

Proposed changes.—The proposal would allow SSA to take concurrent applications for the SSI and food stamp programs, but would not require that the applications be on a single form.

VALUATION OF CERTAIN IN-KIND SUPPORT AND MAINTENANCE

Present law.—Under present law, SSI benefit payments are computed under a system which determines the amount payable for any month on the basis of income received in the second preceding month. This applies not only to actual income of the recipient but also to certain types of in-kind income (such as the value of housing provided without charge) which are computed as a percentage of the basic SSI payment rate. When SSI benefits are increased in January of each year, this rule creates an anomaly in which for two months (January and February) the presumed income is determined by applying the percentage to a benefit rate which is no longer payable (the benefit rate for November and December). The result is that beneficiaries see their net SSI payment go up by slightly more than the cost-of-living percentage cost-of-living adjustment in March.

Proposed changes.—The proposal would provide that any rule which is used to determine the countable value of in-kind income as a percentage of the SSI benefit rate would make this computation on the basis of the SSI benefit rate in effect for the month of eligibility rather than the rate in effect for the second preceding month.

EXCLUSION OF AGENT ORANGE SETTLEMENTS IN DETERMINING ELIGIBILITY FOR NEEDS TESTED PROGRAMS

Present law.—Under Supplemental Security Income and other needs tested programs, all forms of income generally count against eligibility for benefits unless there is a statutory provision under which the income can be disregarded. Individuals who were awarded benefits under the Agent Orange litigation could, therefore, find that the Agent Orange awards result in their losing eligibility under SSI or other programs.

Proposed changes.—Agent Orange settlement payments would be excluded from income and resources under these Finance Committee programs: SSI, AFC, Medicaid, title XX social services and several other programs. This amendment was previously passed by the Senate as a free-standing bill—S. 892—but no action has been taken by the House.

AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE AND AFDC SPECIAL NEEDS

Present law.—States may operate an emergency assistance program for needy families with children (whether or not eligible for AFDC) if the assistance is necessary in order to avoid the destitution of the child or to provide living arrangements in a home for the child. The statute authorizes 50 percent Federal matching for emergency assistance furnished for a period not in excess of 30 days in any 12-month period. Regulations state that Federal matching is available for emergency assistance authorized by the State during one period of 30 consecutive days in any 12 consecutive months, including payments which are to meet needs which arose before the 30-day period or are for such needs as rent which extend beyond the 30-day period.

In addition, AFDC regulations allow States to include in their State standards of need provision for meeting "special needs" of AFDC applicants and recipients. The State plan must specify the circumstances under which payments will be made for special needs.

The Department of HHS published proposed rules on December 14, 1987 to amend the emergency assistance regulations to limit assistance and services under the emergency assistance program to those provided during 30 consecutive days of need in any period of 12 consecutive months. The Department also proposed changes to prohibit States from providing, as basic or special needs, multiple shelter allowances based on the type of housing occupied. The proposed regulations would have the effect of prohibiting States from using emergency assistance or special needs funds to pay for maintaining families in welfare hotels or similar housing arrangements.

An amendment to the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987 imposed a moratorium on publication of final rules through September 1988. The moratorium was extended through September 1989 by an amendment to the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988.

Proposed change.—The Secretary of HHS would be directed not to implement the proposed regulations published December 14, 1987 with respect to the use of emergency assistance or special needs funds, but would be allowed to issue revised proposed regulations with respect to the use of emergency assistance funds that reflect the recommendations included in a report entitled "Use of the Emergency Assistance and AFDC Programs to Provide Shelter to Families" transmitted by the Secretary to the Congress on July 3, 1989. The Secretary would be prohibited from establishing an effective date for any final regulations relating to emergency assistance, or otherwise modifying current policy regarding the use of emergency assistance or special needs funds without specific legislative authority, prior to April 1, 1991. Effective with the calendar quarter beginning January 1, 1990, States would be required to identify in their financial reports any emergency assistance or AFDC special needs funds that are used to pay for housing in welfare hotels or similar housing arrangements.

MINNESOTA WELFARE REFORM DEMONSTRATION

Present law.—There is no statutory authority designed to enable States to undertake welfare reform demonstration projects the involve several Federal welfare programs.

Proposed change.—The State of Minnesota would be allowed to undertake a welfare reform demonstration project in selected counties, operated in accordance with Minnesota State law. The program will involve the AFDC, Medicaid and food stamp programs.

PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO IMPLEMENT THE JOBS PROGRAM

Present law.—The Family Support Act of 1988 provided for the establishment of a new education and training program (JOBS) to serve recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children. The statute gives States the option of implementing the new program beginning July 1, 1989. All States must have a JOBS program in effect by October 1, 1990. If they do not, the Secretary of HHS may find that their program is not in substantial compliance with AFDC law, and the Secretary may withhold all or part of the State's AFDC matching funds.

Proposed change.—The Secretary of HHS would be required to withhold all Federal matching for Aid to Families with Dependent Children for a State that does not implement the new JOBS program by the required date (October 1, 1990).

CHILD WELFARE/FOSTER CARE

FOSTER CARE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS

Present law.—Concern has been expressed by both the Administration and Congress over the recent rate of increase in administrative costs for the Title IV-E foster care program. States received $118 million in Federal matching funds (50% Federal/50% State) for foster care administration in fiscal year 1983. Federal matching costs rose to $294 million in 1987. (Over this same period of time foster care maintenance payments grew from $276 million in 1983 to $422 million in 1987.) According to Administration projections, if current trends continue, administrative costs will exceed maintenance costs by 1992. Administrative costs already exceed maintenance costs in a number of States.

Various explanations have been given for the increases that have been occurring. Some of the reasons that have been put forward are: in the past some States were underclaiming for administrative costs, and only recently began to file claims for legitimate activities authorized under the law; major child welfare reforms enacted in 1980 (and regulations issued pursuant to that law) allow States to claim for activities that are far more labor intensive (involving develoment of case plans, preparing for and participating in judicial proceedings, assessment of the child and family's condition, etc.) than the kinds of activities that qualify for Federal matching under the AFDC, Medicaid, or food stamp programs; Federal cost matching definitions are unclear and extremely broad, as are cost allocation rules (e.g., certain costs for non-title IV-E-related activities are being charged to the IV-E program); and States are transferring costs to the Federal government that they themselves should be paying.

A report by the Office of Inspector General, dated October 1987, found that the Office of Human Development Services has not documented that States are systematically transferring ineligible costs to the Federal government, and that there was no evidence in the IG's studies to demonstrate patterns of abuse by the States.

In the last several years the Administration has put forward several proposals that would have the effect of putting a cap on Federal matching for foster care administrative costs. These proposals have not been agreed to by the Congress.

Proposed change.—The Office of Inspector General in HHS would be required to conduct a study of State administrative costs under the Title IV-E foster care program, including the following matters: (1) the kinds of activities that are being funded with IV-E matching funds, (2) the extent to which the activities that are being funded reflect requirements imposed on the States by section 427 of the Social Security Act, (3) the extent to which States have received reimbursement for claims to which they are not entitled, (4) the reasons why State administrative costs have increased in recent years, including an explanation of why the rates of increase have varied from State to State, (5) the extent to which States have claimed and the extent to which they have received Federal reimbursement under the IV-E program for activities that serve children other than IV-E children (e.g., reimbursement for recruitment of foster care parents regardless of whether they serve IV-E children or non-IV-E children), and (6) the extent to which States are providing in-kind rather than cash payments to match Federal funds.

In addition, the General Accounting Office would be directed to study the effects of the imposition of alternative caps on Federal matching of administrative costs (including a cap that would limit Federal matching for administrative costs to no more than a specified percentage of maintenance costs) on (1) the quality and availability of services to children receiving maintenance payments under the title IV-E program, and (2) the costs to States and to the Federal government.

A State maintenance of effort provision would be added which would limit Federal matching for title IV-E administrative costs to no more than the State received in the prior year unless the State maintains its prior year level of expenditures for child welfare services. For purposes of this provision, child welfare services would be defined to include child welfare services expenditures under title XX and title IV-B of the Social Security Act, and child welfare expenditures made by State and local agencies that participate in the administration of child welfare, foster care, and adoption assistance programs.

CHILD WELFARE SERVICES AUTHORIZATION

Present law.—The annual limit on funding for the child welfare services program (Title IB-B of the Social Security Act) is $266 million. This has been the amount authorized for the program since 1982. The appropriation for fiscal year 1989 was $247 million. Under the child welfare services program, States may provide a wide range of services to children. There is no Federal income test for these services.

Proposed change.—The authorization for the Title IV-B child welfare services program would be increased from the current level of $266 million a year to $325 million.

AUTHORITY TO TRANSFER FOSTER CARE FUNDS

Present law.—The Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980 (P.L. 96-272) allows States to transfer unused foster care funds (authorized under title IV-E of the Social Security Act) to use for child welfare services under title IV-B. The transfer mechanism works as follows:

There is a mandatory ceiling on Federal AFDC foster care payments to States if appropriations for the child welfare services program reach a specified level ($266 million a year for years after 1982). With the mandatory ceiling States that meet certain conditions may transfer any unused foster care funds to be used to provide child welfare services under title IV-B. In years in which appropriations do not reach the trigger amount, States may choose to operate under a voluntary ceiling and transfer a certain proportion of unused foster care funds to their child welfare services program.

A State's ceiling is based on the greater of: (1) the fiscal year 1978 AFDC foster care funding for the State with annual increases equal to the lesser of 10 percent or twice the increase in the consumer price index, or (2) a share of $100 million based on the State's under-18 population. In a year in which the title IV-B trigger amount has been appropriated, a State may choose to have its ceiling based on one of two options: the higher of (1) or (2) above; or (3) the 1978 funding level increased by the AFDC foster care caseload increase since fiscal year 1978 if the State's caseload (relative to its total child population) was lower than the 1978 national average foster care caseload (until the caseload equals or exceeds the 1978 national average.)

When operating under the mandatory ceiling, States—except those choosing to calculate the ceiling amount under the alternative formula (No. 3 above)—can use matching foster care funds for the title IV-B child welfare services at the IV-B Federal matching rate of 75 percent. Although the technical matching rate is 75 percent, States are allowed to use their general foster care costs to meet the non-Federal matching requirement. (Effectively, this means that the receipt of new Federal funds does not require any increase in State matching funds.) These funds cannot exceed the State's share of $141 million under the IV-B allocation formula unless certain preplacement preventive services are implemented. If the IV-B appropriations are $266 million for two consecutive years, a State cannot transfer funds from IV-E to IV-B unless all the foster care procedures and protections required for receipt of additional IV-B child welfare services funds, including preplacement preventive services, are implemented. The mandatory ceiling has been in operation only one year, 1981.

In the years when a State chooses to use a voluntary ceiling, it can transfer an amount, which together with its IV-B allocation, does not exceed what it would have received if the IV-B appropriation had been adequate to trigger the ceiling. In addition, the amount transferred, when added to its IV-B allocation, cannot exceed its share of $141 million under the IV-B allocation formula unless certain of the foster care procedures and protections specified in the 1980 legislation are implemented. If the amount of money transferred plus direct IV-B funds for any two fiscal years equal the State's share of $266 million under the IV-B allocation formula, the State cannot transfer funds unless it has implemented all the foster care procedures and protections specified in the 1980 legislation for the receipt of additional child welfare services funds, including preplacement preventive services.

States have had the option of choosing a voluntary ceiling each year since 1982. Under the voluntary ceiling, States transferred a total of $33 million in 1983, $20 million in 1985, $11 million in 1987, and $7 million in 1989 (estimate).

Proposed change.—The current law authority (which expires September 30, 1989) that establishes ceilings on Federal matching for State foster care maintenance payments and allows a State to transfer its unused foster care funds to the child welfare services program would be extended for three years (through fiscal year 1992).

FEDERAL MATCHING FOR TRAINING FOSTER CARE AND ADOPTIVE PARENTS

Present law.—Federal regulations allow States to use Federal administrative matching funds for short term training for foster and adoptive parents. Matching is at a 50 percent rate, and is limited to travel and per diem.

Proposed change.—States would be eligible to receive 75 percent Federal matching for the costs of training foster care and adoptive parents for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992. States would be required to identify funds used for this purpose in their fiscal reports.

HEALTH AND EDUCATION RECORDS FOR FOSTER CARE CHILDREN

Present law.—There is no requirement under present law that States include in their case plans for foster care children any record of the child's educational and health status.

Proposed change.—A case plan for a child receiving foster care maintenance payments under the responsibility of the State must include, at the time of placement, a record of the child's educational and health status. The record must be reviewed and updated at the time each placement is made.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE INDEPENDENT LIVING PROGRAM

Present law.—The purpose of the foster care independent living program is to help title IV-E foster care children age 16 and over prepare for independent living. States are entitled to receive their share of $45 million allocated on the basis of each State's relative number of children receiving title IV-E foster care maintenance payments in 1984. There is no State matching requirement. The independent living program was originally authorized for two years, 1987 and 1988. It has been extended for one additional year.

Proposed change.—The authorization for the independent living program would be extended for three years, through September 30, 1992. The present level of entitlement funding would be increased from $45 million to $60 million. States would be required to provide 50 percent matching for any Federal funding claimed that exceeds the present $45 million funding level. Funds could be used for services to youths for up to one year after they become ineligible for foster care payments (instead of for 6 months as under current law). The GAO would be required to evaluate the effectiveness of the program, including a comparison of outcomes for youth participating in the program with similar youths who did not.

DATA COLLECTION

Present law.—An amendment to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (P.L. 99-509) required the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish an advisory committee to recommend (by October 1, 1987) a method of establishing, administering, and financing a system for the collection of data with respect to adoption and foster care in the United States. Based on the recommendations, the Secretary was required to submit a report to the Congress (by July 1, 1988) including his recommendations for an adoption and foster care information system. Final regulations for the implementation of the system were required to be promulgated by December 31, 1988, and the system is to be implemented not later than October 1, 1991.

The October 1987 advisory committee report recommended that the data collection system cover all legalized adoptions, including relative and non-relative adoptions, as well as adoptions under private and public auspices. With respect to foster care, the report called for data on all children within the purview of section 427 of the Social Security Act (relating to foster care protections), including children placed under the auspices of public child welfare agencies, children placed by private agencies under contract to the public agency, and children placed privately by licensed private agencies.

The report issued by the Secretary in May of this year recommended limiting the scope of the system for adoption to only those adoptions in which the State child welfare agency is involved. With respect to foster care, it did not include the advisory committee's recommendation that the system require reporting for children placed privately by licensed private facilities.

Proposed change.—In proposing regulations to establish the foster care and adoption assistance data collection system required by section 479 of the Social Security Act, the Secretary would be required to provide for collection of (and Federal matching for) the kinds of data recommended by the Secretary's advisory committee, as follows: (1) with respect to foster care, data on all children within the purview of section 427 of the Social Security Act, including children placed under the auspices of the public child welfare agency and those placed by private agencies under contract to the public agency, and, to the extent feasible, children who are placed privately by licensed private agencies; (2) with respect to adoption assistance, all legalized adoptions, including relative and non-relative adoptions, as well as adoptions under private and public auspices. The regulations must provide for implementation of the system no later than October 1, 1992. These regulations must be proposed by March 1, 1990, with final regulations issued no later than September 1, 1990. The Secretary must provide technical assistance to the States in implementing the information systems. States could claim Federal matching for the costs of the data collection system as foster care administrative costs (title IV-E) or as parts of their child welfare services program (title IV-B).

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

EXTEND IRS AUTHORITY TO COLLECT CHILD SUPPORT ARREARAGES FROM TAX REFUNDS

Present law.—Under the Social Security Act, States have permanent authority to request the IRS to collect child support arrearages due to AFDC families by withholding income tax refunds due to the noncustodial parent. States have similar authority to use the IRS income tax offset mechanism with respect to families who are not receiving AFDC. However, this authority applies only to refunds payable before January 1, 1991.

Proposed change.—The current authority to collect child support arrearages on behalf of non-welfare families would be extended for five years. In addition, the current provision of law that restricts use of the IRS income tax offset procedure to collections on behalf of a non-AFDC child who is a minor would be modified to allow collections on behalf of a child of any age if the child is disabled, as determined under the DI or SSI programs.

ALLOW STATES TO USE IRS OFFSET FOR NON-AFDC FAMILIES WHEN ARREARAGE IS UNDER $500

Present law.—The child support statute now provides that States may use the IRS income tax offset procedure to collect child support arrearages on behalf of non-AFDC families only where the State determines that the amount of past-due support that is owed equals or exceeds $500. However, regulations allow States to use the IRS procedure on behalf of AFDC families where the amount of past-due support that is owed equals or exceeds $150.

Proposed change.—The $500 minimum threshold for collecting non-AFDC child support arrearages using the IRS income tax offset procedure would be removed. States would have discretion to use the same threshold amount that applies to AFDC families.

ALLOW IRS OFFSET FOR SPOUSAL SUPPORT WHEN SPOUSAL SUPPORT AND CHILD SUPPORT ARE COMBINED IN THE SAME ORDER Present law.—With respect to AFDC families, the IRS may withhold tax refunds to collect past-due support owed to a minor child and the parent with whom the child is living. However, with respect to non-AFDC families, withholding can occur only on behalf of a minor child. Withholding is not allowed on behalf of the child's parent, even if spousal support and child support are combined in the same court order.

Proposed change.—The IRS income tax offset procedure could be used for spousal support, as well as child support, when spousal and child support are included in the same order.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT TO ALLOW GOOD CAUSE EXCEPTION

Present law.—Under current law, as a condition of eligibility for AFDC, a parent must cooperate with the child support enforcement (IV-D) agency in establishing paternity, and in obtaining and enforcing a support order unless there is "good cause" for refusal. "Good cause" includes such factors as reasonable belief that cooperation could result in physical or emotional harm to the child or caretaker relative, and other factors established by regulation. The 1988 Family Support Act established a similar requirement for cooperation with the IV-D agency in order for a family to be eligible to receive child care transition benefits. However, the "good cause" exception was omitted.

Proposed change.—The good cause exception from cooperating with the IV-D agency would be made applicable to transitional child care benefits to make it consistent with the exception that applies to AFDC cash benefits.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

SELF-EMPLOYMENT DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Present Law.—The 1987 Budget Reconciliation Act included a provision authorizing 3 States to undertake demonstration projects under which payments would be made from the Unemployment Trust Fund to individuals otherwise eligible for unemployment compensation to enable them to undertake self-employment activities. A part of this legislation requires the States involved to repay the Trust Fund, from State general funds, the amount of any costs incurred which exceed the unemployment benefits that would have been paid in the absence of the demonstration projects.

Proposed changes.—The requirement that States repay the excess costs to the Trust Fund would be eliminated to the extent that such costs do not exceed $600,000 in the case of any State over the duration of the project.

WITHHOLDING UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS TO RECOUP UNPAID UNEMPLOYMENT TAXES

Present law.—Under the Federal-state system of unemployment compensation, State unemployment benefits are paid from State accounts in the Federal Unemployment Trust funds. These accounts are funded from State-imposed payroll taxes on employers in each State. Federal law requires that amounts in these State accounts may be expended only for the purpose of paying unemployment benefits. In 1987, the State of Minnesota passed a law under which individuals who, as employers, failed to pay State unemployment taxes into the fund would be subject to a withholding of any subsequent unemployment benefits for which they might become eligible so as to recoup their unpaid taxes. The Department of Labor held that this withholding of unemployment benefits to recoup unpaid unemployment taxes constituted an improper use of the funds in the State unemployment account; that is, the Department held that the funds were not being used for the sole legal purpose—the payment of benefits to unemployed individuals.

Proposed change.—The Federal rules governing allowable uses of funds in the State accounts of the Unemployment Trust would be modified to deduct from the unemployment benefits otherwise payable to an individual any amounts the individual owes to the fund as unpaid unemployment taxes.

OTHER INCOME SECURITY

DISREGARD EITC FOR PURPOSES OF CERTAIN HOUSING PROGRAMS

Present law.—Income received in the form of the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) is disregarded for purposes of determining eligiblity and benefits under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Food Stamp programs. However, it is not disregarded under Federally-assisted low income housing programs.

Proposed change.—Income received in the form of the Earned Income Tax Credit would be disregarded for purposes of specified low income housing programs.

ACCESS TO TAX INFORMATION BY THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Present law.—The Internal Revenue code prohibits disclosure of tax returns and return information of taxpayers, with exceptions for authorized disclosure to certain Governmental entities in certain enumerated instances (Code sec. 6103). Unauthorized disclosure is a felony punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than five years, or both (sec. 7213). An action for civil damages also may be brought for unauthorized disclosure (sec. 7431).

Among the disclosures permitted under the Code is disclosure of return information to Federal, State, and local agencies administering certain programs under the Social Security Act or the Food Stamp Act of 1977. This disclosure, pursuant to a written request by the agency, is for the purpose of determining eligiblity for, and the correct amount of benefits under, certain enumerated programs. Any authorized recipient of return, information must maintain a system of safeguards to protect against unauthorized redisclosure of the information.

Proposed change.—The provision allows disclosure of certain third-party and self-employment tax information to the Department of Veterans' Affairs (DVA) to assist DVA in determining eligiblity for, and establishing correct benefit amounts under, certain of its needs-based pension and other programs. Thus, the DVA will have direct access to information on the types and amounts of income received by veterans. The income tax returns filed by the veterans themselves will not be disclosed to DVA.

The DVA is required to comply with the safeguards presently contained in the Code and in section 1137(c) of the Social Security Act (governing the use of disclosed tax information). These safeguards include independent verification of tax data, notification to the individual concerned, and the opportunity to contest agency findings based on such information.

The provision also includes amendments to title 38 of the U.S. Code which assure that the Secretary of DVA will have adequate authority and resources to make use of the information made available by the amendment.

ELIMINATION OF COLLECTION OF BLACK LUNG BENEFIT OVERPAYMENTS FROM TAX REFUNDS

Present law.—Section 6402(d) of the Internal Revenue Code provides the Internal Revenue Service shall withhold tax refunds to satisfy outstanding legally enforceable debts which taxpayers owe to any Federal agency (other than overpayments of social security benefits). One type of debt collectible under the provision is overpayment of benefits under the Black Lung Benefits Act. Such overpayments may arise as a result of the reversal of initial benefit awards which may occur many months (or even years) after the individual begins to receive benefits. Under the Black Lung program, mine operators may challenge the award of benefits to an individual who has been found eligible. If the challenge succeeds, the individual is liable to repay the benefits received to the Black Lung Trust Fund.

Proposed change.—The Committee bill would provide that the tax refund offset mechanism under section 6402 of the Internal Revenue Code may not be used to collect overpayments under the Black Lung Benefits Act. The change is effective on enactment.

PROSPECTIVE PAYMENT SYSTEM (PPS) UPDATE

Present Law.—Under Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS), hospitals are paid a fixed amount per discharge, adjusted for geographic wage variation, teaching or disproportionate share status, and other factors. When PPS was created in 1983, separate fixed rates were developed for hospitals located in urban and rural areas to reflect the best available data about the relative cost of caring for Medicare patients. Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA 1987), a further distinction was made between hospitals located in large urban areas (over 1 million population) and hospitals in other urban areas, with the result that there are now three Medicare PPS rates. Taking into account more generous increases for hospitals in rural and large urban areas required by OBRA 1987, the basic payment rate for rural hospitals is 12-13% lower than the two urban rates.

Under present law, hospitals exempt from PPS (psychiatric, childrens', rehabilitation and long-term hospitals) are paid reasonable costs, subject to limits on the rate at which an individual institution's average cost per case can increase in a given year.

The Secretary of HHS published final rules on September 1, 1989, to be effective October 1, 1989, increasing PPS payment rates for all hosptials, (and rate-of-increase limits for PPS-exempt hospitals) by the hospital market basket, a specialized measure of hospital price inflation estimated by the Secretary at 5.5%. The market basket increase estimated by CBO for purposes of the congressional budget is 5.4%.

The President's Budget proposed legislation to provide that all hospital payment rates, and limits for PPS-exempt hospitals, be increased by the market basket minus 1.5%. The Secretary of HHS has recommended that Congress consider relatively higher increases for hospitals in rural and large urban areas, but with no change in the aggregate savings of $590 million associated with the President's proposal.

The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (PROPAC) estimated an FY1990 market basket increase of 5.7%. PROPAC has recommended to Congress that hospital payment rates be increased by 5% in large urban areas, 4.5% in other urban areas, and 5.6% in rural areas. PROPAC recommends an increase in the limits for PPS-exempt facilities of 6.2% (6.3% for childrens' hospitals).

Under the prospective payment system (PPS), the Secretary of HHS is required to establish a classification of hospital discharges by diagnosis-related groups (DRGs), and a methodology for classifying discharges within these groups. For each DRG, the Secretary is required to assign an appropriate weighting factor which reflects the relative hospital resources used for discharges within that DRG compared to discharges within other DRGs. The Secretary is required to "recalibrate," or adjust the classifications and weighting factors in FY88 and annually thereafter to reflect changes in treatment patterns, technology and other factors which may change the relative use of hospital resources. In FY1989, the DRG weights varied from .1242 (false labor) to 14.7080 (heart transplant).

In computing Medicare payment for an individual hosptial discharge, the DRG weight appropriate for the particular case is multiplied by the fixed PPS payment rate, which is then adjusted for geographic wage variation and other factors as appropriate.

On September 1, 1989, the Secretary published final regulations governing PPS for FY1990. In addition to recalibrating the DRG weights as required by law, the Secretary has reduced all DRG weights across the board by 1.22% to account for increases in the average mix of cases for FY86-88 that he believes are attributable to refinements in DRG coding and not to actual changes in resource requirements. The Secretary believes that without this reduction, recalibration would result in an inappropriate increase in Medicare spending.

The President's Budget assumed that DRG weights would be reduced 1.35% (later revised to 1.22%) in FY1990, and incorporated into assumptions about current law reduced Medicare spending of $530-$570 million. The Congressional Budget Office did not assume any reduction in the DRG weights in its February baseline, but estimates that the Administration's regulatory action will reduce hospital payments by $460 million.

The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission believes that the proposed reduction in the DRG weights in inappropriate because; (1) it represents an administrative reduction in overall PPS payments; (2) it is inconsistent with prior methods for accounting for casemix change; and (3) it adjusts for changes in casemix that may partly reflect changes for which hospitals should be compensated. The Commission believes that adjustments for case-mix change should be incorporated in the PPS update factor, not implemented separately through the recalibration process.

Committee Provision.—The Committee provision provides the following update factors for discharges occuring during FY90: for hospitals in large urban areas, the market basket minus 1.25 percentage points, for hospitals in other urban areas, the market basket minus 2.0 percentage points, and for hospitals in rural areas, the market basket plus 2 percentage points. Limits the rate-of-increase limits for PPS exempt hospitals to the market basket increase. The Committee provision prohibits the Secretary from recalibrating DRG weights for discharges in a fiscal year except in a manner that does not increase or decrease aggregate PPS payments that would have been made if the DRG weights had not been adjusted.

The Committee requests that PROPAC, in its report to Congress, include a study of issues relating to Medicare payment of inpatient costs of "high Medicare" hospitals. The study should include an assessment of the impact on these hospitals of the current PPS, and the factors relating to such impact. PROPAC should include in its report recommendations for payment adjustments or other appropriate mechanisms for assuring that "high Medicare" hospitals receive adequate payment for their inpatient costs under PPS. The Committee is concerned that inadequacies in PPS payment methodology may be placing "high Medicare" hospitals at an uninteded disadvantage, as these hospitals provide essential services to Medicare beneficiaries.

The Committee notes that the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 was intended to restrict the Secretary from requiring a change in policy regarding Medicare's bad debt payments to an individual hospital relative to that hospital's policy on August 1, 1987, if the fiscal intermediary had accepted the hospital's rules before that date with regard to indigency determination procedures, recordkeeping, and determining whether to refer a claim to an external collection agency.

The Committee further wishes to clarify that the Secretary may not collect from the hospital on the basis of an expectation of a change in the hospital's collection policy.

INDIRECT MEDICAL EDUCATION

Present Law.—Medicare pays teaching hospitals an additional percentage amount for each discharge to reflect the indirect costs of medical education. On average, the adjustment is 7.65% for each 0.1 increase in the hospital's ratio of interns and residents to beds. (Under present law, the adjustment is scheduled to increase to 8.29% in FY1996, when Medicare's disproportionate share adjustment is scheduled to expire.) In FY1990, about 20%, or about 1100 of the nation's 5600 prospective payment system hospitals will receive indirect medical education payments totaling $2.4 billion.

Medicare first recognized the indirect costs of medical education in 1980, when limits on hospital payment per day were adjusted upward by 4.7% for teaching hospitals. In 1982, limits on payment per case were adjusted by 6.06% for teaching hospitals. When the prospective payment system was created in 1983, to account for variation in severity of illness, the adjustment was increased to 11.59%. The adjustment was reduced to 8.1% by the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 and to 7.65% by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

Numerous studies have been conducted analyzing the relationship between the level of a hospital's teaching activity and the hospital's Medicare cost per case. Conclusions about the appropriate level of the adjustment depend on which factors known to affect hospital costs are explicitly taken into account, as well as on the age of the data analyzed. Reductions in the indirect medical education adjustment have been recommended by the General Accounting Office (GAO) and the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (PROPAC). GAO estimates that an adjustment factor of between 3.73% and 6.26% would be justified, depending on which factors affecting Medicare costs are taken into account, and recommends an adjustment of 5.09% as most appropriate. PROPAC recommended an adjustment of 6.6%, but also recommended that savings achieved from this reduction be redirected into increasing Medicare hospital payment rates. CBO's analysis supports adjustments between 3.5% and 9.5%. The President's Budget recommends setting the indirect teaching adjustment at 4.05%.

Committee Provision.—The Committee provision sets the indirect medical education adjustment at 6.6% for FY90 and 7.2% beginning in FY 96.

Effective Date.—For discharges occurring on or after October 1, 1970.

MEDICARE PAYMENTS FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL CAPITAL

Present Law.—Capital-related costs related to inpatient hospital services are excluded from Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS), and are paid for on a reasonable cost basis. (Capital-related costs include depreciation, leases and rentals, interest, and until September 30, 1989, return on equity for proprietary hospitals). With the enactment of PPS in 1983, the Secretary of HHS was authorized to propose a methodology for incorporating inpatient capital costs into PPS payments. Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, however, the Secretary is prohibited from implementing a prospective payment system for inpatient hospital capital until October 1, 1991, and is required to do so after that date.

Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, Medicare payments for inpatient hospital capital were reduced by 12% during the last three quarters of FY 1988 and by 15% during FY 1989, so that through September 30, 1989, Medicare is paying 85% of reasonable costs for capital. (Sole community hospitals are exempt from these reductions). In FY 1990, under present law, Medicare payments for inpatient hospital capital are scheduled to revert to 100% of reasonable costs.

The President's Budget proposes setting Medicare's payment for inpatient hospital capital costs at 75% of reasonable costs, and proposes that this 25% reduction be made permanent.

Hospitals serving a disproportionate share of low-income patients receive additional payments from Medicare under the prospective payment system. ("Low income" patients are those receiving Supplemental Security Income and Medicare, or those receiving Medicaid). Hospitals with more than 100 beds that are located in urban areas, and hospitals with more than 500 beds located in rural areas, qualify for disproportionate share status if at least 15% of their patients qualify as low-income. These hospitals receive additional Medicare payments proportional to their share of low-income patients. Hospitals with fewer than 100 beds that are located in urban areas must have at least a 40% share of low-income patients, and receive a 5% add-on for each Medicare case. Hospitals with fewer than 500 beds located in rural areas must have at least a 45% share of low-income patients and receive a 4% add-on for each Medicare case. Hospitals with an add-on of 5.1% ("high disproportionate share hospitals") or more qualify for periodic interim payments (PIP).

Committee Provision.—For FY 1990, the Committee provision sets the reduction in capital-related payments at 20%. Sole community hospitals continue to be exempt from reductions in capital-related payments as provided under current law. In addition, high disproportionate share hospitals (hospitals with an add-on of 5.1% or more) are exempted from reductions in capital-related payments.

The Committee provision requires the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (PROPAC) to submit a final report to Congress by March 1, 1991, on the results of a study of the effects of payment under Medicare for capital-related costs of hospitals, including the effect on access to capital financing; trends in capital spending; and the proportion of total hospital spending for capital among different types of institutions. The bill requires the report to focus on the impact of the definition of reasonable capital costs, and include an examination of whether small or isolated rural hospitals have particular difficulty obtaining capital financing.

Effective Date.—For discharges or portions of cost reporting periods occurring during FY 1990.

HOSPITAL PAYMENT FOR HEMOPHILIA CLOTTING FACTOR

Present law.—The fixed payment for each discharge under Medicare's prospective payment system reflects the operating costs—including costs of pharmaceutical products furnished for the care of inpatients—of hospitals in FY81, indexed forward for inflation and other factors. (Certain operating costs, such as organ acquisition costs, are "passed through" to the hospital and are not reimbursed under the PPS payment).

Since FY81, the cost of clotting factor administered to hemophiliacs to control bleeding has increased significantly; the factor is manufactured from blood products which must be screened for the AIDS virus. Hospitals involved extensively in the treatment of hemophilia may therefore encounter costs in excess of the PPS average payment per case.

Committee Provision.—The bill directs the Secretary of HHS to "pass through" to hospitals the costs of hemophilia clotting factor administered to inpatients, in addition to payments made under PPS. Payment will be set at a predetermined price per unit (determined in consultation with the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission) times the number of units consumed by the patient. PROPAC and HCFA are required to develop recommendations for Congress on payment policy for hemophilia clotting factor furnished to inpatients within 18 months after enactment.

Effective Date.—Applies to items furnished between 6 and 24 months after enactment.

CANCER HOSPITALS

Present law.—There are eight hospitals in the U.S. that have been designated by the Secretary of HHS as centers extensively involved in the treatment of cancer. The Secretary has elected (by regulation) to extend to these centers an exemption from the prospective payment system (PPS). Rather than being paid under the DRG system, these hospitals are paid reasonable costs, subject to annual limits on the rate of increase in their cost per case. These are the same payment rules applied to the four types of hospitals (children's, rehabilitation, long-term and psychiatric) that are statutorily exempt from PPS. Hospitals exempt from PPS by law, however, are extended two other special payment protections not available to cancer hospitals: they are exempt from across-the-board reductions in inpatient hospital capital payments, and they continue to receive periodic interim payment (PIP) cashflow payments.

Committee Provision.—The Committee provision extends the same statutory exemption from PPS now applied to four other types of hospitals to cancer hospitals classified by the Secretary on or before December 31, 1990, and to any hospitals similarly involved in the treatment for and research on cancer that is located in a State with a PPS-waiver which applies to the Secretary for classification by September 30, 1991. While payment to these hospitals will be largely unaffected, they are no longer subject to reductions in capital payments and are eligible to receive PIP.

Effective Date.—Applies to cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1989, in the case of hospitals already classified as cancer hospitals on the date of enactment. For such hospitals, changes in capital reimbursement apply to portions of cost reporting periods or discharges occurring during and after FY 1987; eligibility for PIP is effective 30 days after enactment. For hospitals classified after enactment, the provisions apply to cost reporting periods beginning on or after the date of such classification.

MEDICARE PAYMENTS TO RURAL HOSPITALS REDESIGNATED AS URBAN AND OTHER AFFECTED HOSPITALS

Present Law.—Under the prospective payment system (PPS), Medicare pays hospitals different payment rates depending on whether they are located in an urban or rural area. This fixed rate is also adjusted to reflect geographic variation in hospital wage levels. Urban hospital payment rates are adjusted by a wage index, based on a special survey of hospitals, which measures relative hospital wages in the metropolitan statistical area (MSA) in which the hospital is located. Rural hospital payment rates are adjusted by a wage index which reflects the relative wages of all hospitals in the State that are not located within MSAs.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 required the Secretary of HHS to treat hospitals located in certain rural counties as though they were located in an adjacent urban area. Under this provision, 55 rural hospitals were assigned to 27 MSAs in 16 different States beginning in FY 1989 and are paid the urban payment rates. This change in policy increased payments to hospitals redesignated from rural to urban, but it reduced payments to hospitals located in all urban areas into which the redesignated hospitals were added and to rural hospitals in 7 of the affected States. This occurred primarily because redesignation changes the number and composition of hospitals included in calculating the area wage index for each affected urban or rural area; the wage index drops in all affected urban areas and some statewide rural areas.

To limit some of these effects, the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (TAMRA) made further amendments that are effective in FY 1990-91 only. In areas where redesignation reduced the wage index—all MSAs to which hospitals were added and some statewide rural areas—the wage index will be recalculated as though redesignation had not occurred. Finally, redesignated hospitals will continue to get the urban payment amount, but will get a special wage index based only on their own wage data. This policy reduces payment to the 55 redesignated urban hospitals relative to what they would have received under OBRA 1987; in a few cases payments are even lower than they would have been before OBRA 1987.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill provides that, in cases in which the wage index value for an urban area is computed without taking into account a rural hospital that has been redesignated as being in that area (because exclusion of the redesignated hospital yields a higher value), the redesignated hospital will still be paid on the basis of the wage index for the urban area. The September 30, 1991, sunset for the adjustment provisions is eliminated.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

AREA WAGE INDEX

Present Law.—Under Medicare's hospital prospective payment system, the fixed payment for each patient is adjusted by a wage index which reflects the relative level of hospital wages in the particular geographic area compared to national average hospital wages. The wage index is based on a survey conducted by the Health Care Financing Administration. In FY 89, the hospital wage index was based on a combination of data from FY 82 and FY 84. In FY 90, the Administration has implemented a wage index based entirely on FY 84 data. The new wage index proposed by the Secretary is computed in such a way as to reduce aggregate Medicare payments to hospitals by an estimated $15-$20 million. Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, HCFA is required to update the wage index every three years beginning in FY 91.

Committee Provision.—The Committee is extremely concerned about the financial status of hospitals most severely affected by HCFA's decision to shift from a blended FY 82-FY84 wage index to an index based on FY 84 data only. Further, the financial stability of many hospitals has been threatened because the data on which area wage calculations are made has not been updated on an annual basis. The Committee has included a provision that requires HCFA to update the area wage index annually, beginning with FY 91. This will assist all hospitals by more accurately reflecting changes in costs of hospital labor and will protect hospitals from experiencing dramatic declines in Medicare reimbursement. The Secretary is also required to assure that revisions in the hospital wage index do not affect aggregate spending levels beginning in FY 91, and to take into account differences in State hospital codes and licensure requirements in computing the hospital wage index, to the extent possible.

FINGER LAKES HOSPITAL WAIVER

Present Law.—The Secretary is authorized to waive Medicare hospital payment rules in a State or substate area that is operating under an alternative hospital reimbursement system affecting all payers. One entity operating under such a waiver is the Finger Lakes Area Hospital Corporation, a four-county area in New York. Under current law, the Secretary cannot terminate the Finger Lakes waiver as long as, for 36-month periods beginning on or after October 1, 1983, aggregate payments for inpatient hospital care in the four-county area are less than they would have been under Medicare payment rules.

Committee Provision.—The Committee provision changes the Finger Lakes waiver test to the cumulative. Aggregate hospital payments under the waiver test will be compared to payments that would have been made under national payment rules for a period beginning October 1, 1983 and ending with the most recent data available. This extension will be effective until October 1, 1991. GAO is required to report to Congress by October 1, 1990 on the status of the Finger Lakes waiver and whether the test should be extended permanently.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

EXCEPTIONS AND ADJUSTMENTS FOR PPS-EXEMPT HOSPITALS

Present Law.—PPS-exempt hospitals are reimbursed using a system of target amounts which are defined as the hospital's base-year costs inflated by a rate of increase limit. Hospitals below the target amount receive a bonus. The current base year for determining target amouts is generally cost reporting periods beginning in FY 1982.

The Secretary is directed to provide an exemption from, or an exception and adjustment to a hospital's target rate if events beyond the hospital's control, or extraordinary circumstances, including changes in case mix, cause a distortion in the hospital's base year costs or annual cost increases.

Committee Provision.—The bill allows the Secretary to adjust a hospital's base year if the Secretary deems it appropriate to assign a new base period which is more representative of a hospital's reasonable and necessary cost of inpatient services.

The bill requires the Secretary to publish instructions within 180 days after enactment specifying the application process to be used in providing exceptions and adjustments in target amounts for hospitals.

Effective Date.—Applies to cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1989.

CORRECTED DETERMINATIONS

Present Law.—The Health Care Financing Administration from time to time identifies errors in data submitted by an individual which, when corrected, lead to a higher wage index for all hospitals in the MSA (or rural area) in which that hospital is located. It is HCFA's policy to correct the wage index prospectively for the remainder of the year if doing so will lead to an increase in hospital payments (no correction is made if this would reduce hospital payments).

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill requires that, when errors are discovered in the wage index computation, payments to affected hospitals be adjusted retroactively to the date on which the erroneous index took effect.

RURAL HEALTH CARE PROVISIONS

Present Law

a. Urban-Rural Payment Differential.—Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS) pays hospitals a different fixed per-discharge rate for each patient. There are currently three rates, which are based on FY 1981 hospitals costs indexed forward: one for hospitals in metropolitan statistical areas with over 1 million population; one for hospitals in other metropolitan statistical areas; and one for rural areas. These rates are further adjusted for factors such as: the patient's diagnosis, the teaching status of the hospital, relative wages in the hospital's geographic area; the extent to which the hospital treats a disproportionate share of low-income Medicare patients, and whether the case was an especially costly or lengthy outlier case. Special payment rules apply to hospitals classified as sole community hospitals and rural referral centers.

When PPS was created in 1983, separate fixed rates were developed for hospitals located in urban and rural areas to reflect the best available data about the relative cost of caring for Medicade patients. Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA 1987), a further distinction was made between hospitals located in large urban areas (over 1 million population) and hospitals in other urban areas. Taking into account more generous increases for hospitals in rural and large urban areas required by OBRA 1987, the basic payment rate for rural hospitals is 12-13% lower than the two urban rates.

b. Regional Referral Centers.—Hospitals designated by the Secretary of HHS as regional referral centers are paid the prospective payment system (PPS) payment rates for "other urban" areas (those with fewer than 1 million persons), rather than rates for rural areas. A hospital may apply for designation as a regional referral center if it is located in a rural area and has more than 275 beds, if its caseload is made up chiefly of patients referred from outside the hospital and its immediate area, or if it is located in a rural area and meets a combination of criteria relating to the number of patients it treats and the severity of their illnesses (known as "discharge" and "casemix" criteria). (Hospitals qualifying on the basis of the discharge and casemix criteria must also meet one of three optional criteria related to the number of specialists on staff, the source of inpatients, and the number of referrals from other hospitals).

Regional referral centers qualify for higher Medicare payments for a period of three years. The hospital must meet the criteria in two of the prior three years. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986, however, directed the Secretary of HHS to allow hospitals qualifying as regional referral centers as of October 21, 1986 to retain that status through cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1989. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 required the Secretary to study and report to Congress on the criteria used for the classification of hospitals as regional referral centers. This report, which was due on March 1, 1989, is not yet complete.

The Secretary of HHS has issued regulations announcing the discharge and casemix criteria for qualification as a regional referral center for FY 1990. Under these criteria, approximately 40 of the current 226 regional referral centers could lose their designation for their first cost reporting period beginning on or after October 1, 1989.

c. Geographical Classification Review Boards.—The Secretary of HHS is required to determine Medicare prospective payment system (PPS) rates for large urban, other urban and rural areas. Urban areas are defined as areas within Metropolitan Statistical Areas (MSAs) (a statistical classification developed by the Office of Management and Budget) or other areas recognized by the Secretary. The Secretary is also required to adjust Medicare payments for area differences in hospital wage levels; the Secretary has also chosen to use MSAs to define hospital wage areas. The Secretary is also authorized to make such other exceptions and adjustments to PPS payment amounts as he deems appropriate.

d. Rural Health Transition Grants.—The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 authorized a program of grants to assist rural hospitals with fewer than 100 beds in developing and implementing projects to modify the type and extent of services they provide. Grants may be used to develop health systems with other providers, diversify services, recruit physicians, or improve management systems. Application for rural health transition grants is made to the Secretary of HHS through the Governor of the State. Grants are limited to $50,000 annually for two years; no more than one-third of a grant can be used for capital expenditures. The program is authorized in FY 1989 and FY 1990 at $15 million and is not authorized thereafter. The FY89 appropriation level was $8.9 million.

e. Telecommunications.—The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 directed the Secretary of HHS to conduct demonstrations of the feasibility of requiring instruction and oversight of rural physicians, in lieu of imposing sanctions, through the use of video communication between rural hospitals and teaching hospitals. No funds under the demonstration may be used for capital items, but payments may be made to physicians consulted via video communications. The Secretary is currently conducting one such demonstration.

f. Interim Protection for Small, Medicare-Dependent Hospitals.—No provision.

g. Disproportionate Share Hospitals.—Hospitals serving a disproportionate share of low-income patients receive additional payments from Medicare under the prospective payment system. ("Low income" patients are those receiving Supplemental Security Income and Medicare, or those receiving Medicaid). Hospitals with more than 100 beds that are located in urban areas, and hospitals with more than 500 beds located in rural areas, qualify for disproportionate share status if at least 15% of their patients qualify as low-income. These hospitals receive additional Medicare payments proportional to their share of low-income patients. Hospitals with fewer than 100 beds that are located in urban areas must have at least a 40% share of low-income patients, and receive a 5% add-on for each Medicare case. Hospitals with fewer than 500 beds located in rural areas must have at least a 45% share of low income patients and receive a 4% add-on for each Medicare case. According to CBO, rural hospitals are estimated to receive 1.7 percent of Medicare disproportionate share payments in FY1988.

h. Rural Wage Index.—The fixed payment per case under Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS) is modified by a wage index, based on hospital survey data, which measures the relative wage levels in hospitals in a given geographic area. The wage index for rural hospitals reflects the wage costs of all hospitals in a State that are not located in an urban area.

Committee Provision

a. Urban-Rural Payment Differential.—The bill requires the Secretary of HHS to design a legislative proposal to eliminate the system of determining separate payment rates for hospitals located in large urban, small urban and other urban areas. The proposal is to include a transition period which would begin eliminating the differential rates in FY1992 and would eliminate the differential completely by the beginning of FY1995. The proposal will address recommended modifications in PPS' other current payment adjustments, the use of data more recent than FY1981 to set PPS rates, and modifications in payment to PPS-exempt hospitals. The Secretary is required to recommend a methodology to reflect the severity of illness of different patients within the same diagnosis-related groups. The Secretary is also required to submit extensive impact analyses with the proposal, which will be due to Congress by October 1, 1990. The Secretary's report will be reviewed by the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission and CBO, who will report to Congress by April 1, 1991.

b. Regional Referral Centers.—The bill provides that any hospital classified as a regional referral center as of September 30, 1989, including hospitals so classified as a result of OBRA 1986, shall retain their classification for cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1989, and before October 1, 1992.

c. Geographical Classification Review Board.—The bill creates a medicare Geographical Classification Review Board to consider the applications of hospitals (either urban or rural) which wish to be reclassified into a specific urban area, or from one rural area to another, for the purposes of Medicare payment. The Board consists of five members, to be appointed by the Secretary within 60 days after enactment, including one member of the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission, two representatives of rural hospitals, and one member knowledgeable in the field of hospital costs. Applications for reclassification will be due to the Board on January 31 of each year; the Board's decision will be rendered by June 1. Negative findings may be appealed to the Secretary of HHS by July 1, with a decision due from the Secretary by September 1. There would be no administrative or judicial review of the Secretary's decision. decisions will take effect October 1.

The Board will be required to take into account (using guidelines published by the Secretary) relative wage levels and changing economic circumstances in evaluating the hospitals' requests, as well as the effects on access to inpatient hospital care by Medicare beneficiaries and the appropriateness of criteria used to classify areas as New England Metropolitan County Areas.

d. Rural Health Transition Grants.—The bill authorizes $25 million for each of FY90-92. It allows the Secretary to waive the $50,000 limit on a transition grant if he or she determines that a larger amount is necessary to assist a hospital in implementing a transition project. The bill extends the two-year limit to three years. It modifies current law so that applications for transition grants are submitted directly to the Secretary, although the hospital will be required to submit a copy of the application to the Governor's office, and comments will be received from the Governor. The bill adds to the type of arrangements hospitals may explore, the use of shared services arrangements.

e. Telecommunications.—The bill requires the Secretary of HHS to enter into agreements with and make grants to between five to ten hospitals to conduct three-year demonstrations providing telecommunications instruction and consultation to physicians in rural areas which have been designated as health manpower shortage areas. Grants may not be used for capital equipment. Projects are to begin by July 1, 1990. The Secretary is required to provide an interim report on the projects to Congress by January 1, 1992, and a final report by January 1, 1993.

f. Interim Protection for Small, Medicare-Dependent Hospitals.—The bill requires the Secretary to make an additional payment to small, medicare-dependent hospitals where necessary to assure that Medicare payments are at least equal to the reasonable cost of serving Medicare patients. Small Medicare-dependent hospitals are those with 100 or fewer beds which are paid rural rates under PPS and which depend on Medicare for at least 60 percent of their patient days or discharges. In determining reasonable cost, the Secretary is prohibited from imposing limits based on average costs incurred by hospitals. Additional payments under this provision are available for cost reporting periods beginning during FY90 and ending before FY92. For hospitals receiving periodic interim payments (PIP), additional amounts are to be include in the PIP payments.

g. Disproportionate Share Hospitals.—The Committee bill amends the current criteria under which rural hospitals may qualify for a disproportionate share adjustment in PPS payments. Effective for cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1989, rural hospitals with 100 beds or more and those classified as sole community hospitals will qualify for the adjustment if they have a disproportionate patient percentage of at least 20 percent. For sole community hospitals, the bill also increases the amount of the payment adjustment to 10 percent.

h. Rural Wage Index.—The bill requires the Secretary of HHS to study and report to Congress by January 1, 1991 on the feasibility and advisability of modifying the hospital wage index to reflect alternative definitions of labor markets on a regional, rather than urban/rural basis, including the possibility of dividing rural areas into urbanized and non-urbanized areas and dividing urban areas into inner city and suburban area. As part of the study, the Secretary will also be required to assess the effect on the level of the hospital wage index of including data from hospital-based nursing homes. The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission is required to review the Secretary's report and report its analysis to Congress by July 1, 1991.

MEDICARE "BUY IN" FOR WORKING DISABLED

Present Law.—In order to qualify for disability insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act, an individual must be determined to be unable to engage in substantial gainful activity by reason of a medically determinable physical or mental impairment that has lasted or can be expected to last at least 12 months.

After an individual has been entitled to disability insurance benefits for two years, he or she becomes entitled to benefits under part A of the Medicare program. An individual who is entitled to part A benefits is eligible to enroll in part B of the Medicare program, subject to payment of a monthly premium.

If an individual has earnings in excess of specified limits, he or she is considered to be engaged in substantial gainful activity and therefore no longer disabled.

During a nine-month "trial work" period, services and earnings above the limits do not affect an individual's status under the disability insurance program. Entitlement to benefits under part A of the Medicare program and eligibility for part B benefits, continue for an additional 39 months after the close of the trial work period. At the end of this period, Medicare coverage ceases.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill permits an individual who loses Medicare benefits as a result of substantial gainful activity to enroll in part A of the Medicare program, subject to payment of the same premiums that are applicable to individuals currently eligible to enroll. (If the individual enrolled in part A, he or she could enroll or continue enrollment in part B).

The bill requires State Medicaid programs to pay all or part of an individual's part A premiums if the individual's income does not exceed 250 percent of the poverty line for a family of the size involved and if the individual meets the SSI resource standard for an individual (or a couple, when appropriate). A Medicaid program will be required to pay 100 percent of these premiums for an individual with income that does not exceed 150 percent of poverty, but could require an individual with income exceeding that level to pay a part of the premium, based upon an income-related sliding scale. A State could opt to cover individuals with incomes between 250 percent and 350 percent of poverty, but would be required to impose an income-related contribution to the part A premium for these individuals.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

STUDY OF SNF COST LIMITS

Current Law.—Most skilled nursing facilities (SNFs) are reimbursed by Medicare on a reasonable cost basis, subject to certain limits.

These limits differ, depending upon whether a facility is located in an urban area or a rural area, and whether it is free-standing or hospital-based. They are derived from the mean per diem routine service costs for the type of facility involved.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill requires the Comptroller General to study and report to the Congress on the appropriateness of different cost limits for hospital-based and free-standing SNFs.

The Committee notes that HCFA failed to publish an update of SNF cost limits in 1988 and expects that these limits should be revised on an annual basis.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

PART A "BUY-IN" FOR QMBS

Current Law.—Section 301 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (MCCA) requires State Medicaid plans to pay Medicare cost-sharing (including part B, and where applicable, part A premiums) for elderly individuals who are eligible to participate in the Medicare program and whose income and resources are below a specified level.

Most elderly individuals are entitled to benefits under part A of the Medicare program by reason of having paid the hospital insurance payroll tax on wages earned during their years of employment; and individuals with an insufficient "earnings record" may enroll in part A and pay a monthly premium during the period in which he or she is actually covered for benefits.

Entitlement to benefits under part B of the Medicare program depends upon enrollment and payment of a monthly premium during an individual's coverage period.

An individual may enroll in parts A and B only during his or her initial enrollment period, or during a subsequent general enrollment period. General enrollment periods occur during the first quarter of each calendar year.

If an individual delays enrollment beyond the initial enrollment period, his or her coverage will be delayed until the July 1 following enrollment, and the amount of the monthly premium may be increased as a penalty for late enrollment.

Although section 301 of MCCA waives the enrollment limitations and penalties for QMBs under part B of the Medicare program, it does not waive them under part A. As a result, part A coverage may be delayed significantly for some QMBs, and State Medicaid plans will be required to pay not only the basic part A premium, but also penalties for late enrollment.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill authorizes States to enter into (or amend) agreements with the Secretary to enroll QMBs under part A of the Medicare program in the same manner as they are enrolled in part B.

Effective Date.—Effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

INTERMEDIATE SANCTIONS FOR PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITALS UNDER MEDICARE

Present Law.—If the Secretary determines that a skilled nursing facility or intermediate care facility does not meet the conditions of participation for the Medicare program, the Secretary may stop payments for new patients until the deficiencies are corrected, rather than decertifying the facility. This option is available in cases where the deficiencies do not immediately jeopardize the health and safety of the patients. Current law has no such provisions for inpatient psychiatric hospitals.

Committee Provision.—If the Secretary determines that a psychiatric hospital fails to meet Medicare's participation requirements and these deficiencies immediately jeopardize the health and safety of its patients, the Secretary is required to terminate the hospital's Medicare participation agreement. If there is no immediate jeopardy to the health and safety of the patients, the Secretary may choose to terminate Medicare's participation agreement with the hospital or deny Medicare payments for individuals admitted after the effective date of the finding, or both.

If non-compliance continues for 3 months after the initial finding, the Secretary must deny Medicare payments for new admissions. If the non-compliance continues for 6 months, the Secretary must deny Medicare payments until the hospital achieves compliance. Similar intermediate sanction authority is provided for State Medicaid programs.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

MEDICARE HOSPICE

Present Law.—Hospice benefits are available to Medicare beneficiaries who are certified by a physician within 2 days of admission as being terminally ill. The patient must waive eligibility for all other Medicare benefits although limited reenrollment is available. Hospices are paid one of four daily rates for the patient, depending on the type of care he receives that day (i.e., routine home care, continuous home care inpatient respite care, general inpatient care). The hospice is also subject to an aggregate cap on Medicare payments, which is annually indexed by law to the medical component of the CPI. The Secretary is required to make "appropriate" adjustments to the daily payment rates on an annual basis, and he has not increased the daily rates since a Congressionally-mandated increase in April 1986.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill increases the hospice payment rates now in effect by 20% effective October 1, 1989, and annually indexes the rates thereafter to the increase in the hospital market basket. The bill directs the Secretary of HHS to conduct a study of high-cost hospice beneficiaries and report his recommendations to Congress. The bill also clarifies that hospice beneficiaries are not required to waive their entitlement to Medicare's home intravenous therapy or respite benefits. In addition, the bill allows certification that the patient is terminally ill up to eight days after admission as long as verbal certification is obtained within two days.

Effective Date.—Enactment, except amendments pertaining to waiving entitlement to certain services and certification of terminal illness effective for care and services furnished on or after January 1, 1990.

CERTIFICATION AND RECERTIFICATION BY NURSES

Present Law.—Medicare covers the services of a certified nurse midwife if the services would be covered if furnished by a physician. Payment for these services is made directly to the nurse midwife but must be made on an assignment-related basis and is based on a fee schedule set no higher than 65% of physician charges. (The services of certified nurse midwives are also included within the definition of covered nurse practitioner and physician assistant services provided by a rural health clinic).

Medicare covers anesthesia and related care performed by certified registered nurse anesthetists (CRNAs) licensed by the State who meet requirements for education and training. Payment is made directly to the CRNA on the basis of a fee schedule and must be made on an assignment-related basis.

Medicare covers the services of nurse practitioners in an HMO or rural health clinic if the services would be covered if furnished by a physician or incident to a physician's service. For rural health clinics, payment is included in the flat rate per visit Medicare pays to these clinics. Medicare will also cover the services of a nurse practitioner incident to a physician's service, but payment is made as part of the physician's bill.

Committee Provision.—The bill provides that, under Medicare, nurse practitioners or clinical nurse specialists may certify or recertify a patient's need for skilled nursing facility care. The provision specifies that only nurses who are not directly or indirectly employed by the nursing facility certify or recertify the need for care. The Secretary is authorized to reduce levels of payments otherwise made to providers under Medicare and Medicaid to ensure budget neutrality.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

PROHIBITION OF BALANCE BILLING BY PART A PROVIDERS

Affected Program.—Medicare, Part A.

Current Law.—Under current law, facilities subject to cost limits are provided an exceptions process under which, if a facility's actual costs are less than the cost limit, the facility may apply for the right to "balance bill" Medicare beneficiaries for the difference between its actual costs and the cost limit.

Originally enacted primarily for the relief of hospitals, this process applies only to skilled nursing facilities (SNFs) and home health agencies (HHAs) under since most inpatient hospital services are now paid for under a prospective payment system.

Proposal.—Eliminate the exceptions process and require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to transmit to the Congress a legislative proposal for paying for skilled nursing facility and home health agency services under prospect payment systems. The proposal would be due no later than June 30, 1990.

SOLE COMMUNITY HOSPITALS

Present Law.—Under Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS), hospitals designated as sole community hospitals (SCHs) receive special treatment. A hospital qualifies as a sole community hospital under regulatory criteria issued by the Secretary of HHS. To qualify as an SCH, a hospital must either have been designated as an SCH before PPS began, or must meet one of three criteria:

It is located more than 50 miles from like hospitals; or

It is located 25–50 miles from like hospitals and it either (1) serves 75% of the patients in its market area or (2) is isolated by topography or weather conditions for a month or more each year or (3) it has fewer than 50 beds and would serve more than 75% of its market area except that some patients seek specialized care unavailable at the hospital; or

It is located 15–25 miles from other hospitals and is isolated by topography or weather conditions for a month or more each year.

The Secretary of HHS has published final regulations that would restructure these criteria so that all hospitals located more than 35 miles from a like hospital could qualify as SCHs. The Secretary is seeking comments on changing the criteria for hospitals between 25–35 miles from the nearest hospitals from the current criteria used for hospitals 25–50 miles away, but has made no formal proposal.

Hospitals qualifying as SCHs are paid a blended PPS rate based on 75% of their hospital-specific 1981 cost per case, trended forward for inflation, and 25% of the PPS rate for the Federal region in which the hospital is located. SCHs are also eligible for an additional payment adjustment through FY1990 if, for reasons beyond their control, they experience an annual decline in patient volume of greater than 5 percent (this adjustment is also available to a hospital that qualifies as an SCH but chooses not to be paid as an SCH). SCHs are also eligible for an additional payment adjustment to their hospital-specific rates if they add new services or facilities (this adjustment expires at the end of FY1989, but HHS has proposed extending it indefinitely by regulation). Finally, SCHs are exempt from percentage reductions in Medicare's payment of reasonable costs of hospital capital for FY1989.

(1) The bill requires the Secretary to classify as a sole community hospital any hospital located more than 35 miles from another hospital. The Secretary is required to classify as a sole community hospital any hospital located between 25 and 35 miles from another hospital if it serves at least 50 percent of Medicare beneficiaries who seek inpatient care within a 35-mile radius of the hospital (or the hospital's service area, if larger). In calculating whether a hospital meets this 50 percent rule, a hospital with fewer than 50 beds will be deemed to meet the requirement if its fiscal intermediary certifies that it would have met the requirement had some individuals not been forced to seek unavailable specialty services outside the service area. The Secretary is required to classify as a sole community hospital any hospital located between 15 and 35 miles from another hospital if other hospitals are inaccessible for at least one month of the year due to local topography or severe weather conditions. The Secretary, in developing criteria for classification as a sole community hospital, is required to take into account the time needed to travel to the nearest alternative source of appropriate inpatient care. The bill clarifies that sole community hospital status is retained by a hospital until circumstances change or the hospital requests revocation.

(2) The bill requires that, in computing payment amounts for sole community hospitals for cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1989, the Secretary base the 75% hospital specific portion on the greater of the current basis (FY1982 data) or, at the option of the hospital, information from a more recent hospital cost reporting period. Similarly, the bill requires that the 25% Federal rate be based on the greater of regional or national DRG payment rates. The Secretary is required to make an additional payment adjustment to sole community hospitals to ensure that the total amount paid to the hospital under Medicare is not less than the reasonable cost of those services for SCHs located more than 35 miles from the nearest hospital. (The Secretary will be prohibited from applying limits based on the average cost of groups of hospitals).

(3) The bill makes permanent the availability of a volume adjustment and an adjustment for new services and facilities to sole community hospitals, whether or not they choose to be paid under sole community hospital provisions.

(4) The bill extends the exemption of sole community hospitals from reductions in Medicare payments for hospital capital through FY90, and makes the exemption available to sole community hospitals whether or not they choose to be paid under sole community hospital provisions.

The committee directs the Secretary, in computing payments to sole community hospitals, to recognize the special needs of sole community hospitals that are also designated as regional referral centers and that have entered into merger agreements with additional sole community hospitals.

DENTISTS AS MEDICAL STAFF DIRECTORS

Present Law.—Hospitals must have in effect bylaws with respect to their physician staffs. While Medicare law defines "physician" to include doctors of dental medicine or dental surgery, Medicare regulations require that the responsibility for organization and conduct of a hospital's medical staff under the bylaws must be assigned only to an individual doctor of medicine or osteopathy.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision provides that hospitals with doctors of dental surgery or dental medicine shall be considered to meet requirements for assignment of the responsibility for organization and conduct of the medical staff, if the hospital is located in a State which allows dentists to serve as hospital medical staff directors.

MEDICARE ECONOMIC INDEX

Present law.—Medicare pays for physician services based on the lowest of the physician's actual charge, the physician's customary charge, or the prevailing charge level in the area. The prevailing charge level is adjusted annually to reflect changes in the Medicare economic Index (MEI).

In recent years, the increase in the MEI has been legislatively determined. OBRA of 1987 established the increase in the MEI at 3.6 percent for primary care services and 1 percent for other physician services for 1988, and at 3.0 and 1 percent for those services, respectively, for 1989. Physician services that are treated as primary care services include office medical services, emergency department services, home medical services, and nursing home services.

In the absence of legislative action, the MEI increase for 1990 will be 5.3 percent for all physician services.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision increases the MEI for 1990 by 5.3 percent for primary care services, and 0 percent for other physician services. It delays the update until April 1, 1990.

REDUCTIONS FOR OVERVALUED PROCEDURES

Present law.—OBRA 1987 provided for the reduction of prevailing charges for 11 overpriced procedures; the reductions were 2 percent across the board plus an additional sliding scale reduction of up to 15 percent. Prevailing charges for an overpriced procedure could not be reduced below 85 percent of the frequency-weighted national average prevailing charge for that procedure. The overpriced procedures were identified by the Physician Payment Review Commission (PhysPRC) at the request of Congress.

OBRA 1986 imposed limits on the amount a physician who does not accept assignment may charge a patient above the amount paid by Medicare; these limits are referred to as Maximum Allowable Actual Charges (MAACs). OBRA 1987 provided for a special limit on actual charges for overpriced procedures in order to reflect the reductions made in the prevailing charges for those procedures. The special limit was equal to 125 percent of the reduced prevailing charge plus ½ of the difference between the 125 percent level and the physician's MAAC for the preceeding year. In subsequent years, the special limit was equal to 125 percent of the reduced prevailing charge.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision reduces the prevailing charges of specified overvalued procedures by ⅓ of the difference between the prevailing charge and the estimated fee schedule amount for the procedure under a Resource Based Relative Value Scale (RB RVS). The maximum reduction would be 15 percent.

A procedure would be considered overvalued if it has been surveyed for the Hsiao study and the estimated national average allowed charge exceeds the estimated fee schedule amount under a Resource Based Relative Value Scale (RB RVS) by at least 120 percent.

Effective date.—April 1, 1990.

PAYMENT FOR RADIOLOGY AND ANESTHESIA SERVICES

Present Law.—OBRA 1987 provided for establishment of a fee schedule for radiology services based on a relative value scale, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1989. Payments for radiology services are based on the lesser of (1) actual charges, or (2) a fee schedule derived by multiplying a local conversion factor by the number of relative value units assigned to the particular service. The conversion factors were calculated in a budget-neutral manner from radiology-specific reimbursement codes.

The fee schedule applies to services provided by radiologists (board certified or board-eligible radiologists, and physicians with one-half of their Medicare charges for radiology services). Radiology services billed by other physicians are reimbursed under the reasonable charge methodology.

OBRA 1987 also provided for the establishment of a fee schedule for anesthesia services based upon a relative value guide, effective for services rendered on or after January 1, 1989. Payments for anesthesia services are based on the lesser of (1) actual charges, (2) the customary charge conversion factor multiplied by the total number of base units and time units for a particular service, or (3) the prevailing charge conversion factor multiplied by the total number of base units and time units. Base units are assigned on the basis of the relative value of the service, while time units are assigned on the basis of time required to perform the service. The conversion factors were calculated in a budget neutral manner.

OBRA 1986 provided for direct reimbursement of certified registered nurse anesthetists (CRNAs). Under regulations implementing the fee schedules for both anesthesiologists and CRNAs, the time for anesthesiology services is billed in 15-minute or 30-minute units, with partial units rounded up to the next full unit.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision reduces by 4 percent the prevailing charges (and fee schedule amounts, as applicable) for physician's services that are radiology services. The limits on actual charges for the services involved would be adjusted to reflect the reductions. It also modifies the method by which time units are measured for purposes of payment for anesthesia services. Payment would be based on the actual time expended rather than rounding up to the next full 15- or 30-minute unit.

Effective Date.—April 1, 1990.

CERTIFIED REGISTERED NURSE ANESTHETISTS

Present Law.—Effective January 1, 1989, the services of a certified nurse anesthetist (CRNA) are paid for under a fee schedule. This fee schedule provides for separate conversion factors depending upon whether the CRNA is medically directed by a supervising physician. The conversion factors also vary by geographic area. The current conversion factor for medically directed services averages approximately $8.50 for medically directed services and $14.00 for services that are not medically directed. CRNAs must accept assignment for their services.

Under regulations proposed in January, 1989 and currently being implemented through carrier instructions, HCFA has eliminated payment for medical direction of a CRNA by the same physician who performs the surgical procedure in which he or she supervises the CRNA. Reimbursement to physicians, including anesthethiologists and surgeons, is not prohibited in cases where the physican is not performing the surgical procedure during which the physican is supervising the CRNA. However, payments are reduced for physicians supervising more than four procedures at the same time.

Committee Provision.—Subject to the limitation specified below, uniform national conversion factors for CRNA services for 1990 would be set at $14 and $21 for medically directed and non-medically directed services, respectively.

The conversion factors would be subject to a cap in each locality equal to the conversion factor that applies for physician anesthesiology services in the locality.

The proposed regulation eliminating fees for medical direction of CRNAs by the same physician performing the surgery in which the CRNA is being supervised is codified and physicians submitting claims for medical direction in violation of the prohibition would be subject to civil money penalties.

Effective Date.—April 1, 1990.

NUCLEAR MEDICINE

Present Law.—OBRA 1987 provided for establishment of a fee schedule for radiology services based on a relative value scale, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1989. The fee schedule applies to services provided by board certified radiologists and for physicians for whom radiology services constitute half their Medicare billings. The relative value scale adopted for this purpose was developed by the American College of Radiology.

Nuclear medicine is a medical specialty in which radioactive materials are administered to patients to diagnose and sometimes treat disease. While nuclear medicine procedures are billed under radiology codes and are subject to the fee schedule, most physicians who specialize in nuclear medicine are not radiologists.

Some radiologists perform a few types of nuclear medicine procedures. ACR apparently used charges for these procedures in establishing relative values under the fee schedule.

Physicians specializing in nuclear medicine perform a wider range of services, however, and handle more complex cases. Thus, they maintain that the fee schedule does not reflect the differences in the practice of nuclear medicine by specialists and non-specialist radiologists.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision exempts physicians specializing in nuclear medicine from the radiology fee schedule until 1992. They would be reimbursed under the reasonable charge methodology during the period of the exemption.

Effective Date.—January 1, 1990.

CARDIOVASCULAR AND INTERVENTIONAL RADIOLOGISTS

Present Law.—OBRA 1987 provided for establishment of a fee schedule for radiology services based on a relative value scale, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1989. The relative value scale adopted for this purpose was developed by the American College of Radiology (ACR).

Cardiovascular and interventional radiologists furnished services, such as angiographies, that involve more than one procedure. Typically, these procedures include injection of a contrast medium and supervision and interpretation of the image obtained.

If the two procedures are performed by different physicians, they may be billed separately, using both a surgery code and a radiology code. The radiology fee schedule requires a cardiovascular or interventional radiologist who performs both procedures to bill for them under a single "common procedure" code.

Although ACR included charge data drawn from some surgery codes in calculating the relative values for "complete procedures" under the fee schedule, the data that was used may include lower charges billed by other physicians using the same codes. In addition, charge data for the relevant surgery codes may not have been used in calculating the conversion factor under the fee schedule.

Before the establishment of the fee schedule, many cardiovascular and interventional radiologists billed separately for each procedure. In recognition of this fact, HCFA has permitted these physicians to continue this practice during 1989.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision authorizes those cardiovascular and interventional radiologists who have billed separately for related procedures during 1989 to continue the practice during 1990.

Effective Date.—January 1, 1990.

PORTABLE X-RAY SERVICES

Present Law.—OBRA 1987 provided for establishment of a fee schedule for radiology services based on a relative value scale, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1989. The relative value scale adopted for this purpose was developed by the American College of Radiology.

The fee schedule applies to services furnished by or under the supervision of a physician who is a board-certified or board-eligible radiologist, or who bills at least 50 percent of his or her Medicare part B charges for radiology services.

Portable X-ray services are radiology services usually furnished by non-physician technologists who bring X-ray equipment to the home of the patient. These services are covered by the fee schedule if they are furnished by or under the supervision of a physician to whom the fee schedule applies.

Although portable X-ray services are billed under the same procedure codes as other radiology services, they involve special equipment and additional time to perform. In recognition of this fact, HCFA has established a separate conversion factor for these services.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision excludes portable X-ray service subject to the radiology fee schedule from any reductions in the fee schedule amounts for 1990. It requires HCFA to study and report to the Congress on the costs of furnishing portable X-ray services and on the appropriateness of their inclusion under the fee schedule.

Effective Date.—April 1, 1990.

CUSTOMARY AND PREVAILING CHARGES

Current Law

(a) Customary Charge for New Physicians.—OBRA 1987 specified that the customary charge screens for new physicians (who have not been in practice long enough to have sufficient actual charge data) are to be set at a level no higher than 80 percent of the prevailing charge for the service. The provision does not apply to primary care services and services furnished in rural health manpower shortage areas.

(b) Limitation on Amounts for Certain Services Furnished by More Than One Specialty.—Calculations of prevailing charges take into account existing patterns of charges by different physician specialties. Many carriers have different prevailing charges for the same service when performed by different specialties.

Committee Provision

(a) Customary Charge for New Physicians.—The Committee bill sets the customary charge at a level no higher than 85 percent of the prevailing charge level for one year. Subsequently, payments will be made according to the fee schedule established under the physician payment reform provisions.

(b) Limitation on Amounts for Certain Services Furnished by More Than One Specialty.—The Committee bill limits the prevailing charge for certain services to the prevailing charge applicable to the specialty, designated by the Secretary, that furnishes the service most frequently nationwide. The Secretary is to make designations for services with high Part B expenditures whose prevailing charges differ by specialty.

The bill specifies that nonparticipating physicians subject to a prevailing charge reductions as a result of this provision are subject to limits on actual charges. The physician may not charge more than 125% of the reduced prevailing charge plus one-half of the difference between the previous year's maximum allowable actual charge and such reduced prevailing charge.

Effective Date.—Applies to services furnished for the 9-month period beginning April 1, 1990.

PHYSICIAN PAYMENT REFORM

Current Law

(a) Determination of Physician Payments.—Medicare pays for physician services on a fee-for-service basis under which separate payments are made for each individual service rendered. The amount Medicare pays is known as the reasonable or "approved" charge. Generally, the approved charge for a service is the smallest of the actual charge for the service by the physician; the physician's customary charge for the service; and the prevailing charge for the same service in the payment locality. Anesthesiology and radiology claims are paid under uniform national relative value scales, with conversion factors varying among geographic localities. Prevailing charges for non-participating physicians are 95 percent of those for participating physicians. Medicare payments are 80 percent of the approved charge.

(b) Overhead and Malpractice Components.—No provision.

(c) Geographic Adjustment of Overhead and Malpractice Components.—The current geographic variation in fees is due to historical patterns of charges under the usual, customary, and reasonable payment system.

(d) Payment Localities.—Carriers define the prevailing charge localities. These localities are usually political or economic subdvisions of a State. In some cases, a single prevailing charge locality is used for an entire State. There are approximately 240 prevailing charge localities nationwide.

(e) Conversion Factor.—No provision.

(f) Customary Charge Limits and Specialty Differentials.—The purpose of customary and prevailing charge limits is to determine Medicare payment levels based on individual physician charges to their patients. Medicare compares a physician's actual charge to what he or she has billed other patients in the past, and to what other physicians charge for the same services. Customary charges are physician-specific. The prevailing charges are defined by examining the charges of groups of physicians practicing within defined geographic localities. Carriers define which specialty groups are aggregated to determine prevailing charges. Most carriers recognize specialty differential for some, but not necessarily all services.

(g) Transition to Resource-Based Fee Schedule.—No provision.

(h) Periodic Recalibration of Fee Schedule.—No provision.

(i) Incentive Payments to Physicians in Health Manpower Shortage Areas.—Incentive payments, equal to 5 percent of allowed charges, are made for physicians' services furnished in a certain rural health manpower shortage areas. After January 1, 1991 these incentive payments will be expanded to include physicians' services furnished in certain urban health manpower shortage areas.

(j) Medicare Volume Performance Standards.—No provision.

(k) Updating Fees.—Customary and prevailing charge limits are updated annually on January 1. Carriers determine each physician's customary charges based on the actual charges submitted for each service during a preceding 12-month period. Prevailing charges for each service are then calculated based on customary charges. The annual update in the prevailing charges is limited to increases in the Medicare Economic Index (MEI). The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (OBRA) of 1987 provided for greater change in the MEI for certain primary care services than for other services for 1988 and 1989.

(l) Reporting Requirements.—The Secretary is implementing a Common Working

File to provide linked Part A and Part B claims data from carriers and intermediaries. This system is designed to provide data to HCFA in a timely fashion.

(m) Beneficiary Protections.—A beneficiary may assign his or her right to payment from Medicare to the physician. In the case of an assigned claim, the physician agrees to accept Medicare's approved charge as payment in full. The physician bills the program directly, is paid 80 percent of the allowed charge, and then bills the patient for the 20 percent coinsurance. In the case of a non-assigned claim, the beneficiary sends the claim to Medicare, is reimbursed for 80 percent of the allowed charge, and is responsible for paying the physician the 20 percent coinsurance plus any difference between the actual charge and the approved charge.

A participating physician voluntarily enters into an agreement with the Secretary to accept assignment on all services provided to all Medicare beneficiaries for the following year. Non-participating physicians may accept assignment on a claim-by-claim basis. All physicians are required to accept assignment for Medicare patients who are also eligible for Medicaid.

Medicare provides incentives to encourage physicians to become participating physicians, including a 5 percent differential between the adjusted prevailing charges for participating and non-participating physicians. In addition, actual charges for non-participating physicians are limited by the maximum allowable actual charge (MAAC). Non-participating physicians whose actual charge for a service in the preceding year equal or exceeds 115% of the current year's prevailing charge may increase their actual charge by no more than 1 percent. Non-participating physicians whose actual charge for the preceding year is below 115% of the current year's prevailing charge may increase their actual charge over a period of time until their MAAC for the service equals 115% of the prevailing charge.

Where Medicare payments for overpriced procedures have been reduced, the statute provides for limits on charges at 125 percent of the reduced prevailing charge, after a one-year phase-in.

OBRA of 1987 provided for special limits on actual charges for radiology services paid under the radiology fee schedule and provided by non-participating physicians. The limits on actual charges for radiology services is 125 percent of the fee schedule amount in 1989, 120 percent of the fee schedule amount in 1990, and 115 percent in 1991.

(n) Public and Beneficiary Education.—No provision.

(o) Studies.—No provision.

(p) Outcomes Research Program.—The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 provided for the establishment of a patient outcome assessment research program, administered by the National Center for Health Services Research and Health Care Technology. This program includes: reorganization of Medicare claims data, assessments of medical care, evaluations of patient outcomes, and other activities. OBRA of 1986 authorized to be appropriated from the Medicare Trust Funds $6 million for FY 1987, and $7.5 million for each of FY 1988 and 1989. These authorization amounts were increased by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 and the authorization was extended through FY 1991.

Explanation of Proposal

(a) Determination of Physician Payments.—The Secretary will establish a resource-base fee schedule as the basis of payment for physicians' services under Medicare, beginning January 1, 1992, and provide for notice and comment in the Federal Register. The fee for each service will be divided into three components: (1) a relative work component, established by the Secretary using the results of the Relative Value Study at Harvard University, which reflects the physician's time and intensity of effort; (2) an overhead component which reflects overhead costs (non-physician inputs) excluding malpractice expenses; and (3) a malpractice component. These components would be combined using an additive model to produce a single relative value for each service in each locality. The basic elements of the fee schedule will be exempted from judicial and administrative review as was provided for under the hospital PPS system.

The work component would reflect activities prior to and after direct patient contact. For surgical services, payment would be based on a uniform national definition of surgical global fees. The Secretary would have discretion to develop a global definition which includes pre-operative and post-operative physicians' services with respect to surgical procedures as well as services related to the surgery furnished after discharge. With respect to physician visits and consultations, the Secretary would have discretion to establish an appropriate uniform national coding structure. In developing his recommendations for visit codes, the Secretary shall conduct a study of visit codes and consult the PPRC, the AMA CPT-4 editorial panel, and other appropriate physician groups. The Secretary would be authorized to include time in visit codes after completion of a study on the subject.

In developing the resource-based fee schedule, the Secretary would have discretion to utilize appropriate methods necessary to extend the resource-based fee schedule to all procedures such as those for low volume codes and non-surveyed procedures. The Secretary also would have discretion to establish ancillary policies to make the fee schedule operational such as policies regarding modifiers and local codes.

The current Relative Value Guide or conversion factor or both for anesthesia services could be modified in a manner as the Secretary determines to be appropriate, to be compatible with implementation of the resource-based fee schedule, after consultation with the relevant professional groups and the PPRC. The current RVS for radiologist services would be modified by adjusting the relative values, as a class, to bring them into line with the resource-based fee schedule generally. This would retain the relationships among the relative values under the current RVS for radiologist services.

Medicare payment would be 80 percent of the lesser of 1) the actual charge or 2) the resource-based fee schedule amount or the blended fee schedule payment amount during the transition to the fee schedule. For non-participating physicians, the payment amount would be 95 percent of the amount that would apply for participating physicians.

Services subject to the fee schedule would include all physician services' including chiropractors, oral surgeons, optometrists, and podiatrists defined under sections 1861(s)(1), (2)(A) and (D), (3), and (4), other than clinical diagnostic and other services the Secretary may choose to exclude. Services furnished by non-physician practitioners such as physician assistants, certified registered nurse anesthetists, clinical psychologists, and nurse midwives would continue to be paid at their current rates and would receive normal MEI increases. PPRC will conduct a study of whether future inclusion of such practitioners within the fee schedule is appropriate.

Prior to the beginning of a year beginning in 1992, in conjunction with sending physicians letters providing an opportunity for participation, the Secretary shall send information on the fee schedule amounts, for services commonly performed by the physician, for participating and non-participating physicians and the associated balance billing limit.

(b) Overhead and Malpractice Components.—Using the best data available, the Secretary initially would estimate the average work percentage, overhead percentage, and malpractice percentage for all procedures on a national average basis. Based on the most recent data available, the national average percentages would be approximately 40% for overhead and 6% for malpractice. The Secretary would be authorized to determine an overhead percentage and a malpractice percentage for each procedure code or classes of procedures on a specialty-weighted basis after he determines that accurate data are available.

(c) Geographic Adjustment of Overhead and Malpractice Components.—A geographic practice cost index (GPCI) would be applied only to the overhead and malpractice components (currently estimated together at 46 percent) of the resource-based portion of the blended fee, not to the work component. The GPCI would reflect geographic differences in the cost of practice among payment areas. Initially, the same GPCI would be used for both the overhead and malpractice cost portions of the fee. The Secretary is authorized to apply separate geographic indices for the overhead and malpractice components after the Secretary determines it is technically feasible to do so.

(d) Payment Localities.—Initially, existing carrier localities would not be changed. PPRC would conduct a study on the desirability and feasibility of using MSA or other geographic areas such as States for payment purposes. After completion of this study, the Secretary would be given authority to change geographic payment areas, in a budget neutral manner, at the beginning of a year.

(e) Conversion Factor.—The relative values for each procedure in each locality would be multiplied by a conversion factor to determine the fee schedule beginning on January 1992. The initial conversion factor would be determined by the Secretary and would be budget neutral to the estimated aggregate payments that would otherwise be made. In order to assure budget neutrality the Committee intends that the Secretary would deflate local charges appropriately by the practice cost GPCI. As described in section (k) below, during the transition to the resource-based fee schedule, the Secretary would given discretion to make adjustments in the conversion factor to maintain budget-neutrality. Beginning in 1992, the conversion factor would be updated annually according to Medicare volume performance standard system described in sections (j) and (k) below.

(f) Adjusted Prevailing Charge.—The Secretary would make budget-neutral adjustments to local prevailing charges in order to establish an adjusted prevailing charge taking into account the elimination of customary charge limits and the elimination of specialty differentials and any other payment limitations imposed by law or regulation. The adjusted prevailing charge would be effective for payments beginning January 1, 1991 and would constitute Phase I of the transition to the resource-based fee schedule, described in section (g) below. The purpose of this phase of the transition is to facilitate transition to a resource-based fee schedule and make it much easier to perform budget-neutrality calculations. This will also allow physicians with low customary charge screens to begin increasing at the earliest possible date. Elimination of specialty differentials is consistent with the basic assumption of a resource-based fee schedule that all physicians should be paid equally for the same service. In addition, elimination of these charge limitations would greatly reduce carrier administrative workloads. Since the adjusted prevailing charges would be eliminated at the time of a fee update, it is anticipated that individual fees would not decrease as a result of this change.

(g) Transition to RBRVS Fee Schedule.—Beginning January 1, 1992, there would be a five year transition from payments based on the adjusted prevailing charges to payments based exclusively on the resource-based fee schedule using a PPS type transition. A key reason that this transition begins in 1992 is that it gives time to utilize results from Phase II of the Harvard University relative value study and to allow for adequate opportunity for scrutiny of the entire set of relative values by the medical community.

During 1992, payments would reflect a blend equal to 80 percent of adjusted prevailing charges and 20 percent of the resource-based fee schedule amounts. During 1993, payments would reflect a blend equal to 60 percent of the adjusted prevailing charges and 40 percent of the resource-based fee schedule amounts. During 1994, payments would reflect a blend equal to 40 percent of the adjusted prevailing charges and 60 percent of the resource-based fee schedule amounts. During 1995, payments would reflect a blend equal to 80 percent of the adjusted prevailing charges and 20 percent of the resource-based fee schedule amounts. In 1996 and thereafter, payments would be based entirely on the resource-based fee schedule. It is anticipated that a 5-year transition would allow for mid-course corrections if relative values were not measured accurately. It also is hoped that this transition would reduce incentives for behavioral responses to price changes by physicians.

(h) Periodic Recalibration of Fee Schedule.—The Secretary would be required to recalibrate the resource-based relative values periodically, but no less often than every five years. The Secretary would publish his methodology and provide for notice and public comment on proposed changes in relative values. The Secretary also would provide annually for inclusion of new procedures into the fee schedule. In making these determinations, the Secretary would consult with the PPRC, appropriate physician groups, and would provide for notice and comment in the Federal Register. In recalibrating all relative values, the Secretary would not be authorized to publish changes which result in savings in excess of $50 million.

(i) Incentive Payments to Physicians in Health Manpower Shortage Areas.—Beginning January 1, 1991, the incentive payment for all physicians' services provided in all health manpower shortage areas would be increased from 5 to 10 percent of the payment amount that would otherwise apply. These payments are intended to partially compensate physicians in health manpower shortage areas who would otherwise benefit from more rapid implementation of the resource-based fee schedule.

(j) Medicare Volume Performance Standards.—Beginning with fiscal year 1990, a national Medicare volume performance standard (MVPS) would be set for each year. The MVPS would be the rate at which expenditures for physicians' and other services under the Part B program would be expected to grow from one fiscal year to the next. The purpose of the MVPS process would be (i) to monitor rates of Medicare expenditure growth and its various causes; (ii) to identify those causes of expenditure growth which may be inappropriate and highlight appropriate responses, (iii) to set fiscal priorities for the program, and (iv) to provide Congress the information it needs to make informed policy decisions on the future direction of the Medicare program.

All services paid on a reasonable charge or fee schedule basis by carriers under Part B would be included in tracking performance relative to the MVPS. Hospital outpatient services paid under Part B by intermediaries could be included in MVPS when the Secretary determines that it would be both appropriate and feasible to do so. HMOs with Medicare risk contracts would be excluded from the standard. However, only physicians' services as defined in the statute would be adjusted if the standard were not met.

By May 1 of each year, beginning in 1990, the Secretary would recommend to Congress a performance standard rate of increase in expenditures for the following fiscal year. In developing this recommendation, the Secretary would take into account the inflation, increases in the beneficiary population, changes in the age composition of enrollees, changes in technology, evidence of inappropriate utilization of services, evidence of lack of beneficiary access to services, and projected effects of specific performance standard guidelines and such other similar factors the Secretary considers appropriate. In addition, the Secretary would confer with the American Medical Association, the American College of Surgeons, the American Academy of Family Physicians, the American College of Emergency Physicians, the American Society of Internal Medicine, and other associations representing the major physician medical and surgical specialties. PPRC would report to the Congress upon the Secretary's recommendations by June 1. The committee intends that the volume performance standard for FY 1990 equal the current baseline percentage increase, reduced by the net deficit reduction achieved by OBRA 87 for part B services, and further reduced by ½ of one percentage point.

Within the national performance standard, the Secretary would recommend separate volume performance standards for the category of surgical services, using the best data available, and for such other categories of physicians' services as he deems appropriate, beginning with his recommendation for fiscal year 1991. The Secretary would define surgical services in regulation by May 1, 1990 after consultation with appropriate physician organizations. In comparing actual expenditures to the national performance standard for FY 1990, the Secretary would separately evaluate performance for surgical procedures.

Initially, the MVPS would apply on a national basis. The Secretary would develop a plan under which he would provide for an annually elected group specific performance standard for qualified physician groups, no earlier than October 1, 1991. The group specific standard would permit groups of physicians, such as multi-specialty groups, hospital medical staffs, PPOs, physicians in local medical groups and others, to elect their own group standard, rather than the national standard each year. By March 1, 1991, the Secretary would report to Congress on the methods by which such a group specific standard would be accomplished and the methods by which group performance would be evaluated. In addition, the Secretary would report specifically on the feasibility of developing an index or other measures of the mix of procedures performed by different physician groups. The Secretary's report also would include a recommendation on whether sole community practitioners should be exempted from the MVPS system and/or whether separate standards should be applied for such practitioners. PPRC would comment on the Secretary's report by May 1, 1991, and the Secretary would provide for notice and comment in the Federal Register. The Secretary would not be authorized to implement the plan for an opt-out for qualified physician groups unless Congress specifically approved the plan.

The Secretary would report to the Congress by May 1 of each year, beginning in 1991, on changes in the utilization of and access to Medicare services within key geographic, population, and service-related categories. This report would include an analysis of the factors underlying these changes and their interrelationships. The categories would include utilization of services by state; utilization of services by health manpower shortage areas; visit services; surgical procedures; nonsurgical procedures; emergency services; mental health services; specific services which are most frequently performed on Medicare beneficiaries; the appropriateness of services delivered when medical practice guidelines are available for such services which the Secretary determines are appropriate.

In analyzing this data, the Secretary would monitor possible sources of inappropriate utilization of Medicare services which contribute to the overall level of Medicare expenditures and report his findings to the Congress. The Secretary would take these findings into account in recommending to the Congress an appropriate rate of increase for expenditures and an appropriate payment update each year. In addition, for patterns of utilization which are found to be inappropriate, the Secretary also would make recommendations for utilization review, physician and/or patent education, or other responses which the Secretary determined to be appropriate. Finally, the Secretary would make recommendations to address any problems of beneficiary access to care made evident by the monitoring process.

The PPRC would convene and consult a panel of physician experts, including representatives of the American Medical Association, the American College of Surgeons, the American Academy of Family Physicians, the American College of Emergency Physicians, and the American Society of Internal Medicine, to evaluate the implications of medical utilization patterns for the quality of and access to patient care and would comment on the Secretary's recommendations, including the recommended performance standard and fee update.

Congress intends to enact a Medicare volume performance standard rate each year after reviewing the recommendtions of the Secretary and the PPRC. If no Congressional action is taken by October 20 of the year, the performance standard rate of increase in expenditures would be equal to the sum of the Secretary's estimate of the percentage increase or decrease in the MEI, the Secretary's estimate of the percentage increase or decrease in the average number of enrollees (other than HMO enrollees), and the average annual volume and intensity growth over the preceding five-year period (expressed as a percentage), reduced by two percentage points.

(k) Updating Fees Under MVPS.—The rate of growth in actual outlays would first be compared to the performance standard rate for FY 1990. Based on this comparison and other data from the monitoring program, the Secretary would recommend an MEI update to the Congress on May 1 of each year, beginning in 1991, for the following year. In developing his recommendation for the 1992 fee update, the Secretary would consider the percentage by which the rate of actual expenditure growth in FY 1990 exceeds or falls short of the 1990 performance standard rate, as well as other factors relevant to actual performance. The general intent would be that the Secretary would recommend an increase in the update that would otherwise apply if expenditures grow less rapidly than the standard and a decrease in the MEI update if expenditures grow more rapidly, unless the data justify an alternative.

However, the Secretary could not recommend an update less than zero, nor greater than the MEI plus 2 percentage points. Nothing in the update process should be construed to limit the increases or decreases in individual fees which are produced by transition to the resource-based fee schedule.

The Secretary would have discretion to recommend differential updates or other adjustments to the fee schedule, by procedure or by groups of procedures. In determining the need for such differential updates, the Secretary would consider evidence of changes in volume or access to services and other appropriate factors and report this evidence to the Congress. Each recommended differential update, if any, also would be limited by a floor of zero and a ceiling of MEI plus 2 percentage points.

Whether or not the Secretary recommends differential updates, he would report an update amount and the data underlying each update recommendation including an analysis of the data, for broad categories of services, including surgical services, non-surgical procedures, visits and consultations, emergency services, and any additional category of service the Secretary deems appropriate. PPRC would comment on the Secretary's recommendation(s) by June 1 of each year.

During the transition, the Secretary is authorized to adjust the conversion factor or factors in order to maintain budget neutrality by regulation. In determining a budget-neutral baseline for this adjustment, the Secretary shall utilize data contained in the most recent annual report of the Board of Trustees of the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, and aggregate payments for the second preceding fiscal year, increased by the MEI update for the previous calendar year, beneficiary enrollment growth in the previous fiscal year, and the average annual volume and intensity growth over the five year period ending in the second preceding fiscal year.

Congress intends to enact the update each year after reviewing the recommendations of the Secretary and the PPRC. If no Congressional action were taken by October 20 of a year, the update would be MEI minus 2 percentage points. Congress would enact an update policy for calendar years 1990 and 1991.

The Secretary could make further recommendations to the Congress on May 1 of each year, beginning in 1992, for adjustments to the conversion factor, other than those indicated by the performance standard process or to maintain budget neutrality, based on such factors as (i) evidence of unexpected changes by physicians in response to the implementation of the fee schedule, (ii) unexpected changes in outlay projections, (iii) changes in access of beneficiaries to care, (iv) changes in the quality or appropriateness of care, and (v) factors unmeasured in the resource-based payment methodology such as the therapeutic value of services. The Secretary could make recommendations for aggregate adjustments in the conversion factor or for adjustments in the conversion factor for individual services and procedures. However, these further recommendations could only be finalized through legislation.

(l) Reporting Requirements.—Carriers would be required to profile physicians' billing patterns in a locality or payment area and to provide comparative data and feedback to physicians whose utilization patterns are significantly different from those of their peers.

The Committee expects the Secretary would use Common Working File information to obtain data relevant to the monitoring of performance standard compliance (including expenditures and service volume by procedure and specialty within payment areas) and would report such data to PPRC, CBO, CRS, and to the Congress within 30 days of its availability to the Secretary, himself.

(m) Beneficiary Protections.—As of January 1, 1992, no physician would be allowed to balance bill any beneficiary more than 125% of the blended fee schedule amount for the procedure for that year. On January 1, 1993, this balance billing limit would be reduced to 120% of the blended fee schedule amount. On January 1, 1994, this balance billing limit would be reduced to 115% of the blended fee schedule amount. The balance billing limits would remain at 115% of the fee during 1995 and after transition to the full resource-based fee schedule on January 1, 1996. The penalty for violating balance billing limits would be the same as that for violating MAAC limits. These beneficiary protections would be necessary because the resource-based fee schedule would alter existing physician fees and, especially in the case of reduced fees, physicians could recoup payments by not accepting assignment and balance billing beneficiaries.

The participation physician (PAR) program would be maintained. The current incentive for participating physicians would be retained. Allowed charges by non-participating physicians would be 95% of the allowed charges by participating physicians.

MAAC limits currently imposed on individual physician actual charges would be extended to December 31, 1991, and then eliminated.

Physicians would be prohibited from balance billing any patient who is eligible to receive benefits under the Medicaid program or to have Medicaid pay for Medicare's deductible, coinsurance, and or premiums on his/her behalf.

To enable accurate program monitoring and evaluation, physicians, suppliers, and other persons would be required to submit all claims on behalf of beneficiaries within 365 days of providing any service, effective for services provided on or after September 1, 1990. The penalty for failure to submit assigned claims within 365 days would be a 10 percent reduction in the payment that would otherwise have been made. The penalty to submit an unassigned claim within 365 days would be a civil monetary penalty and/or exclusion. The provision would facilitate measurement of performance under a volume performance standard process. In addition, such claims contain more accurate data than do beneficiary-submitted claims.

In addition, electronic submission of claims by physicians would be encouraged and a system of direct deposit of payments into designated bank accounts of participating physicians would be encouraged. The Secretary would submit a plan to Congress by May 1, 1990, on how best to accomplish these objectives. The Department of HHS would provide physicians will specifications necessary to submit claims electronically, but not with hardware or software.

The Secretary would monitor changes in participation rates, balance billing liabilities and assignment rates by specialty, type of service, and geographic area using the best data available. The Secretary would make annual reports to Congress on changes in assignment and participation rates and in balance billing amounts. If significant changes occur, the Secretary would develop a plan for addressing the changes and submit his recommendations for the plan to Congress. PPRC would review the Secretary's plan and recommendations and submit its comments to Congress.

(n) Public and Beneficiary Education.—The Secretary would be required to provide for public and beneficiary education initiatives regarding performance standards and practice guidelines and regarding changes in Medicare Part B method for paying physicians.

(o) Studies.—

(1) Geographic Payment Policy Study.—The PPRC would conduct or coordinate a study of the desirability and feasibility of using MSA or other geographic areas for Part B payment purposes and report recommendations to Congress by July 1, 1991. The study would address whether it would be desirable to retain current localities, move to a system of statewide localities, or adopt MSAs or other geographical areas for payment purposes.

(2) Study of Separate Malpractice Overhead Adjustment.—PPRC would conduct a study by July 1, 1991 of the extent to which practice costs and malpractice vary by geographical locality and specialty and the extent to which the available GPCIs accurately reflect practice costs and malpractice in rural areas. The study also would include an analysis of the special circumstances of rural independent laboratories in determining the geographic practice cost index. PPRC would make recommendations on the appropriate geographic units to use in measuring and adjusting practice costs and malpractice costs and on the feasibility and advisability of using a separate malpractice cost index. PPRC would analyze the effect of alternative methods of allocating malpractice expenses on Medicare expenditures by specialty, type of service and geographic area. PPRC would also study, using a consensus panel and other appropriate methods, of the allocation of malpractice expenses to particular procedures which could be incorporated into the determination of relative values for particular procedures.

(3) GAO Study of Alternative Malpractice Resolution Procedures.—The GAO would study alternative method's for paying Medicare's share of malpractice expenses. GAO also would study alternative malpractice claims resolution procedures for Medicare and Medicaid patients, including arbitration and no-fault procedures. GAO would report its findings and recommendations to the Congress by April 1, 1991.

(4) Visit Code Modification Study.—The Secretary would conduct a study including recommendations on the desirability of the including time in the visit code, modifying the number of visit codes, whether greater coding uniformity results from including time in visit codes compared with clarifying the clinical descriptors or existing codes, and the ability to audit physician time accurately. The study would be completed by July 1, 1991. The Secretary consult with PPRC about any recommendations to Congress based on this study.

(5) Opt-Out Recommendations.—By March 1, 1991, the Secretary would report to Congress the standards by which a qualified physician group would be eligible for the opt-out provisions and the methods by which such an opt-out would be accomplished and by which physician group performance would be evaluated. In considering methods for evaluating physician group performance, the Secretary would specifically report on the feasibility of developing an index or other measures of the mix of procedures performed by different physician groups. The Secretary would also make recommendations on whether physicians who are sole community practices should be exempt from the volume performance standard process, or alternatively, what evaluation standards should be applied.

(6) Report on Separate Performance Standards by Geographic Area.—The Secretary would report on this subject with recommendations to Congress by July 1, 1991. The report would take into account HCFA's ability to track expenditures by state, carrier area, and by MSA and by specialty and by type of service within geographic areas. The report would also discuss the need to adjust local performance standards for referral patterns and/or border crossing; whether there should be higher or lower performance standards depends upon an area's past utilization; and whether the definition of services subject to the performance standard should be changed.

(7) Study of Economies of Scale for High Volume Providers of Certain Procedures.—The Secretary would conduct a study of economies of scale for high volume providers of certain procedures; e.g., when a provider performs more than a threshold number of procedures per year, is it cheaper on a per procedure basis to provide that procedure? If economies of scale are found, the Secretary would make recommendations to Congress for adjusting Medicare payments for those procedures to reflect savings resulting from economies of scale. The report would be completed by July 1, 1991. In developing recommendations, the Secretary would consult with the PPRC.

(8) Study of Medicaid Physician Fee.—The PPRC would undertake a study of physician fees under State Medicaid programs. PPRC would examine the adequacy and equity of Medicaid physician reimbursement, physician participation in Medicaid, and access to care by Medicaid beneficiaries. PPRC would report its findings by July 1, 1991 to Congress along with recommendations.

(9) Study of Physician Anti-Trust Issues.—The GAO would conduct a study of the effect of the anti-trust laws on the ability of physicians to act in groups to educate and discipline their peers in order to eliminate ineffective practice patterns and inappropriate utilization. The study also would address anti-trust issues as they relate to the adoption of practice guidelines by third-party players. A third issue the study would address would be the role that practice guidelines might play as a defense in malpractice cases. The report would be completed by July 1, 1991 and would include recommendations to the Congress.

(10) Study of payment for Non-Physician Providers of Medicare Services.—The PPRC would undertake a study of the implications of a RBRVS for physicians' services for non-physician practitioners including the services of certain nurses, psychologists, physical therapists, physician assistants, and other health professionals whose services can be billed to Medicare on a fee-for-service basis. The study would address (i) what the proper level of payment should be for practitioners; (ii) whether or not adjustments to payments for their services should be subject to the Medicare volume performance standard process; and (iii) what update to use for services outside the Medicare performance standard. The study also would examine the cost of furnishing and payments for portable x-ray services and would examine whether payment for such services should be made in the same manner as for radiologists' services or on the basis of a separate fee schedule. The study would be completed by July 1, 1991.

(p) Outcomes Research Program.—The Secretary, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Health, would establish and fund an outcomes assessment research and education program and a program to develop practice parameters aimed at improved medical knowledge and enhanced quality of patient care. The programs would study the effect of medical treatment on symptoms, health status and quality of life. There would be assessments of the quality, appropriateness, necessity and effectiveness of different management methods. The findings concerning the best methods of managing selected health care conditions would be disseminated broadly, and in a manner that would affect the quality and delivery of health care services.

The outcomes research programs would be dynamic, continually incorporating new medical technology and treatment information into the study agenda and the development of practice parameters. The programs would continually evolve, keeping pace with innovations in the practice of medicine and in methods used to disseminate information to providers and users of health care services.

The Committee uses the term health care professional broadly, and expects involvement of non-physician health care practitioners in the outcomes research, education, and practice parameters programs. The Committee intends that the Assistant Secretary for Health would ensure the participation of non-physician practitioners in the development of practice parameters related to the services they deliver, and in the development of methods for measuring patient outcomes and professional performance indicators.

(a) The research program.—The research program activities would include: 1) the establishment of priority health conditions for study; 2) the use of grants and contracts to assess the effect of medical and surgical treatments on patient symptoms, health status, and quality of life; 3) evaluations of alternative levels of health care, such as hospital and ambulatory care; and 4) the development of improved methods for measuring patient outcomes and professional performance.

(b) The education program.—The education program would use grants and contracts to provide state-of-the-art information to, at a minimum, health care practitioners; consumers; providers of care; accrediting bodies; educational institutions; and state and local governments.

The education program would disseminate the findings from the research program in numerous ways to maximize the outreach of patient care information and its assimilation into practice. The program would periodically evaluate the effectiveness of its outreach and its influence on health services delivery.

(c) The practice parameters program.—The practice parameters program would incorporate the findings of the research program into useful guidelines for patient care management. In order to carry out this program, the Assistant Secretary would: (1) provide matching funds at the rate of two dollars for every non-federal dollar—the funding may be in the form of grants, contracts or cooperative agreements to a variety of private sector organizations; (2) provide for the immediate development of practice parameters for procedures and services for which good information is known about their application; and (3) ensure the timely development of practice parameters for procedures and services subject to significant reductions and increases in payment as a result of the Secretary's implementation of the Resource Based Relative Value Scale.

It is intended that the practice parameters program will be closely coordinated within the Department to ensure that the needs of the Health Care Financing Administration are considered and met. The Secretary would ensure that patient outcomes information is appropriately assimilated into programs affecting the review, quality, and payment of Medicare services.

The Assistant Secretary would encourage health care professionals to adopt those practices determined through the research program to be most effective in improving health status. The practice parameters would be developed in the private sector with departmental oversight to ensure timely and representative products.

(d) Advisory Bodies.—Two independent advisory bodies would be created. To advise the Assistant Secretary for Health on the conduct of the programs, the Department would enter into a mutual agreement with the President of the National Academy of Sciences. Should the Academy not wish to enter into an agreement, the Secretary would use another appropriate public or private nonprofit entity for this advice. The advisory body would annually review the available information from the outcomes research programs and publish reports to the Congress on the status of the programs, with recommendations for improvement.

An independent advisory committee of a technical nature would be established.

Twelve voting individuals would be chosen from a range of professional expertise, including biostatistics, epidemiology, clinical trial methodology and health services research. In addition, government ex-officio members would be appointed. The Independent Advisory Committee would meet at least twice a year and provide technical advice for implementing research priorities.

(e) Report to Congress.—Not later than one year after enactment, the Secretary shall report to Congress on the considerations surrounding the establishment of a national database for outcomes research. The emphasis of the report would be the long-term objectives of the research and practice parameters programs.

(f) Budget.—The outcomes research, education and practice parameters programs would be authorized for three years, beginning in FY 1990. The amounts authorized in each of the years would be $54 million in FY 1990; $75 million in FY 1991; and $110 million in FY 1992. The monies would be divided, in differing proportions, between the general fund of the Treasury, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund. In addition, there is authorized to be appropriated money for the Advisory functions of the nonprofit entity. These amounts would be, in each year; $200,000 in FY 1990; $200,000 in FY 1991; and $300,000 in FY 1993.

RURAL HEALTH PROVISIONS RELATED TO PART B

Present Law

a. Rural Health Clinics.—Medicare and Medicaid payments may be made to rural health clinics for health services, including services furnished by or under the direction of a nurse practitioner or physician assistant even without the presence of a physician. To qualify as a rural health clinic, a facility must be located in a rural area designated as having a shortage of personal health services or primary medical care manpower (these are definitions used for other Federal health programs). Clinics must have at least one nurse practitioner or physician assistant on staff at least 60 percent of the time the facility is open for patient care and must be located in a State that does not prohibit the delivery of care by nurse practitioners or physician assistants. Rural health clinics are reimbursed under Medicare using an all-inclusive rate per visit of 80% of reasonable costs, subject to a limit of $46 per visit (this rate was increased from $31.00, and annually indexed to the Medicare Economic Index, by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

b. Nurse Practitioners.—Medicare authorizes coverage of services, including nonphysicians services, "incident to" physicians' services. The services of nonphysicians, including nurses, must generally be rendered under the physician's direct supervision by his or her employees. Medicare will directly reimburse registered nurses for services only under limited circumstances. Direct Medicare reimbursement is available for certified nurse-midwife services and the services of a certified nurse anesthetist. Medicare also covers the services of nurse practitioners in a rural health clinic and an HMO, but payment is made to the provider. Under Medicaid, States are required to cover the services of nurse-midwives.

c. Certified Nurse-Midwives and Social Workers in Rural Health Clinics.—Medicare payments may be made to rual health clinics for health services, including services furnished by or under the direction of a nurse practitioner or physician assistant even without the presence of a physician. The services of clinical social workers are limited to those performed under the immediate supervision of a physician.

Committee Provision

a. Rural Health Clinics.—The bill requires the Office of Rural Health to provide technical assistance to entities seeking certification as rural health clinics (RHCs), and to provide, update and distribute brochures describing RHC services. It clarifies that certified nurse-midwife services (added to RHC services by item p, below) meet the requirements for service delivery by non-physician. Reduces from 60% to 50% the percentage of time a rural health clinic must be staffed by a physician assistant or nurse practitioner, and allows the Secretary to waive this requirement for up to one year for an RHC that has been unable to hire such an individual (the waiver will be automatically approved if the Secretary does not act within 60 days). The definition of what qualifies as an underserved or understaffed area for purposes of qualifying as an RHC is classified. Areas designated by the Governor of the State and approved by the Secretary as an area with a shortage of rural health services are added to the definition. The bill provides that facilities determined by the Secretary to meet requirements under the Public Health Service Act for funding as a community or migrant health center or a provider of health care to the homeless as of September 1, 1989 is deemed to meet Medicare requirements for certification as an RHC.

b. Nurse Practitioners.—The bill provides that the services of clinical nurse specialists and certified nurse practitioners in rural areas are to be covered by Medicare if those services are legally authorized under State practice laws or regulations, whether or not the individual is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider. Covered services will be those that Medicare would cover if delivered by a physician. The services of certified nurse specialists and certified nurse practitioners will be paid at 75 percent of the amount Medicare would pay for the comparable physician service. Beneficiaries would pay standard Medicare coinsurance (i.e., 20 percent of 75 percent) and the services would be delivered on an assignment-related basis.

c. Certified Nurse-Midwives and Social Workers in Rural Health Clinics.—The bill extends coverage to the services of clinical social workers and certified nurse-midwives in rural health clinics on the same basis that services of clinical psychologists and nurse practitioners are covered. Medicare will not pay the social worker or nurse-midwife directly; as with all services provided in a rural health clinic, the clinic will be paid on all-inclusive rate for each service.

CLINICAL LABORATORY SERVICES

Present Law.—Clinical laboratory services are paid for by Medicare under statewide or carrierwide fee schedules. The fee for a particular service under a fee schedule is subject to a national cap, currently set a 100 percent of the national median for all fee schedules for that service. Fee schedule amounts are updated annually by the percentage change in the consumer price index (CPI) during the proceeding calendar year. A nationwide fee schedule would be implemented beginning January 1, 1990.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision lowers the national cap to 95 percent of the nation median for all fee schedules. It also limits CPI increase for 1990 to 2 percent and delay it until April 1.

Effective Date.—April 1, 1990.

Current Law.—OBRA 87 requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish by January 1, 1990, a program for certifying "high volume" physician office laboratories furnishing services under Medicare.

Committee Provision.—The bill would preserve the ability of Secretary of Health and Human Services to take action against deficient laboratories under the Medicare program, while eliminating the distinction between "high volume" and the laboratories.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

TRIP FEES FOR CLINICAL LABS

Present Law.—Section 1833(h) of the Social Security Act establishes a fee schedule for clinical laboratory services under Medicare.

The law requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to pay a nominal fee to cover the appropriate costs of collecting the sample, as well as a "trip" fee to cover the transportation and personnel costs for trained personnel to travel to the location of a patient who is unable to travel.

Section 8421 of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 requires the Secretary to establish "trip" fees on a per mile basis for certain labs during the period beginning April 1, 1989, and ending December 31, 1990. This provision is required to be implemented in a budget neutral manner.

In order to qualify for payment on this basis, a lab must demonstrate that (1) it receives 80 percent of its revenues for clinical laboratory tests from Medicare, (2) at least 85 percent of its gross revenues for such tests are for tests attributable to individuals who are homebound and or reside in a nursing facility, and (3) it performed tests for residents of at least 20 percent of the nursing facilities in the State in which it is located.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision allows two or more labs under common ownership to combine their services to measure whether thay serve at least 20 percent of the nursing facilities in the State.

It clarifies that the term "nursing facility" is not limited to skilled nursing facilities. It requires a trip fee to be paid for collecting any specimen, not just samples that must be drawn.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

COMPETITIVE BIDDING FOR CLINICAL LAB SERVICES

Present Law.—Under its current authority to conduct demonstration projects, the Department of Health and Human Services has developed a competitive bidding methodology for use in purchasing clinical laboratory services for Medicare beneficiaries.

Congress has imposed a moratorium on implementation of any demonstration projects relating to competitive bidding as a method of purchasing clinical lab services under Medicare. The moratorium has been extended several times; the current extension will expire at the end of 1989.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision extends the moratorium until January 1, 1991, and requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to report to the Congress a methodology for a competitive bidding demonstration project.

PAYMENTS FOR DURABLE MEDICAL EQUIPMENT

Present Law.—OBRA 1987 reformed the method of paying for durable medical equipment (DME). DME was divided into six categories, and fee schedules were derived for each category. The amount payable for an item is the lesser of the actual charge or the fee schedule amount.

The fee schedule amounts for most categories of DME are based upon the average reasonable charge for an item in a base period, increased annually by the increase in the consumer price index (CPI).

Committee Provision.—The committee provision limits the update in fee schedule amounts for 1990 to 2 percent and delays the update until April 1. It limits the fee schedule amount for an item to 95 percent of the national median of the carrier fee schedule amounts for the item. In addition, it reduces the fee schedule amounts for seatlift chairs and transcutaneous electrical nerve stimulators by 15 percent.

Effective Date.—April 1, 1990.

TREATMENT OF POWER DRIVEN WHEELCHAIRS UNDER THE DME FEE SCHEDULE

Present Law.—OBRA 87 divided durable medical equipment (DME) into six categories and established a fee schedule for each category. Among the six categories are inexpensive and other routinely purchased items, customized items, and "capped rental" items. "Capped rental" items are defined in law as other items of durable medical equipment.

Payment for "inexpensive and other routinely purchased" items is made on a rental basis or in a lump-sum amount for the purchase of the item, subject to a limit equal to the average reasonable charge for the purchase of the item in the area in a base year, updated for inflation. An item is considered frequently purchased if it is acquired by purchase at least 75 percent of the time. An item is considered inexpensive if it cost less than $50.

Customized items of DME are purchased at prices that reflect the carrier's individual consideration for the specific item involved, with payment being made on a lump-sum basis. An item is considered customized if it is uniquely constructed or substantially modified to meet the specific needs of an individual patient.

Payment for a capped rental item is made in the form of not more than 15 monthly rental payments equal to 10 percent of a specified purchase price. If the medical need of patient requires for the item continues after the close of this 15-month period, further payment is limited to a servicing or maintenance fee every six months; likewise, the item must be replaced without charge if it ceases to perform its intended functions while a medical need for it still exists. Items subject to capped rental are those, such as hospital beds and wheelchairs, that do not fall within any of the other five categories of DME.

Power-driven wheelchairs and high-strength lightweight wheelchairs are tailored to meet the needs of individual patients with conditions, such as a spinal injury or cerebral palsy, that frequently occur early in life and are likely to continue substantially beyond the 15-month payment period for capped rental items. These wheelchairs are more expensive than most other wheelchairs and require periodic servicing over their useful life.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision would classify power-driven wheelchairs as "routinely purchased" items, but authorize the Secretary by regulation to specify criteria under which carriers could on a case-by-case basis, classify a wheelchair as a "customized" item.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR CERTAIN ITEMS AND SUPPLIES FURNISHED BY HOME HEALTH AGENCIES

Present Law.—Home health agencies are paid for most items and services on a reasonable cost basis, subject to certain limits.

OBRA 87 established a six-point plan, under which most durable medical equipment is paid on the basis of a fee schedule. This plan specifically extends to durable medical equipment furnished by a home health agency under a plan of care.

Although cost-sharing requirements do not apply to home health services, they apply to durable medical equipment, whether or not it is furnished by a home health agency.

In implementing the six-point plan, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) has classified certain inexpensive and frequently replaced items, such as catheters and ostomy supplies, as durable medical equipment.

This treatment subjects these items to Medicare cost-sharing requirements and requires home health agencies to separate the costs of these items (and associated overhead) from the costs of items and services reimbursed on a reasonable cost basis.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision excludes ostomy supplies from the definition of durable medical equipment covered under home health agency services, but specifically includes them in the definition of services and items provided by home health agencies.

Effective Date.—Janaury 1, 1990.

REGISTERED NURSES AS ASSISTANTS AT SURGERY

Present Law.—Section 9338 of OBRA 86 provides for reimbursement of services furnished by a physician assistant. Payment is made to the employer of the physician on the basis of prevailing charges that may not exceed 65 percent of what a physician furnishing the same services would be paid.

The provision authorized the Secretary to adjust payments to hospitals to eliminate duplicative payments for the same services.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a study of the impact of the OBRA 86 changes for physican assistants on the employment of registered nurses as assistants at surgery. The Secretary would also be required to evaluate the feasibility of adjusting hospital payments to avoid duplicate payment for the same services.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR NURSE-MIDWIFE SERVICES

Current Law.—Section 4073 of OBRA 87 provides for coverage of certified nurse-midwife services under the Medicare program. The legislation defines "certified nurse-midwife" as an individual who meets specified requirements and "performs services in the area of management of care of mothers and babies throughout the maternity cycle." This definition was patterned after that used with Medicaid.

The definition of "certified nurse-midwife services" limits services to those that are authorized under State law and would be reimbursable if performed by a physician or incident to a physician's service, but does not limit coverage to services furnished during the maternity cycle.

HCFA has interpreted the statutory language as excluding coverage of gynecological services for the elderly, thereby limiting coverage under this benefit to the disability population.

Committee Provision.—The bill eliminates the "maternity cycle" limitation under Medicare, but retains it under Medicaid.

Effective Date.—Applies for services furnished on or after January 1, 1990.

COVERAGE FOR ERYTHROPOIETIN

Present Law.—Reimbursement for dialysis services under the End Stage Renal Disease (ESRD) program under Medicare is structured to provide incentives for home dialysis.

Medicare coverage of drugs and biologicals furnished incident to a physician's professional services is limited to those drugs and biologicals that cannot be self-administered.

In May of 1989, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved the drug erythropoietin for use in the treatment of uremic anemia in patients with renal failure. Treatment with the drug provides an alternative to the periodic blood transfusions currently required by many kidney patients with this condition.

The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) issued Medicare coverage guidelines for erythropoietin on June 1, 1989. Reflecting the limitation contained in current law, these guidelines limit coverage to instances in which eythropoietin is administered at a treatment facility.

Erythropoietin may be administered at the same time a kidney patient is dialyzing. Excluding Medicare coverage for erthropoietin administered by the patient at home will compel many kidney patients who receive dialysis at home to travel to a facility to receive treatment with the drug.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision provides that self-administered erythropoietin is covered under Medicare for individuals receiving home dialysis, subject to utilization controls deemed appropriate by the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

Effective Date.—July 1, 1990.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR THERAPEUTIC SHOES AND INSERTS

Present Law.—OBRA 87 provided for establishment of a demonstration project to test the cost effectiveness of providing medicare coverage of custom-molded and extra-depth shoes and inserts for a sample group of diabetics with specific foot conditions. Coverage is limited to one pair of custom molded shoes or one pair of extra depth shoes and inserts per year.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision authorizes payment annually for either one pair of custom-molded shoes with inserts and two additional pairs of inserts or one pair of extra-depth shoes with up to three pairs of inserts. It also authorizes the Secretary to substitute modifications to the shoes for one or more pairs of inserts.

Effective Date.—July 1, 1989.

HOSPITAL OUTPATIENT SERVICES

Present Law.—Medicare generally pays the reasonable costs of services provided in the hospital outpatient department, although a variety of fee schedules and prospective rates apply to many services typically provided to outpatients (surgery, radiology, clinical lab services, dialysis).

Committee Provision.—The committee provision reduces Medicare payments for all services provided in outpatient hospital departments by 2 percent, except that the reduction does not apply to capital payments.

PAYMENTS FOR HOSPITAL OUTPATIENT CAPITAL

Present Law.—Medicare generally pays the reasonable costs of services provided in the hospital outpatient department, although a variety of fee schedules, limits or prospective rates apply to many of the services typically provided to outpatients (surgery, radiology, clinical lab services, dialysis). In the case of surgery and radiology, payments are directly linked in part to the individual hospital's reasonable cost of those services.

Capital costs incurred by hospitals are allocated between the inpatient and outpatient departments, and among outpatient services, in proportion to the use of these services by Medicare enrollees. Capital costs allocated to activities in the outpatient department are built into each of the reimbursement methodologies used for these services. Thus, capital costs are reflected in the reasonable costs of services to the degree that the service is reimbursed on that basis.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision reduces payments for outpatient capital by 20 percent to 80 percent of reasonable costs, but excludes payments to disproportionate share hospitals from the reduction.

Effective Date.—Discharges or portions of cost reporting periods beginning in FY 1990.

DIRECT PAYMENT TO CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGISTS

Present Law.—* * * Also, psychologists' services may be covered as "incident to" physicians' services, provided there is direct personal supervision by a physician, and program payment is made directly to the physician.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision would extend Medicare coverage to the services of clinical psychologists in all settings, and direct payment would be made to the psychologist on the basis of reasonable charges. Services would be required to be billed on an assigned basis. A clinical psychologist would be defined as an individual licensed by the State, meeting certain educational requirements, and possessing two years of experience.

Effective Date.—January 1, 1990.

LIMIT ON OUTPATIENT MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Present Law.—Medicare payments for outpatient mental health services delivered by a psychiatrist or other physician are limited in each calendar year to $1100. Beneficiaries are subject to a 50% copayment for these services.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision eliminates the limit on Medicare outpatient mental health services.

Effective Date.—January 1, 1990.

STUDY OF INPATIENT MENTAL HEALTH BENEFITS

Present Law.—Medicare coverage of inpatient psychiatric hospital services is limited to 190 days over the individual's lifetime (and is further limited if the individual was being treated as an inpatient upon becoming eligible for Medicare). Medicare coverage of other inpatient hospital services is unlimited (365) days annually) under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

Committee Provision.—The committee bill requires the Secretary of HHS to conduct a study and make recommendations to Congress on the advisability of eliminating the 190-day lifetime limit for inpatient hospital care. The study is to include an analysis of the current use and financing of inpatient psychiatric services in private psychiatric hospitals, State psychiatric hospitals and general hospitals, and would also include a discussion of alternatives to a lifetime limit (such as an annual limit), including their potential costs. The report will be due on April 1, 1990.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

STUDY OF HOSPITAL OUTPATIENT COSTS

Present Law.—No provision.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision requires the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission to report to Congress on Medicare policy with regard to hospital outpatient services. The study would include an examination of the sources of growth in spending for hospital outpatient services and an analysis of the differences between the costs of delivering services in the hospital outpatient department and other appropriate settings (including ambulatory surgery centers and physician offices). The study would be due to Congress on July 1, 1990.

MUNICIPAL HEALTH SERVICES WAIVER

Present Law.—Since 1979, four cities (Cincinnati, San Jose, Milwaukee and Baltimore) have operated projects under waivers from the Health Care Financing Administration. The projects offer expanded Medicare Part B benefits not usually available under Medicare including preventive care, drugs, optometric care and dental care. These waivers were last extended under the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 and are scheduled to expire on December 31, 1989.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision extends the waivers until six months after the Secretary of HHS submits to Congress an evaluation of the projects, including information on cost and effectiveness of the services provided.

CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKERS

Current Law.—Medicare covers the services of a clinical social worker if they are delivered in an HMO and would be covered by Medicare if delivered by a physician or incident to a physician's service. The social worker must meet specific training and licensing requirements. Social services provided by hospitals, skilled nursing facilities, hospices and home health agencies are covered if prescribed by a physician. Hospital discharge planning and evaluation must be under the direction of a social worker or another appropriately qualified personnel. In all cases, there is no direct payment by Medicare to the social worker. Payment is made as part of payment to the physician, hospital or other provider.

Committee Provision.—The bill authorized reimbursement for the services of clinical social workers, if the service would be covered if delivered by a physician or incident to a physician's service and if the social worker is authorized to perform the service under State law. Covered services are defined as those which are for the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness.

Effective Date.—January 1, 1990.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR NEW TECHNOLOGIES

Program Affected.—Medicare, Part B.

Current Law.—Section 1833(i)(2) of the Social Security Act establishes reimbursement for ambulatory surgery centers (ASCs). The amount paid for facility services is 80 percent of the "standard overhead amount established by the Secretary . . . on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of a fair fee." The estimate must take into account costs incurred by ambulatory surgery centers in a manner that will ensure that payment will be less than would have been the case if the care were provided on an inpatient basis.

OBRA 87 added a new criterion for calculating the overhead amount in the case of cataract surgery involving implantation of an intraocular lens (IOL). It required the Secretary to incorporate an amount that is "reasonable and related to acquiring the cost of acquiring the class of lens involved."

The reference to "class of lens" was intended to reflect the fact that not all IOLs are the same, but the law did not specifically require the Secretary to evaluate IOLs based on new technologies.

In August 1988, the Secretary issued a notice of proposed rulemaking to implement the mandate. This rule proposed that ASCs be reimbursed a flat $200 per lens, regardless of the type involved. A final rule is pending.

Proposal.—Require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to implement a process under which interested parties could request review of the appropriate reimbursement for a class of new technology IOL. Review would be restricted to IOLs that have been approved by the FDA.

The Secretary would publish notice in the Federal Register from time to time (but not less often than twice each year) a list of the requests for review the Secretary has received.

There would be a 60-day period for public comment on the requests. The Secretary would be required to publish a notice of his determinations with respect to IOLs specified in the notice within 120 days after the close of the comment period.

MEDICARE RISK CONTRACTS

Present Law

a. Adjusted Average Per Capita Cost.—Under Section 1876(a)(1)(C) of the Social Security Act, health maintenance organizations (HMOs) or competitive medical plans (CMPs) with a Medicare risk-sharing contract are paid a per capita rate for each class of individuals who are enrolled in the organization. The per capita rate is 95 percent of the adjusted average per capita cost (AAPCC), or the Secretary's prospective estimate of the amount that Medicare would pay if the services were furnished in the same geographic area on a fee-for-service basis.

b. Disclosure of AAPCC Assumptions and Methodology.—Section 1876(a)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) to annually determine and announce not later than September 7 of each year, the per capita payment rates for the next year for each class of Medicare beneficiaries who are enrolled in an HMO or CMP that has a risk-sharing contract. The HHS Secretary is not required to disclose the policy decisions and technical methodologies used to develop these payment rates.

c. Actuarial Equivalence.—The HHS Secretary must estimate in advance the average per capita amounts that Medicare would pay for beneficiaries enrolled in an HMO or CMP paid on a risk basis in a contract year if these beneficiaries were not enrolled in the organization. The per capita estimates must include administrative costs as well as costs for Part A and Part B covered services. The Secretary must base these estimates on actual experience or data and information that assures actuarial equivalence.

d. Modification of 50-50 Rule.—At least 50 percent of the enrollment in a health maintenance organization or similar organization which contracts with Medicare on a risk basis must consist of other than Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries for the duration of the contract year. The Secretary may modify or waive this enrollment composition requirement only if more than half of the population in the area served by the organization are entitled to Medicaid benefits. The 50-50 requirement may also be waived for the first three years of a contract if the organization is owned and operated by a governmental entity and makes reasonable efforts to enroll non-Medicare/Medicaid individuals.

e. Physician Incentive Payments.—HMOs and CMPs have been permitted to make arrangements with physicians to assume all or part of the financial risk of providing services to Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries. However, OBRA 1986 prohibited a health maintenance organization with a Medicare risk-sharing contract or organization with a Medicaid contract from making direct or indirect payments to a physician as an inducement to reduce or limit services provided to enrollees. This prohibition is effective April 1, 1990. Organizations that violate this requirement are subject to civil monetary penalties.

f. Temporary Waiver for Watts Health Foundation.—OBRA 1987 granted the Watts Health Foundation/United Health Plan a waiver of the 50-50 rule. That waiver expires January 1, 1990.

g. Benefit Stabilization Fund.—Each HMO or CMP with a risk-sharing contract must develop an adjusted community rate (ACR), which is an estimate of what it would charge a private member comparable to a Medicare beneficiary for the scope of services covered under its Medicare contract. If this ACR is lower than its average projected Medicare payment rate, the organization must use the difference to fund additional benefits not covered by Medicare, reduce beneficiary charges, or accept a reduced Medicare payment rate.

Alternatively, the HMO or CMP may request that a portion of the difference be deposited in a benefit stabilization fund (within the Part A and Part B Trust Funds). The fund may be drawn upon in a future year if the difference between the ACR and the Medicare payment rate is insufficient to continue financing the organization's package of additional benefits. A stabilization fund may not be established for any contract period more than 6 years after enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, or July 18, 1990.

h. Enrollment In Medicare Risks-Contract.—In order to enter into a Medicare risk-sharing contract, an organization must be a federally qualified HMO or a competitive medical plan and have at least 5,000 members. The Secretary may contract with an eligible organization that has fewer members if the organization primarily serves members residing outside of urbanized areas. In addition, at least one-half of the enrolled membership of an organization that enters a Medicare contract must be individuals who are not Medicare or Medicaid beneficiaries.

i. Limit on Part B Services.—Medicare beneficiaries who are enrolled in HMOs/CMPs paid on a risk basis must receive all covered services directly through the organization or through arrangements made by the organization. If there is an emergency or urgently needed service, an enrollee can receive Medicare covered services outside the HMO's network (i.e. from non-affiliated providers) without prior approval and the HMO will pay for this care. OBRA 1987 limited Medicare payments to nonaffiliated Part A providers (hospitals and skilled nursing facilities) to the lower of the amount negotiated by the HMO or the amount that Medicare would have paid. The law does not address Part B charges by non-affiliated physicians and suppliers.

j. Temporary Waiver for Related Entities.—For the duration of a Medicare contract, at least one-half of the enrolled membership of a HMO or CMP must consist of individuals who are not eligible for Medicare or Medicaid services. In assessing compliance, the Secretary considers only the enrolled membership of the legal entity that contracts with Medicare.

Committee Provision

a. Adjusted Average Per Capita Cost.—The committee bill increases the per capita payment rate from 95 to 100 percent of the adjusted average per capita cost (AAPCC). This 5 percent increase will be phased in over a four year period beginning January 1, 1990. The rate will be 98 percent in 1990; 99 percent in 1991; 99 percent in 1992; and 100 percent in 1993. The increases are contingent on the Secretary's compliance with the requirements in item (c), below, related to certification of the AAPCC and submission of recommendations for modification of the AAPCC.

b. Disclosure of AAPCC Assumptions and Methodology.—The committee bill requires the Secretary to fully disclose the methodology and assumptions that will be used to establish the Medicare payment rates for individuals who are enrolled in an organization with a Medicare risk-sharing contract 45 days prior to the date that the final payment rates are issued. The purpose of this disclosure is to provide organizations with an opportunity to comment on any proposed changes prior to their effective date. This notice must be provided to organizations that have a risk-sharing contract, or organizations that otherwise request the information. The disclosure shall include the data and assumptions underlying the adjusted average per capita costs (AAPCC), including the determination of the United States per capita costs (USPCC). The disclosure shall separately identify changes from the previous year's methodology and assumptions, including any changes in Medicare covered benefits resulting from legislative, regulatory, or administrative action.

(c) Actuarial Equivalence of the APCC.—The Committee is aware of and concerned about the number of HMOs/CMPs that have withdrawn from Medicare's risk-contracting program. The Committee is also aware that as provider and physician payment policies are modified to reduce the rate of growth of Medicare expenses, it may be more difficult for risk-contracting organizations to participate in the program or offer additional benefits to beneficiaries. Thus, the Committee is proposing to increase the payment rate to organizations by increasing the percentage of the AAPCC. However, this increase is made with the understanding that the current payment method is imperfect. In some situations, HMOs/CMPs may be over or underpaid. Although the AAPCC is adjusted for geographic location of the organization and enrollee characteristics (age, sex, welfare and institutional status), the Committee believes that the AAPCC methodology in its current form, is an inadequate mechanism to estimate the variations among patients in terms of their resource use. Thus the Committee is imposing two conditions on the proposed increases in the AAPCC to encourage the Secretary, working with the industry, to develop a refined or new payment method on a priority basis.

The Committee bill provides that, in order for the AAPCC payment increases specified in (a) above to occur, the Secretary is required to certify to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committees on Ways and Means and on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives that the methodology used to set the adjusted average per capita costs (AAPCC) can be implemented to assure actuarial equivalence with the amount that Medicare would have spent for beneficiaries if they were not enrolled in organizations with risk-sharing contracts. Before the increase scheduled for January 1, 1991 can occur, the Secretary must submit a proposal to Congress to modify the payment method to organizations with a risk-sharing contract to better predict the future actual service utilization and annual medical expenditures of the beneficiary population enrolled in a specific organization. The recommendations may modify the current AAPCC formula, for example, by adding predictors of medical utilization such as health status adjustors or prior utilization measures, or may propose a new payment methodology as an alternative to the AAPCC. The goals of the revised payment method are to provide more appropriate payment to an individual organization for its actual enrolled Medicare beneficiaries and to reduce the incentives for favorable or adverse selection. The data to support the recommended changes must show that the refined or revised payment methodology is effective in explaining 15 percent of the variation in health care utilization and costs among Medicare beneficiaries. The 15 percent measure is derived from research that has been conducted on the adequacy of the AAPCC. For example, researchers at the Health Care Financing Administration have conducted several studies among elderly patients and determined that the enrollee characteristics currently used to adjust the AAPCC (age, sex, welfare and institutional characteristics) explain less than 1 percent of the inter-patient variations in utilization. Studies conducted by the RAND Corporation indicate that health measures and prior use measures may explain up to 60 percent of the variance among annual medical expenses among the non-elderly. Other studies suggest that the maximum percentage of variance that one should expect to be explained ranges between 14 and 20 percent. Thus the Committee's bill requires the Secretary to propose a revised or new payment methodology that accounts for at least fifteen percent of differences among annual medical expenses for Medicare patients.

The American Academy of Actuaries must certify that the methodology can predict 15 percent of the estimated variation. The General Accounting Office will review the recommended changes in the methodology and make a recommendation to the Congress before the January 1991 update on appropriate modifications in the payment methodology.

d. Waiver of 50-50 rule.—The Committee bill permits the Secretary of HHS to waive the 50-50 enrollment composition rule for an HMO or CMP with a risk-sharing contract if the following criteria are met:

1. Both the organization with the risk contract and the parent company must demonstrate profitability for the most recent 3 consecutive years. If the plan seeking a waiver is a new organization established by the parent company as part of an expansion program, the parent company must establish a reserve fund to ensure solvency of the new operation until profitability is achieved.

2. The plan must have been a Medicare risk contractor for at least three years. If the plan seeking the waiver is a new organization, the parent organization must have five years of successful experience in operating an HMO and two years experience operating plans with Medicare risk contracts in two or more states.

3. The plan seeking a waiver (or plan operated by the parent company in the case of a new plan) must have a total enrollment (including non-Medicare) of at least 100,000 enrollees.

4. The plan seeking a waiver must agree to the intensified level of review by a peer review organization (PRO) or quality review organization (QRO). A plan that is already on intensified review as a result of the identification of quality problems may not be considered for this waiver until the Secretary is satisfied that the quality problems have been corrected.

5. As a condition of the waiver, the plan must agree to fund an annual membership satisfaction survey to be conducted either by an independent survey firm or the PRO/QRO. The survey must include satisfaction measures drawn from three populations:

a. The enrolled HMO/CMP membership;

b. HMO members who have been discharged from a hospital within a previsions 30 day period, and

c. disenrollees.

The results of these surveys must be reported to the Secretary.

6. In exchange for approval of an increased proportion of Medicare enrollees, the plan with a waiver under this section must provide, at no additional charge to the enrolled beneficiary or Medicare (i.e., within the Medicare allowed coinsurance and deductible amounts), special services that are uniquely targeted toward an elderly Medicare population and are not covered by the Medicare benefit package or routinely provided to non-Medicare enrollees in the plan. These geriatric services must include a multidisciplinary geriatric assessment for each new beneficiary enrolled after the date that the waiver is approved (performed by a social worker, physician and a nurse, each of whom has a specialty in geriatrics of has completed a geriatric training program), which results in a plan for each beneficiary to treat or manage specific medical conditions and identifies a beneficiary's level of disability as determined by objective criteria that measure impairment of activities of daily living (ADL) in six areas (toileting, eating, mobility, bathing, continence and dressing) and objective criteria that measure cognitive impairment. Medicare enrollees who are determined to be dependent in 3 or more ADLs for at least 3 months would be eligible to receive home and community based long-term care services. Home and community based long-term care services are defined as non-medical services provided to prevent or delay a Medicare beneficiary from entering a nursing home. The home and community based long-term care services offered by the plan must include at least one and preferably will include more of the following services: homemaker or chore services, personal care services, adult day health care, meals on wheels, lifeline telephone assistance, transportation, geriatric case management, rehabilitation and home adaptation, special health education programs geared to the elderly, or geriatric mental health services.

7. The waiver will be approved for a three year period. The additional benefits must be available to enrollees for at least three years and may extend beyond the waiver period. The Secretary must review the organization's compliance with the terms of the waiver, including the results of the intensified quality review and the membership satisfaction surveys, on an annual basis. The waiver may be withdrawn if the plan fails to comply with any of the provisions.

8. The Secretary is required to evaluate the cost and impact of the waiver, including any impact on the financial viability of the plan, after two years and recommend to Congress whether the waiver authority should be extended or whether any changes should be made in the 50/50 enrollment requirement.

e. Physician Incentive Payments.—The Committee bill amends §1128A(b)(1) and §1876(c) and 1903(m) of the Social Security Act to prohibit an HMO or CMP with a Medicare risk contract or a prepaid plan with a Medicaid contract from making any direct and specific individual payment to a physician as an inducement to withhold or limit a specific medically necessary service to an identifiable patient. If a plan violates this prohibition, it will be subject to civil monetary penalties of $25,000 for each determination.

f. Temporary Waiver for Watts Health Foundation.—The Committee bill extends the waiver of the 50/50 rule until January 1, 1994. Beginning January 1, 1990, the HHS Secretary will conduct an annual review of Watts' compliance with quality assurance requirements, including requirements related to health outcomes and peer review of the provision of care. If Watts receives an unfavorable review and fails, after notice, to correct deficiencies, then the Secretary may suspend enrollment or payment for newly enrolled individuals.

g. Benefit Stabilization Fund.—The Committee bill makes permanent the authority to establish a benefit stabilization fund.

h. Enrollment in Medicare Risk Contract.—The Committee bill provides that CHP, the medical group affiliated with Long Island Jewish Medical Center, may include the enrollees of a State licensed health maintenance organization with whom CHP has agreed to assume full financial risk for provision of hospital and physician services for purposes of meeting the Medicare risk contracting requirement that no more than 50 percent of the enrolled membership be Medicare or Medicaid beneficiaries and the requirement that there be a minimum enrollment of 5,000 persons. The waiver will be approved for two years, and then CHP will be required to meet the 50 percent and 5,000 member requirements. The members of the HMO with whom CHP has an ageement may be not considered for purposes of any other Medicare risk contract.

i. Limit on Payment for Part B Services.—Payments for emergency and urgently needed services provided by nonaffiliated physicians to Medicare beneficiaries who are enrolled in an HMO paid on a risk basis would be limited to the amount that Medicare would have paid in the fee-for-service system.

j. Temporary Waiver of Enrollment Composition Rule for Related Entities.—For a period of two years, the Secretary may count, for purposes of the 50/50 enrollment rule, the enrolled members of an entity that is a separate corporation but is functionally integrated with a qualified HMO through common ownership or control. The Secretary must be satisfied that the entity: meets the definition of an eligible organization; provides services in the same geographic area through essentially the same physicians and providers as the contracting HMO; uses an integrated quality assurance program; and uses common grievance procedures, claims processing, management and administrative services. If some of the providers or physicians are affiliated with the entity but not with the HMO, then only the members of the entity that use common providers and physicians may be deemed to be HMO members for purposes of 50/50 determination.

TENNESSEE PRIMARY CARE NETWORK

Present Law.—No Federal Medicaid matching payments may be made for services provided by entities contracting with states on a prepaid capitation or other risk basis if 75 percent or more of the enrollees are Medicaid recipients or Medicare beneficiaries. The Secretary has waived the 75 percent limit for Tennessee Primary Care Network, Inc. since May 1984.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill extends the Medicaid waiver of the 75/25 enrollment composition requirement for Tennessee Primary Care Network, Inc. under the same terms and conditions through June 30, 1992. Beginning January 1, 1990, the HHS Secretary will conduct an annual review of Tennessee Primary Care Network's compliance with quality assurance requirements. If Network receives an unfavorable review and fails, after notice, to correct deficiencies, then the Secretary may suspend federal matching funds for newly enrolled individuals.

The Secretary will have the authority to approve waivers of the 75 percent enrollment standard on a case-by-case basis after he has complied with the following requirements: (1) conduct a study of situations where the 75/25 percent enrollment standard is not practical and/or where alternative safeguards or procedures to private enrollment and oversight could be used to assure that prepaid health care organizations provide quality care and are fiscally sound; (2) publish in the Federal Register by April 1, 1990 for review and comment a set of minimum standards that prepaid organizations must meet to be considered eligible for an enrollment composition waiver (including standards to assure that high quality is maintained) and the terms under which waivers will be approved; and (3) publish revised standards and terms as a final notice. A waiver under this section shall initially be approved for three years; the Secretary shall determine the terms of the renewal.

END STAGE RENAL DISEASE (ESRD) COMPOSITE RATE

Present Law.—Renal dialysis services for patients with end stage renal disease are reimbursed under two methods. Under method I, hospital-based and freestanding facilities are paid a flat amount, known as the composite rate, that takes into account the proportion of patients dialyzing at home. There are two composite rates, one for free-standing facilities ($125 per treatment) and one for hospital-based units ($129 per treatment). While the Secretary of Health and Human Services has the authority to adjust the composite rate, the law does not provide for periodic, automatic inflation updates to the composite rates.

Under method II, the beneficiary makes his or her own arrangements to receive home dialysis equipment, supplies, and support services. The beneficiary (or supplier, if assignment is taken) is paid directly based on itemized bills and the reasonable charge methodology.

In 1986, HCFA proposed to reduce the composite rate by approximately $6.00 per treatment; OBRA 1986 superseded this proposal by reducing the composite rates by $2.00 for 1987 and FY 1988. OBRA 86 mandated an Institute of Medicine (IOM) study on the effects of reimbursement policies on the quality of care. The study, which was actually conducted by the Urban Institute, was submitted to Congress in Congress in December 1988. OBRA 87 again required that a study be conducted to address, among other things, access and quality of ESRD services. Again, Congress requested that the Institute of Medicine conduct the study. The Institute's report is to be submitted three years after enactment.

HCFA has proposed to reduce the composite rates again.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision prohibits reductions in the composite rates for two years, through FY 1991. It also requires the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (ProPAC) to study and recommend appropriate reimbursement rates for FY 1992. The study, which should take into account the preliminary provisions of the Institute of Medicine study, is due on or before June 1, 1991.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

RECONSIDERATION OF PRO QUALITY DENIALS BEFORE NOTICE TO BENEFICIARY

Present Law.—Section 1154(a) of the Social Security Act requires a Peer Review Organization (PRO) to review services to determine whether they are medically necessary, meet quality standards, and are furnished in an appropriate setting. It also authorizes the denial of payment for services that fail to meet one or more of these requirements and requires both the beneficiary and the practitioner or provider to be notified promptly of any payment denial determination. Either party may ask the PRO to reconsider its determination.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) has concluded that the statute requires the beneficiary to be notifed of a payment denial for substandard care before the PRO affords the practitioner or provider an opportunity for reconsideration.

PROs, physician representatives, and some beneficiary groups, have expressed concerns that this sequence of events could encourage unwarranted malpractice litigation. Others have suggested that it will be confusing to beneficiaries if a PRO sends an initial notice of a denial for substandard care, reverses its determination upon reconsideration, and then sends a second notice to the beneficiary reversing its earlier notice.

Committee Provision.—The bill requires that, in the case of denials for substandard quality of care, the provider or practitioner receive notice and opportunity for reconsideration before the beneficiary is notified.

Effective Date.—Determinations on or after date of enactment.

INVOLVEMENT OF NON-PHYSICIAN PROFESSIONALS IN PRO REVIEW ACTIVITIES

Present Law.—Peer Review Organizations (PROs) review, for medical necessity and quality, the services physicians and other health practitioners provide to Medicare beneficiaries. An adverse determination by a PRO may lead to denial of payment and other sanctions.

Under current law, these determinations may be made only by a doctor of medicine, dentistry, or osteopathy. PROs are required, to the extent necessary and appropriate, to utilize other health practitioners in the review of services furnished by other like practitioners.

Committee provision.—The provision requires that PROs establish procedures for the involvement of health care practitioners who are not doctors of medicine in the review or services provided by members of their profession.

Effective date.—Applies to contracts entered into after enactment.

DELAY MEDICARE PAYMENTS

Present Law.—Intermediaries and carriers who process Medicare bills are required to pay 95% of "clean" claims within 25 days of receipt in FY 1989 and 24 days in FY 1990 (except for bills from participating physicians, which must be paid within 18 and 17 days respectively). Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, payments to all providers may not be made after receipt before a period of 14 days has expired in FY 1989; the Congressional Budget Office assumes that this practice will be extended administratively in FY 1990 and beyond.

Committee Provision.—The Committee provision requires that providers claims not be paid before a period of 16 days has expired following receipt in FY 1990. Requires that 95% of clean claims and within 21 days of receipt for participating physicians.

Effective Date.—Applies to claims received in the 12-month period beginning October 1, 1989.

The Committee wishes to clarify with respect to payments by Medicare and by States under Medicaid that providers may use Medicare and Medicaid receivables as collateral for loans, or may give a nonpossessory security interest in, such receivables, as long as payment by Medicare or by States under Medicaid for services rendered by the provider is always made directly to the provider.

MEDICARE SECONDARY PAYER PROVISIONS (SEC.)

Present Law

(a) Identification of Medicare Secondary Payer Situations.—Medicare is the secondary payer to other third party insurers under specified circumstances when beneficiaries may be covered by the other insurer. Medicare may be the secondary payer to automobile, medical, no-fault and liability insurance, and to employer health plans. Requirements that employers offer primary coverage to Medicare-eligible enrollees or their dependents, and penalties for failure to comply with these requirements, vary with the basis for the individual's Medicare eligibility (age, disability or end-stage renal disease) as well as with the size of the employer. For beneficiaries eligible for Medicare on the basis that they have end-stage renal disease, however, Medicare is the secondary payer to available employer-based health insurance only for the first 12 months of eligibility.

The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) currently identifies Medicare secondary payer cases in the following ways: beneficiary questionnaires, provider identification of third party coverage when services are provided, and data transfers with other Federal and State agencies. According to HHS, no more than two-thirds of Medicare secondary payer cases are identified through these means.

Medicare contractors (insurance companies which process Medicare claims) currently are covered under the Privacy Act because they routinely handle beneficiary-specific information, including medical history and Social Security numbers. Medicare contractors currently are prohibited from unauthorized disclosure of this information, subject to criminal penalties.

The Internal Revenue Code prohibits disclosure of tax returns and return information of taxpayers, with exceptions for authorized disclosure to certain Governmental entities in certain enumerated instances. No disclosure is allowed to third parties, such as employers and private insurers. Unauthorized disclosure is a felony punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than five years, or both. An action for civil damages also may be brought for unauthorized disclosure.

Any authorized recipient of return information must maintain a system of safeguards to protect against unauthorized disclosure of the information.

(b) Uniform Enforcement and Coordination of Benefits.—A variety of penalties exist to enforce compliance with the Medicare secondary payer provisions. Employers who do not comply with the working disabled provisions are subject to an excise tax equal to 25% of the group health plans' expenses. Failure to comply with the working aged provisions is a violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, as amended. Employers who violate the secondary payer provision for ESRD beneficiaries can lose their tax deduction for group health expenses.

Medicare is the secondary payer under certain circumstances to other third party insurance, including employer health plans, automobile, medical, no-fault, and liability insurance and workers' compensation. Under most circumstances, payments made by the third party insurer are credited toward deductible requirements under Medicare Parts A and B. However, payments made by workers' compensation and liability and related insurance are not counted toward Medicare deductibles and coinsurance.

(c) Special Enrollment Period for Disabled Employees.—Under certain circumstances, Medicare is the secondary payer when individuals are covered by other third party insurers. Medicare is secondary payer to employer health plans under which beneficiaries are covered either through their own employment or a spouse's. Aged beneficiaries who have been covered under employer health plans are entitled to a special enrollment period under Medicare. Disabled beneficiaries are eligible for a special enrollment period only if they are covered under a large group health plan.

(d) No Intermediary and Carrier Matching Based on Private Activities Required.—Under current law, the Secretary may terminate an agreement with a fiscal intermediary or carrier if he finds, after applying standards and criteria regarding claims processing and overall performance, that the entity has failed substantially to carry out the agreement or that the functions provided for in the agreement are disadvantageous or inconsistent with the efficient adminstration of Medicare.

(e) Treatment of Employment as a Member of a Religious Order.—Medicare is the secondary payer to private employer-based health insurance for certain beneficiaries, including beneficiaries who work or who are covered by an employed spouse's plan. Employers must make primary coverage available to these beneficaries on the same basis that coverage is available to similar employees or spouses not covered by Medicare. The Health Care Financing Administration has indicated that it considers as "employment" services provided by members of religious orders. As a result, religious orders must offer their Medicare-eligible members primary insurance coverage if they insure younger members.

(f) Study of Medicare Secondary Payer Beneficiary Protections.—Medicare is the secondary payer to other third party insurers under specified circumstances when beneficiaries may be covered by the other insurer. Medicare may be the secondary payer to automobile, medical, no-fault and liability insurance, and to employer health plans.

If payment has been made by Medicare in a circumstance where another insurer is primary payer, the United States may bring an action against entities responsible for payment or against an entity that has been paid. This has been interpreted to authorize recoupment from beneficiaries where the beneficiary has received payment (e.g., from a liability insurer). The Secretary is authorized to waive requirements that Medicare payments be recovered in the case of an individual claim in certain circumstances.

The amounts of settlements in liability cases, and the distribution of settlements where hospitals are among the parties with a financial interest in the case, are governed by a variety of State laws. In many cases, the amount paid to providers of health care by or on behalf of a patient who receives a liability settlement may be different from the amount Medicare would have paid for the same services.

Committee Provision

(a) Identification of Medicare Secondary Payer Situations.—The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and the Social Security Administration (SSA) must provide information to the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) to improve identification and collection of Medicare secondary payer cases. No later than October 15, 1989, SSA must provide IRS with the names and Social Security numbers of all Medicare beneficiaries. No later than February 1, 1990, IRS must provide SSA with a file of the names and Social Security numbers of all Medicare beneficiaries who filed a tax return for the previous calendar year. Information on spouses would be linked for individuals filing joint or individual returns to enable HCFA to identify the spouses of beneficiaries who may be covered by an employer health plan.

Information provided by IRS to SSA will be matched by SSA against the Master Earnings File to determine whether a W-2 was filed for the beneficiary or the beneficiary's spouse. SSA will provide HCFA with a listing of all Medicare beneficiaries and their spouses, and the name of the beneficiary's or spouse's employer if: 1) the beneficiary and/or spouse filed a W-2, and 2) the beneficiary and/or spouse was employed by a large employer, defined as an employer with 20 or more employees.

HCFA will use this listing provided by SSA to identify more thoroughly secondary payer cases, including Medicare beneficiaries with employer-provided health coverage through the spouse's employment. HHS's contractors will use this new information to contact employers in writing to determine whether the employer provided health coverage and the date of such coverage. Current restrictions on the disclosure of information under the Internal Revenue Code and the Privacy Act will also apply to the new information provided by SSA and IRS to HCFA.

Third party payers, such as Medicare carriers and employers, receiving taxpayers information from HHS will be subject to restrictions and safeguards on disclosure similar to those restrictions, safeguards and penalties currently provided for in the Internal Revenue Code with respect to other authorized recipients of taxpayer information.

To enable HHS to verify employer-provided health coverage, employers are required to respond to HCFA inquiries within 30 days of receiving the written request. HCFA will pay as secondary payer on all claims for beneficiaries currently covered by an employer health plan. Payments will be recovered from private insurers for claims erroneously paid for beneficiaries if the claim was submitted at a time when the beneficiary was covered by an employer health plan.

The provision expires on September 30, 1991.

(b) Uniform Enforcement and Coordination of Benefits.—Current law relating to Medicare secondary payer policy is recodified and changes are made to penalties for employers who fail to provide primary coverage where required to do so. The Social Security Act will explicitly require employers to offer all beneficiaries (aged, disabled and ESRD in the first twelve months) primary coverage to the degree it would be available to other non-Medicare eligible employees or dependents. Employers failing to comply with this requirement will be subject to an excise tax. All other requirements and penalties in current law are repealed.

Payments by workers' compensation or liability and related insurance will be credited toward Medicare deductibles and coinsurance.

Due to pending litigation, the Committee has taken no position on whether hospitals can seek imposition of liens against liability rewards in excess of Medicare payments. The Committee is aware that there are two lawsuits addressing the lien issue that have not yet been resolved. These include an appeal by HHS of the opinion by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in the Oregon Association of Hospitals, et al. v. Bowen et al. case (708 F. Supp 1135 (D. Oreg. 1989)) and a case filed by the American Hospital Association in District of Columbia District Court AHA, et al v. Bowen, Civil Action 88-2027 RCL (D.D.C. filed Jul. 22, 1988). Thus, the Committee believes that it is premature and inappropriate for the Congress to enact legislation before judicial review is complete.

(c) Special Enrollment Period for Disabled Employees.—The special enrollment periods available to aged beneficiaries who were covered by employer health plans are extended to disabled beneficiaries for whom Medicare has been secondary payer.

(d) No Intermediary and Carrier Matching Based on Private Activities Required.—The Secretary of HHS is barred from requiring fiscal intermediaries and carriers to match data other than data obtained under this provision with Medicare data for the purposes of identifying beneficiaries for whom Medicare is secondary payer.

(e) Treatment of Employment as a Member of a Religious Order.—Services provided by members of religious orders are not considered "employment," and religious orders need not offer their older or disabled members insurance that is primary to Medicare.

(f) Study of Medicare Secondary Payer Beneficiary Protections.—The Comptroller General of the Government Accounting Office is required to conduct a study and issue a report to Congress no later than August 1, 1990, on issues related to protection of beneficiaries' rights in cases where Medicare is the secondary payer. Specifically, the study must examine HCFA's policy with regard to the amount of recoveries from beneficiaries; how such policy interacts with State laws governing structured settlements; whether changes in such policy are needed; and which procedures used by HCFA to identify beneficiaries with insurance coverage that may be primary to Medicare result in erroneous determinations and result in beneficiary liability for payment. The required report must also include recommendations about whether Congress should broaden the circumstances under which the Secretary may waive recovery from beneficiaries.

Effective Date.—(a) Effective October 1, 1989; (b) applies to items and services furnished after enactment; (c) applies to enrollments occurring after, and premiums for months after, the second calendar quarter beginning after the date of enactment; (d) applies to agreements and contracts entered into or renewed on or after enactment; (e) applies to items and services furnished on or after October 1, 1989; (f) enactment;

HOSPITAL-BASED NURSING SCHOOLS

Present Law.—Medicare pays hospitals the direct costs of approved medical education programs, including programs to train resident physicians, nurses and allied health professionals. These costs are excluded from Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS) and are reimbursed on a reasonable cost basis (for nurses and allied health professionals) or using a special formula (for resident physicians). Costs may include stipends for residents and other students, supervisory salaries of teachers and overhead costs (i.e., classroom space).

Under current Medicare regulations, hospital costs of approved medical education programs (including nursing education) are recognized as reimburseable under the pass-through only if the program is operated by the provider. (Non-provider operated programs may involve allowable costs, but the costs are assumed to be covered under the DRG payment.) This policy, adopted in 1984, reversed an earlier policy under which hospital costs would be allowable by Medicare if incurred in support of joint programs conducted in the name of an educational institution but with support from one or more hospitals. Under pre-1984 policy, hospital costs were allowed as long as: (a) hospital support did not constitute a redistribution of non-provider costs to the provider; (b) the provider received a benefit for the support furnished and (c) the provider's support was less than the costs it would have incurred with its own program.

Based on a recent interpretation of the 1984 policy by the Provider Reimbursement Review Board, intermediaries have recently begun disallowing nursing education costs claimed by hospitals that are related to nursing schools.

The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 directed the Secretary of HHS to conduct five 5-year demonstrations of the effect of authorizing pass-through reimbursement for the clinical costs of non-hospital operated nursing education programs where a written agreement exists between the hospital and the educational institution.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill prohibits the Secretary from recouping from or adjusting Medicare payments before September 30, 1990, because of alleged overpayments relating to questions of whether a hospital's reported costs for nursing and allied health education programs are allowable or whether the costs are included or excluded from PPA payments for operating costs. The Secretary is required to issue regulations on these issued by June 30, 1990, in consultation with PROPAC and after allowing for public comment. The final rule may not take effect until the later of 30 days after publication or October 1, 1990. The regulations must include: criteria for determining that an education program is "hospital-operated", taking into account certain organizational and operational factors; types of allowable costs; the distinction between educational costs and operating costs of hospital services; and benefits and cost-effectiveness of the education programs.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

BASE YEAR COST FOR GRADUATE MEDICAL EDUCATION

Present Law.—Medicare pays teaching hospitals the direct costs of medical education (resident salaries, supervisory time, classroom space). Under the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, Medicare direct medical education payments to a hospital are limited in the aggregate by the number of the hospital's residents times a hospital-specific base year cost per resident indexed forward for inflation. In most cases, the Secretary of HHS is required to use 1984 as the base year for this calculation, but may choose a different year for hospitals not involved in medical education or in Medicare in 1984.

Committee Provision.—The bill allows the Secretary to use a base year other than 1984 for hospitals that were involved in medical education at the time but which have substantially upgraded their medical education program since that time, if the hospital requests the use of a different base year.

Effective Date.—Payments based on an alternative base year apply to the first cost reporting period for which the Secretary determines that the hospital's program expansion was substantially implemented

STUDY OF GRADUATE MEDICAL EDUCATION

Present Law.—Medicare issues additional payments under the prospective payment system (PPS) to inpatient hospitals with graduate medical education, to reflect the additional indirect costs associated with training medical residents. Medicare also pays, outside PPS, for the direct cost of medical education programs, such as salaries and overhead.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill requires the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission and the Physician Payment Review Commission to conduct a study of Medicare reimbursement policy for graduate medical education costs and to submit a report to Congress by October 1, 1990. The report is to include recommendations for reforms in medical education payments, focus on ways of encouraging residencies and fellowships in priority practice areas, such as geriatrics and primary and preventive care, and practice locations, including rural areas and ambulatory and long-term care settings. Among the options the report is to consider are higher indirect cost adjustments for these priority areas, modifications in the system for reimbursing direct costs, and direct reimbursement to physicians for supervising residents.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

HOME HEALTH WAGE INDEX

Current Law.—Medicare pays home health agencies the reasonable cost of covered services, subject to annual limits. The annual limits are set at 112% of the average cost agencies incur in delivering services, but are adjusted to reflect geographic variations in wage levels. Until this year, the Health Care Financing Administration adjusted the home health limits for area wage variations by applying the same area wage index used to adjust hospital payments under the prospective payment system (the hospital wage index is based on a special survey of hospitals). The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 required that, effective July 1, 1988, HCFA implement a special wage index based on audited data from home health agencies to adjust the limits. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 delayed this requirement until July 1, 1989 and substituted a requirement that the data be "verified" rather than "audited." HCFA has now published a final home health wage index effective July 1, 1989. Because in many cases the new home health wage index levels for specific areas vary widely from the hospital wage index previously used (plus or minus 60%), HCFA has announced that it cap the potential change in a home agency's limit at plus or minus 20%.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill requires HCFA to continue using the hospital-based wage index that was in effect for cost reporting periods beginning before July 1, 1989, until cost reporting periods beginning on or after 7/1/90.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

GAO STUDY OF HOME HEALTH PAPERWORK

Current Law.—No provision.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill requires the GAO to report to Congress on information collection and paperwork required of home health agencies participating in Medicare. The bill requires the report to focus on information requirements relating to coverage, reimbursement and certification and the degree to which unnecessary duplication exists. GAO is also required to make recommendations with regard to the feasibility of eliminating the requirements for dual reporting for the purposes of Medicare and Medicaid participation. GAO is required to report by June 1, 1990.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON HOME HEALTH CLAIMS

Current Law.—The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 created an Advisory Committee on Medicare Home Health Claims composed of representatives of the home health industry, fiscal intermediaries, physician groups and senior citizen groups. The Committee is to study the reasons for the increase in home health claims denials in 1986-7, the ramifications of the increase, and the need to reform the denial process. The Committee was required to report on its study by July 1, 1989. The report has not yet been transmitted. Such sums as are necessary are authorized.

Committee Provision.—The bill extends the Committee's authority through October 1, 1990, and requires it to evaluate and report to Congress by October 1, 1990 on the implementation of its recommendations and the effectiveness of any changes made.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

ESSENTIAL CARE HOSPITALS

Present Law.—No provision.

Committee Provision.—The bill requires the Secretary of HHS, through the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, to make by August 31, 1990, four-year grants to no fewer than 10 or more than 15 rural hospitals for the cost of transforming the hospital into an essential care hospital (ECH). Services will begin no later than January 1, 1991. Grants may not exceed $100,000 annually for each year for each hospital and are to be made for costs incurred in planning, implementing and evaluating the ECH. (Grants are to be in addition to payments for services, with payments for services made on a basis described below). Applications will be submitted to the Secretary, with copies to the Governor, chief public health officer and State office of rural health if appropriate. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary to carry out the demonstration.

For the purposes of the demonstration, ECH services include limited (as defined by the Secretary) inpatient care, emergency visits, ambulatory care, outpatient surgical care, stabilization care before transfer to another facility, and other services and supplies. To be eligible for ECH status, a hospital must be located only in rural areas, at least 30 miles from a hospital and would have fewer than 50 beds. Various staffing, quality assurance, governance and affiliation requirements will apply. ECHs will be required to have a transfer agreement with referral hospitals. ECHs will be authorized to maintain swing beds.

Payments to ECHs for inpatient services will be equivalent to payments under the prospective payment system for the first year, after which the Secretary may develop a new alternative methodology. Payment for other services will be on a basis to be determined by the Secretary. The Secretary is required to waive Medicaid program requirements to allow MAFs to participate in Medicaid.

The Secretary is required to provide Congress with interim and final evaluation reports.

RURAL HEALTH PROVISIONS RELATED TO PARTS A AND B

Present Law

a. Rural Health Medical Education Demonstrations.—The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 directed the Secretary of HHS to conduct demonstrations at four sites to assist resident physicians in developing field clinical experience in rural areas. Sponsoring hospitals participating in the demonstration enter into agreements to provide residents for a one-to-three month rotation at rural hospitals. Sponsoring hospitals are eligible for Medicare payment of any surpervision costs they incur. OBRA 1987 included various provisions relating to the location of the demonstration projects.

b. Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (PROPAC) Representation.—The Social Security Amendments of 1983 created the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission to advise Congress on issues related to Medicare hospital payment. PROPAC members are appointed by the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment and consists of 17 members appointed for three-year terms. The Commission's membership is to include individuals with a variety of professional, geographic and substantive backgrounds. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 specified that PROPAC should include "a balance between urban and rural representatives."

c. Office of Rural Health.—The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 directed the Secretary of HHS to create an Office of Rural Health Policy to advise the Secretary of the effects of current and proposed policies on financing of and access to health care in rural areas.

Committee Provision

a. Rural Health Medical Education Demonstrations.—The bill expands the number of sites from four to ten, with the additional six sites to be selected without regard to the geographical requirements of OBRA 1987. New projects are to begin within 6 months after enactment.

b. Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (PROPAC) Representation.—The bill expresses the sense of the Senate that at least four additional members with demonstrated experience in providing or developing rural health services should be appointed to PROPAC, and that in the future at least 25 percent of PROPAC's members should have such experience.

c. Office of Rural Health.—The bill specifically authorizes the existing rural health research center program and authorizes $13 million of each of FY90-92 for this purpose, including $3 million for the Office of Rural Health Policy. It establishes in law the current National Advisory Committee on Rural Health, and authorizes a Federal matching program to encourage States to establish offices of rural health. The grant program will be administered through the HHS Office of Rural Health. The authorization level for the program is $3.75 million in FY1990, $2.5 million in FY1991 and $1.25 million in FY1992. Federal matching funds will be available dollar-for-dollar for funds spent by a State to establish an office of rural health. However, no State may qualify for a grant in excess of 2% of the annual appropriation of the program, and no State may spend more than 20% of Federal funds on research. State offices of rural health established under the grant program will be required to carry out certain activities and will be authorized to carry out other activities.

ESRD NETWORK FUNDING

Present Law.—Under section 188(b)(7) of the Social Security Act, administrative costs of an End Stage Renal Disease (ESRD) Network are funded by reducing by 50 cents the amount otherwise payable for each treatment furnished in the areas served by the network.

This funding mechanism has the effect of limiting the funds available to administer a network to the amount actually collected in its area.

As a result, some networks have been inadequately funded to carry out their statutory responsibilities. For example, networks that cover large geographic areas with small patient loads do not have sufficient funds to finance necessary staff and travel.

Committee Provision.—The committee provision authorizes the Secretary to redistribute network administrative funds in a budget neutral manner so that each network has the minimum funding necessary to carry out its statutory responsibilities.

Remaining funds would be distributed to the networks under a formula developed by the Secretary to ensure equitable treatment for all networks, taking into account the geographic size of the network area, the number of providers of ESRD services in the area, the number of individuals who are entitled to the Medicare ESRD benefit in the area, and the proportion of the aggregate administrative funds collected in the network's area.

Effective Date.—January 1, 1990.

PROTECTIONS FOR ESRD NETWORK MEDICAL REVIEW

Present Law.—As a part of an ESRD network's responsibilities under section 1881 of the Social Security Act, network physicians are required to perform medical review of the quality and appropriateness of covered services.

Unlike physicians in the Peer Review Organization (PRO) program, ESRD network physicians are not protected from liability judgments for medical review activities conducted in good faith.

In addition, although there is statutory authority to reimburse PROs for legal costs arising from their duties, there is no comparable authority with respect to ESRD networks.

Moreover, although the ESRD networks are required to perform medical review activities, current law does not provide for the confidentiality of the information collected for these activities as it does for PROs. Thus, any medical review information gathered by the networks would be releasable.

These limitations in current law have impeded implementation of required medical review and patient grievance review activities of ESRD networks.

Committee Provision.—The committee provisions provide for the same protection for ESRD medical review activities as for PROs.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

PART B PREMIUM

Current Law.—Individuals entitled to benefits under part A of the Medicare program have the option of enrolling in part B of the program as well. Enrollees pay a monthly premium. The part B premium originally was set to ensure that enrollee premiums covered 50 percent of the costs of the part B program; the remainder of the funding came from general revenues.

Subsequent legislation limited the percentage increase in the part B premium for a year to the percentage increase in Social Security cash benefits for the same year. This had the effect of decreasing the share of program costs borne by enrollees to less than 25% by 1984.

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1983 (TEFRA) and the Social Security Amendments of 1983 provided for part B premiums for 1984 and 1985 to be set at a level that would cover 25 percent of program costs. If there were no cost of living adjustment (COLA) under the cash benefits program, there would be no increase in the part B premium, and an individual's premium increase could not exceed the increase in his or her cash benefits. Subsequent legislation extended these provisions through 1989.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill extends for one year (through calendar year 1990) the current provision requiring part B premiums to cover 25 percent of program costs.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

PHYSICIAN REFERRALS

Present Law.—Under the "anti-kickback" laws applicable to health care programs established under the Social Security Act, it is a felony to knowingly and willfully offer, pay, solicit, or receive remuneration in return for referral of a patient for covered items and services. The prohibition against remuneration in return for referrals extends not only to kickbacks, bribes, and rebates but also to any other form of remuneration, whether made directly or indirectly, overtly or covertly, in cash or in kind. A person convicted of violating the anti-kickback laws may be fined not more than $25,000, imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both. A determination that a person has engaged in prohibited activities may also lead to exclusion from program participation.

Section 14(a) of the Medicare and Medicaid Patient and Program Protection Act of 1987 requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to promulgate regulations specifying payment practices that, although potentially capable of inducing referrals, do not pose a substantial risk of abuse and should not be considered illegal remuneration or reason for exclusion from program participation. This provision was enacted in response to provider concerns that the laws were so broadly drafted as to impede legitimate and beneficial practices.

On January 23, 1989, the Secretary published a proposed rule to provide a "safe harbor" under the anti-kickback laws for specified payment practices. Among the practices addressed in the proposed rule is referral of a patient to an entity with which the referring physician has a financial relationship, such as an investment interest or a personal services contract. This practice is sometimes referred to as a "self-referral."

The proposed rule contains a safe harbor for the payment of dividends by large corporations to physician investors, based on the assumption that these companies are large enough to ensure that a physician investor's return on investment will not be affected significantly by the volume of his or her referrals. Instead of creating a safe harbor for physician investment interests in smaller entities, such as clinical laboratories, magnetic resonance imaging centers, and durable medical equipment (DME) suppliers, the Secretary invites comments on the desirability of establishing a safe harbor for arrangements in which (1) a bona fide opportunity to invest is made available on an equal basis to individuals not in a position to make referrals, (2) there are no requirements to make referrals, (3) the existence of a physician's investment is disclosed to a referred patient, and (4) the amount of payment is not related to the number of referrals.

Practices falling outside a safe harbor are not necessarily illegal but are at risk of prosecution under the anti-kickback laws.

Due August 18, 1989, publication of the final rule has been delayed in part because of the large number of public comments received.

A provision of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 prohibits (with certain exceptions) a home IV therapy provider from providing services to a Medicare beneficiary if the referring physician has an ownership interest in, or compensation arrangement with, the provider. Sanctions include denial of payment for the services, civil money penalties of not more than $15,000 per violation, and exclusion from program participation.

The same provision required the Inspector General of the Department of Health and Human Services to study and report to Congress on the prevalence of self-referral arrangements and whether they lead to inappropriate utlilization of services.

In the study, the Inspector General found that 12 percent of physicians who bill Medicare have ownership or investment interests in entities to which they refer patients. He also found significant variation in the degree to which utilization of services by patients of physician investors exceeded utilization by Medicare beneficiaries generally. Focusing on independent clinical labs (ICLs), independent physiological labs (IPLs), and DME suppliers, he found that patients of physician investors utilized 45 percent more clinical laboratory services, 13 percent more physiological testing services, and no more DME services, than other Medicare patients.

In conducting the study, the Inspector General discovered certain limitations in the available data. First, carriers who process part B claims do not have adequate information about physician ownership interests in entities providing services; thus it was necessary to survey a sample of providers. Second, claims for part B ancillary services generally do not contain the name or physician provider number of the referring physician; thus it was not possible to trace the services utilized by the patient of a physician investor to that physician. Finally, since members of a group practice sometimes use the same physician provider number in submitting claims for physicians services, it was not always possible to sort the patients of group practice members who were physician investors from those of members who were not.

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 requires the Secretary to establish a system that provides a unique identifier for each physician furnishing services to Medicare beneficiaries.

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 provided that Medicare would only pay the person actually providing clinical laboratory services. The purposes of this "direct billing" requirement was to prevent a physician from ordering a test and billing for it at a marked up price. It was felt that this practice inflated program costs and created an incentive for overutilization of such services.

An exception was provided for lab tests that were performed by a laboratory other than the one billing for the tests. This exception was intended to permit rural hospitals to utilize referral labs for tests they were unable to perform.

Physicians have utilized this exception to circumvent the direct billing requirement by investing in "shell" laboratories that perform few if any tests, while obtaining substantial discounts from referral labs competing for their business.

Committee Provision.—The Committee provision makes four changes in current law. First, it requires any entity claiming payment under part B of Medicare to disclose to the Secretary the name and physician provider number or identifier of each physician with an ownership or investment interest in the entity. This will enable carriers to identify entities to be monitored for overutilization. Second, it requires that all part B claims contain the name and physician provider number or identifier of the referring or ordering phyisican. This will enable the carriers to match claims for part B ancillary services to referring physicians, as well as to the facility that provided the service. Third, the provision requires carriers to monitor the part B ancillary services for which physician investors refer their patients in order to detect patterns that may indicate overutilization of these services, and to report any suspected instances of unnecessary utilization to the appropriate peer review organization (PRO). Fourth, it limits the exception for referral labs to those labs that are an integral part of a rural hospital or do 70 percent of their own testing.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

DISREGARD OF COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS IN CERTAIN MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATIONS

Present Law.—Whether an individual is determined to be a "qualified Medicare beneficiary" (QMB) depends upon whether his or her income is less than a specified percentage of the Federal poverty level.

Cost-of-living adjustments for cash benefits under title II and title XVI of the Social Security Act become effective on January 1 of a calendar year. The Federal poverty levels for a year are not updated until the middle of February of that year.

As a result of this lag, an individual with income near (but below) the maximum income level for QMBs for a year may lose eligibility in the following year until the new poverty levels are issued.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill requires State Medicaid plans to disregard, during the first quarter of each calendar year, any increased income of qualified Medicare beneficiaries that is attributable to cost-of-living adjustments under title II or title XVI of the Social Security Act that become effective during that period.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

DAY HABILITATION SERVICES

Present Law.—Day habilitation services include a wide range of services provided to mentally retarded and developmentally disabled individuals in order to develop the self-help, socialization, and adaptive skills necessary for them to lead the most normal and productive lives possible. Some of these services, such as physical and occupational therapy, are services that would also be rehabilitative services if furnished to an individual recovering from an illness or physical injury.

Several State Medicaid plans have been furnishing day habilitation services for mentally retarded and developmentally disabled individuals under the statutory authority to provide rehabilitative services or clinic services.

The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) has recently informed these States that habilitation services for the mentally retarded and the developmentally disabled are covered in only two settings: an intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded (ICF/MR) and under a home and community based wavier authority. Otherwise and indivdual must be recovering from an illness or physical injury to be eligible for them.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill prohibits HCFA from withholding, suspending, disallowing, or denying federal financial participation for day habilitation services furnished pursuant to a State plan provision approved on or before June 30, 1989. HCFA will be permitted to do so on a prospective basis upon issuance of final regulations clarifying when such services are covered.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

HOME AND COMMUNITY-BASED SERVICES WAIVERS

Present Law

a. Bed and Board Exclusion.—Section 2176 of OBRA 81 permitted States to obtain waivers of certain Medicaid requirements in order to establish a home and community-based service program for a defined population (such as the aged or the mentally retarded) of persons who would otherwise require long-term institutional care. Costs for bed and board are excluded from those which a State may include as Medicaid costs under a waiver.

b. Residents of Terminated ICFs/MR.—In order to obtain a Section 2176 waiver, the State must demonstrate that average per capita Medicaid costs for wavier participants are no greater than would have been incurred in the absence of the waiver.

Committee Provision

a. Bed and Board Exclusion. The Committee bill provides that the "bed and board" exclusion does not apply to the share of rent and food costs attributable to an unrelated caregiver who is residing with a waiver participant and without whom the participant would require institutional care.

b. Residents of Terminated ICFs/MR.—The Committee bill provides that, in estimating per capita costs in the absence of a waiver for persons with mental retardation or a related condition who are residents of an ICF-MR whose Medicaid participation has been terminated, the State may use the costs that would have been incurred if the facility had not been terminated.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

EXTEND OPTION FOR CORRECTION AND REDUCTION

Current Law.—In the event of noncompliance of an intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded (ICF/MR) with Federal regulatory standards, the facility's participation in Medicaid may be terminated. However, if the deficiencies do not immediately jeopardize the health and safety of clients, States may implement a plan for correction of the deficiencies and/or reduction of the number of clients served. The authority for correction and reduction plans expires on January 1, 1990.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill permanently authorizes the option for States to submit correction and reduction plans for ICFs/MR facing a funding cutoff.

PREVOCATIONAL SERVICES

Current Law.—Habilitation services are authorized under the home and community based waiver program for persons with mental retardation or related conditions. The statute generally leaves the definition of waivered services to State discretion. In 1985, Congress specified that habilitation services, for those persons previously institutionalized in a Medicaid facility, are to include prevocational services (among other specified services).

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill allows payment of prevocational services for persons who have not resided in an institution. This provision clarifies congressional intent that prevocational services be available to persons who have not been institutionalized as well as to persons who have been institutionalized.

QUALIFIED SUBSTATE AGENCIES

Present Law.—Medicaid law prohibits providers from assigning Medicaid receivables to factors, collection agents who purchase from providers the right to collect the providers' outstanding claims. Some States, in implementing home and community-based services programs, have contracted with local governments or nonprofit agencies to manage the programs. These agencies pay service providers and then recover their costs from the Medicaid program. There have been contentions that this arrangement constitutes factoring and is therefore subject to the prohibition.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill clarifies that the administrative arrangements with sub-State government or nonprofit agencies do not constitute factoring for the purpose of the prohibition.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS

Present Law.—Medicaid is a Federal-State program under which Federal funds are available to match State expenditures to purchase specified medical services on behalf of eligible individuals.

Current regulations allow States to use as State expenditures for purposes of receiving Federal matching payments funds donated from private sources.

These funds are transferred to the State Medicaid agency, are under the agency's administrative control, and do not revert to the donor's facility or use unless the donor is a non-profit organization and the Medicaid agency, of its own volition decides to use the donor's facility.

In addition, some States use funds that are generated from taxes on health care providers to draw Federal matching funds.

In the President's proposed budget for FY 1989, the Administration indicated that it would issue regulations to limit the use of donated funds to draw down Federal matching payments.

Section 8431 of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 prohibited the Secretary from issuing final regulations changing the treatment of voluntary contributions or provider-paid taxes utilized by States to receive Federal matching funds under Medicaid. The prohibition expired May 1, 1989.

The President's budget for FY 1990 indicated that regulations changing the treatment of these contributions and taxes would be issued after expiration of the ban. These regulations have not yet been issued.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill provides that, at the option of the State, financial participation by the State in Medicaid may include the application of private funds donated by hospitals to, and subject to the unrestricted control of, the State.

The bill limits financial participation of this type to not more than 10 percent of the State's financial participation in Medicaid in a year, and provides that donations by a particular hospital may not exceed 10 percent of the hospital's gross revenues for a cost reporting period (excluding any Federal revenues under Medicare, Medicaid, or the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant).

The bill extends the prohibition on the issuance of final regulations to May 1, 1991 to the extent that it applies to provider-paid taxes.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

TREATMENT OF CERTAIN VETERANS' PENSION BENEFITS

Present Law.—Under current law, Veterans' Administration (VA) pension benefits are treated as income in determining an individual's eligibility for Medicaid.

VA pension payments are reduced by income received from other sources, such as Social Security or private pensions. In determining the amount of these reductions, however, an offset is provided for unreimbursed medical expenses.

Known as an adjustment for unreimbursed medical expenses (AUME), this offset increases the individual's VA pension to a level above what it otherwise would have been.

In the case of a disabled individual in a nursing facility, AUME may cause the individual's total income to exceed the Medicaid qualifying level.

In a State with a medically needy program, the increased income from AUME would be applied to the individual's medical expenses under the law's "spend down" requirements, thereby permitting the individual to remain eligible for Medicaid.

In a State without a medically needy program, however, the individual would lose Medicaid eligibility, become ineligible for AUME because he or she is no longer incurring the cost of institutional care, and then become eligible for Medicaid again when VA benefits became subject to full reductions for other income.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill requires States to exclude from Medicaid-countable income any increased income attributable to AUME.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

LONG-TERM CARE DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Current Law.—In most States, Medicaid will cover the cost of long-term care for low-income elderly individuals who are entitled to benefits under the supplemental security income (SSI) program.

A State may cover long-term care for elderly individuals with incomes exceeding SSI eligibility levels in several ways.

First, a State may establish higher income standards for elderly individuals in nursing facilities, based upon the greater need for financial assistance these individuals would have if they were not in an institution. The income levels for these individuals may not exceed 300 percent of the SSI benefit rate for an individual.

Second, a State may opt to cover elderly individuals with incomes below 100 percent of poverty for the wider package of benefits available under its State Medicaid plan.

Third, a State may establish a "medically needy" program under which an individual with income exceeding SSI levels becomes eligible for long-term care by incurring expenses for medical care that reduce his or her income to a level specified by the State; this level may not exceed 133⅓ percent of the highest amount that would be payable under the aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) program to a family of the same size without income or resources. This process is known as "spending down"; an individual who becomes eligible for long-term care by spending down is required to contribute to the cost of his or her long-term care to the extent that subsequent income would cause the level specified by the State to be exceeded.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation has awarded planning grants to a number of States to investigate the potential role of public/private partnerships, and particularly private insurance, in financing long-term care.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill allows the State of New York to establish a demonstration project under which an individual with income and resoures above normal eligibility levels would be entitled to long-term care benefits under the State Medicaid plan if the individual purchases a State-approved long-term car insurance policy covering such care for a period preceding Medicaid eligibility.

The Secretary is authorized to waive requirements relating to statewideness, income and resource eligibility, collection of premiums, liens, recovery of assets, freedom of choice, personal needs allowance, protection of community spouse, and transfer of assets.

The Secretary would be required to award the demonstration project in a budget neutral manner.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

DEEMED STATUS UNDER MEDICAID

Present Law.—Under the Medicare program, a provider is said to have "deemed status" if it is accredited by the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Health Care Organizations. The term refers to the fact that the law specifically provides that such accreditation will satisfy most conditions of participation under the Medicare program, thus dispensing with the need for Federal enforcement of such conditions.

Under State Medicaid plans, a State may determine, through a State agency, whether a provider qualifies for program participation, or it may involve private accrediting organizations in making such determinations.

Committee Bill.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to establish a demonstration project involving not more than 10 States in which deemed status is provided to mental health facilities by private agencies designated by the State in accordance with criteria developed by the Secretary.

MINNESOTA PREPAID MEDICAID DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

Present Law.—The Minnesota Department of Human Services has been testing a prepaid capitated approach to providing medical assistance under the state's Medicaid plan since July 1985.

In order to enable Minnesota to conduct the demonstration project, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) waived Medicaid requirements relating to freedom of choice, statewideness, and comparability, as well as certain restrictions on reimbursement agreements and the release of information.

Section 507 of the Family Support Act of 1988 required the Secretary to extend the waiver until June 30, 1990.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to extend the waiver until June 30, 1995. It also provides permanent authority for the State of Minnesota to furnish capitated care.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

MEDICAID DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM: STATE OF OREGON

Present Law.—A number of States currently operate demonstration programs which test ways of providing health care and cash assistance to low-income persons in innovative ways. Some of these projects require waivers of certain provisions of Medicaid law. The State of Oregon wishes to conduct a demonstration program to test whether expanded Medicaid eligibility and a redesigned benefit package can improve access to basic health care services to low-income persons.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill allows the State of Oregon to apply to the Secretary to conduct a demonstration project consistent with Oregon's Senate Bill 27. The Secretary shall approve an application which carries out Oregon's Senate Bill 27 and provides for an evaluation of the demonstration. If the Secretary approves the application, the Secretary shall waive sections of Medicaid law as necessary to permit operation of the program. Among the waivers that would be permitted are: (a) relaxation of the requirement that eligibility income standards be tied to those for AFDC, so that Oregon could use a limit of 100 percent of the Federal poverty level; (b) authorization of coverage, ordinarily not permitted, of single individuals and childless couples who are neither aged nor disabled; and (c) waiver of minimum benefit requirements, so that Oregon could rank order services based on their benefit to the entire population and medical effectiveness. (Selected services which are now mandatory might not be financed if they were determined to be of lower priority.)

Effective Date.—Enactment.

RESPITE DEMONSTRATION EXTENSION

Current Law.—Medicaid does not cover respite care services except where provided under a home and community-based services waiver approved by the Secretary under section 1915(c) of Medicaid law. OBRA 86 established a respite care pilot project under the Medicaid program in the State of New Jersey. This project is intended to determine the extent to which respite services will delay or avert the need for institutional care and how such services can enhance and sustain the role of the family in providing long-term care services for elderly and disabled individuals at risk of institutionalization. The project was to be conducted for a maximum of four years (FY 1987 through FY 1990), plus an additional period of up to 6 months for final evaluation and reporting.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill extends the New Jersey respite care demonstration through March, 1991, as a result of a delay in start-up.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

RETROACTIVE COVERAGE OF MEDICARE COST-SHARING FOR QUALIFIED MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

Present Law.—The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 requires State Medicaid plans to pay Medicare cost sharing (including part B and, where applicable, part A premiums) for elderly individuals who are eligible to participate in the Medicare program and whose income and resources are below specified levels. These individuals are referred to as qualified Medicare beneficiaries (QMBs) and may be eligible for Medicaid solely on that basis or as both a QMB and a member of another group qualifying for medical assistance, such as recipients of supplemental security income (SSI).

Section 1902(e)(8) of the Act requires a State to pay Medicare cost sharing obligations for an individual beginning with the month after the month in which the individual is determined to be a QMB.

If an individual is QMB-eligible, but the eligibility determination is delayed for any reason, the individual must pay Medicare cost-sharing obligations from his or her personal funds until the month after the determination is made.

Implementation of the QMB program was delayed in many States beyond its effective date of January 1, 1989. As a result, cost-sharing obligations incurred by some QMBs on or after that date have not been covered under State Medicaid plans.

Committee Provision.—The committee bill authorizes a State to treat an individual as a QMB for any month before October 1989 if the individual: (1) is determined to be a QMB before that month; (2) incurred expenses for Medicare cost-sharing for the month, and (3) would have qualified as a QMB for the month.

Effective Date.—Applies to cost-sharing expenses incurred on or after January 1, 1989, and before October 1, 1989.

EXTENSION OF DEMONSTRATION

Current Law.—Section 1115 of the Social Security Act provides the Secretary of HHS general authority to conduct experiments and demonstrations under Medicare and to waive program requirements in conducting these demonstrations. Under this authority, the Secretary approved a waiver for the demonstration project, "Modifications of the Texas System of Care for the Elderly: Alternatives to the Institutionalized Aged." Since 1980, the State of Texas has provided under this demonstration personal care services to aged and disabled individuals who are at risk of entering a nursing home. The waiver authority for this demonstration was first extended by the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, and again by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, when it was extended until January 1, 1990.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill extends the waiver authority for the Texas demonstration for 3 additional years, until January 1, 1993.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

MEDICAID HOSPICE

Current Law.—Hospice care is an optional State service under Medicaid. Just as Medicare beneficiaries are required to waive eligibility for the standard Medicare benefit package to qualify for Medicare hospice benefits, Medicaid hospice beneficiaries are required to waive benefits in a way that is "consistent with" the Medicare rules. The purpose of this waiver is to assure that Medicare or Medicaid hospice benefits are being used to substitute for acute care services such as inpatient hospital care Medicaid, however, covers certain services such as attendant care that are not covered by Medicare.

States covering hospice care must pay for hospice care in the same amounts, and according to the same methodology under Medicaid. In the case of a beneficiary living in a nursing home, however, the State may pay a separate rate to the hospice program in order to take into account room and board services being provided by the nursing home. Once a nursing facility resident has elected hospice care, the hospice is responsible for payment of his or her room and board to the nursing facility under an agreement. In a number of States, the payment to the hospice for room and board is substantially less than the rate for nursing homes.

Committee provision.—The Committee's bill clarifies that an individual's waiver of Medicaid benefits applies only to the types of services covered by Medicare and not to Medicaid-only services, thereby enabling beneficiaries to retain access to these services. NOTE:—The bill also requires States which cover hospice services to pay hospices an additional amount equal to at least 95% of the rate that would have been paid by the State to the nursing facility for a hospice beneficiary.

MEDICAID COVERAGE OF RURAL HEALTH CLINIC SERVICES

Present Law.—States are required to cover services by facilities designated by the Secretary as rural health care clinics if the services are otherwise covered under the State Medicaid plan. The State must pay 100 percent of the reasonable costs of the clinic in furnishing the services. For services that would be covered as rural health clinic services if furnished to a Medicare beneficiary, the State must follow the methods used by Medicare in determining reasonable cost. For other services, the State's determinations are bound by any regulations the Secretary may promulgate relating to tests of reasonableness.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill provides that, for Medicaid purposes, a facility is to be treated as a rural health clinic if it has been determined by the Secretary to meet requirements under the Public Health Service Act for funding as a community or migrant health center or a provider of health care to the homeless. Requires States to pay, for rural health clinic services furnished to Medicaid beneficiaries, 100 percent of the reasonable costs of such services as determined by the fiscal intermediary for Medicare beneficiaries.

Cost-based provisions of this statute, when applied to provider-based rural health clinics, should serve as an incentive to restructure and maintain health care services in rural areas. The Committee believes that it would be appropriate for private physicians, hospitals, and nursing homes to consolidate their services under the rural health clinic provisions, if appropriate.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

CHILD HEALTH PACKAGE

Present Law.—a. Coverage of Pregnant Women, Infants, and Children to Age 6. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (MCCA) requires States to offer Medicaid coverage to pregnant women and infants under one year old with family incomes below 75 percent of the Federal poverty line by July 1, 1989, and to those with family incomes below 100 percent of the poverty line by July 1, 1990. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA 87) permits States to establish a higher income standard for pregnant women and infants, up to 185 percent of the poverty line, and also permits States to cover children under age 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8 (as selected by the State) who were born after September 30, 1983, and whose family income is below a State-established income level which may be as high as 100 percent of the Federal poverty level.

b. Coverage of Children to Age 19. States must provide Medicaid for children receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and may provide Medicaid to children whose family income is within AFDC standards but who do not meet nonfinancial criteria for AFDC.

c. Continuous Eligibility for Pregnant Women, Infants, and Children. (i) Beginning July 1, 1989, States have the option of continuing coverage for a pregnant woman through the end of the second full month beginning after the end of the pregnancy, even if the woman would otherwise become ineligible during that period; the infant born to the woman remains eligible for the same period. (ii) Periodic redetermination of eligibility for Medicaid beneficiaries who are not receiving cash assistance occurs at intervals determined by the State. (iii) An individual who ceases to qualify for Medicaid benefits on one basis may still qualify on some other basis. For example, a family that is no longer financially eligible for AFDC (and hence for automatic Medicaid benefits) might still be eligible for Medicaid under a higher income standard used for the "medically needy." Under current law, States are not required, when terminating Medicaid eligibility in such a case, to determine whether the beneficiary might qualify for benefits on some other basis. Instead, the individual may be required to re-apply for Medicaid benefits.

d. Coverage of Children Receiving SSI Benefits. States are ordinarily required to provide Medicaid to any aged, blind, or disabled person receiving cash assistance under the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program. However, section 209(b) of the Social Security Amendments of 1972 (P.L.

92-603) provided that a State could use more restrictive eligibility standards for Medicaid than those used for SSI if the State was using those standards for Medicaid on January 1, 1972. As of 1989, there are 14 "Section 209(b)" States, using criteria for Medicaid for the aged, blind, and disabled more restrictive than those used for SSI.

e. Model Application. States design their own application forms for Medicaid benefits.

f. Hospital Payment Protections. States may establish durational limits on coverage of inpatient hospital services, but may not impose these limits on medically necessary services provided to children under 1 year old in hospitals serving a disproportionate number of low-income patients with special needs. If the State pays for inpatient services on a prospective basis (under which payment rates are established in advance and may not reflect the hospital's actual costs for covered services), the State must provide additional payment to disproportionate share hospitals for patients under 1 year old who are "outliers," that is, who incur exceptionally high costs or have long hospital stays.

g. Codification of Adequate Payment. States establish their own payment levels for Medicaid services. Medicaid regulations (42 CFR 447.204) provide that payments must be sufficient to enlist enough providers so that covered services will be available to Medicaid beneficiaries to at least the extent that such services are available to the general population.

h. Required Coverage of Nurse Practitioner Services. States are permitted, but not required, to include as a Medicaid benefit services of nurse practitioners within the scope of their licenses under State law.

i. Home and Community-Based Services. Section 2176 of OBRA 81 permitted States to obtain waivers of certain Medicaid requirements in order to establish a home and community-based service program for a defined population (such as the aged or the mentally retarded) of persons who would otherwise require long-term institutional care. Waiver programs must be approved and periodically re-approved by the Secretary and must meet certain requirements, including tests of cost-effectiveness. So-called "model" waivers are a separate category of section 2176 waivers that allow States to provide support services for disabled children living at home who would require institutionalization without those services and would, if institutionalized, be eligible for Medicaid. Originally, the number of children who could be served under a model waiver was limited to 50. OBRA 87, as modified by MCCA, prohibited the Secretary from limiting coverage under any section 2176 waiver to fewer than 200 persons.

j. Home Visitation Services. No provision.

k. Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnosis, and Treatment (EPSDT). States are required to cover early and periodic screening, diagnostic, and treatment (EPSDT) services for most groups of Medicaid beneficiaries under age 21. Medicaid regulations provide that EPSDT screenings must include a health and developmental history, a comprehensive physical, vision and hearing testing, appropriate laboratory tests, and dental screening for children over 3 years old (or over 5 years old, with the Secretary's approval). The regulations require that States establish, in consultation with medical and dental organizations, a "periodicity schedule" for screenings, specifying services applicable at each stage of the beneficiary's life. States must also provide treatment for problems or conditions identified during screening. The regulations provide that, in addition to any treatment services normally covered under the State Medicaid plan, the State must provide dental care, appropriate immunizations, and vision and hearing treatment, including eyeglasses and hearing aids.

l. Foster Children. Title IV-E of the Social Security Act requires, as a condition of foster care assistance grants to States, that a case plan be developed for each Federally-assisted child placed in a home or institution, including plans for assuring proper care and services.

m. Medicaid Coordination with WIC Program. The Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) provides supplemental food and related services to certain low-income mothers and young children. Although many persons qualifying for WIC are also eligible for Medicaid, there is currently no formal coordination between the two programs.

n. Improving Public Health Coordination. No provision.

o. Use of Most Recent Data in Computing Federal Medicaid Assistance Percentage. The Federal matching percentages used for Medicaid, AFDC, and other programs are promulgated by the Secretary in October or November of each year and take effect on October 1 of the following year. The percentage calculations are based on State per capita income data, using the most recent available data.

p. Outreach as an Optional Service. States may conduct outreach activities, but would receive Federal funding at the 50 percent administration matching rate.

q. Provider Reimbursement Demonstration. No provision.

r. Maternal and Child Health Handbook. No provision.

s. Annual Report by Secretary. No provision.

t. Requirements of the Secretary. No provision.

u. Maternal and Child Health Services Block Grant. The Maternal and Child Health (MCH) Block Grant program, authorized by Title V of the Social Security Act, provides grants to States for a variety of health programs, including direct provision of preventive and primary care services to mothers and children, health screenings, immunizations, and rehabilitation services for children with special health care needs (formerly referred to as crippled children). The permanent authorization for the MCH block grant program is $561 million per year; the appropriation for FY89 is $554 million. Of this amount, approximately 84% is allocated to States; the rest is retained by DHHS to support "special projects of regional and national significance" and to conduct research, training, and genetic disease screening programs.

v. Buy-in Demonstration. No provision.

w. Medicaid Coverage of Community Health Clinic Services. States are permitted, but not required, to cover services in community and migrant health centers and providers of health care to the homeless receiving Federal grants under the Public Health Services Act. States that cover such services established their own reimbursement methodologies.

X. MEDICAID TRANSITION FOR CERTAIN AFDC FAMILIES

Present Law.—Section 406(h) of the Social Security Act provides that families who become ineligible for AFDC because of the collection of child or spousal support payments are eligible for Medicaid for the four month period beginning with the first month of ineligibility. This provision expires on October 1, 1989 (Section 20(b) of P.L. 98-378).

Committee Provision.—a. Coverage of Pregnant Women, Infants, and Children to Age 6. The Committee bill requires States to cover pregnant women and children under age 6 with family incomes below 133 percent of the Federal poverty line, effective April 1, 1990.

b. Coverage of Children to Age 19. The Committee bill permits States, effective April 1, 1990, to extend Medicaid coverage to children who are age 6 or over, but under age 19, and whose family incomes do not exceed a State-established level which may be as high as 100 percent of the Federal poverty line.

c. Continuous Eligibility for Pregnant Women, Infants, and Children. The Committee bill requires all States, effective January 1, 1990, to continue eligiblity for pregnant women until the end of the second month beginning after the end of the pregnancy. For children under 3 years old who are not receiving cash assistance, States are prohibited from conducting redeterminations of eligibility more often than every 6 months, regardless of any change in the family's circumstances. Effective on enactment, States are prohibited from terminating the Medicaid eligibility of children under 3 who lose AFDC or SSI benefits until it is determined that they do not qualify for Medicaid under any other category.

d. Coverage of Children Receiving SSI Benefits. The Committee bill requires all States, effective January 1, 1990, to provide Medicaid to persons under 18 who are receiving SSI benefits.

e. Model Application. The Committee bill requires the Secretary to develop and make available to States, by January 1, 1991, a model uniform Medicaid application form for applicants who are not receiving AFDC and are not institutionalized. Use of the form by States will be optional.

f. Hospital Payment Protections. The Committee bill requires States, effective January 1, 1990, to waive durational limits and provide outlier payments for medically necessary inpatient services provided by disproportionate share hospitals or children's hospitals to children under age 6, and for inpatient services provided by any hospital for children under age 1. The imposition of dollar limits on inpatient services for beneficiaries under age 1 is prohibited. In the case of services furnished to a child under 19 by an out-of-State hospital, the State is required to pay at the rates paid by the State in which the hospital is located, unless the two States have agreed otherwise.

The Committee is interested in alternative methods for providing payment protections for hospitals providing outpatient services to infants and to young children, particularly in disproportionate share hospitals and childrens' hospitals, similar to those provided for inpatient services in this bill.

g. Codification of Adequate Payment. The Committee bill incorporates the current regulatory requirements for provider rembursement into the statute. The Secretary is required to report to Congress, not later than January 1, 1990, on the adequacy and timeliness of States' Medicaid payment for obstetrical and pediatric services, and on factors that may delay payment to providers of such services.

h. Required Coverage of Nurse Practitioner Services. The Committee bill requires States to cover under Medicaid services of certified pediatric or family nurse practitioners practicing within the scope provided under State law, regardless of whether they are under the supervision of or associated with a physician or other provider.

i. Home and Community-Based Services. The Committee bill allows States to cover, without a waiver, home and community-based services for children who are under age 18 and who have acquired immune deficiency syndrome or are medically dependent on a ventilator for life support, effective January 1, 1990. With respect to section 2176 waivers granted or renewed on or after January 1, 1990, the Secretary is prohibited from limiting participants to fewer than 350.

It is the Committee's understanding that addicted children living in foster care homes or group homes are eligible for home and community based services and home visiting services as provided in this bill.

j. Home Visitation Services. The Committee bill permits States to cover as a Medicaid service home visitation to medically fragile pregnant women and to infants in the first 12 months of life who have medical conditions that require life-sustaining medications or equipment or technologically assisted feeding, effective January 1, 1990.

The Committee notes that, under current Medicaid law, States can finance home visitation services by lay visitors. States are authorized to furnish "case management" services to all or some groups of Medicaid beneficiaries, on a Statewide or sub-State basis. Under the expansions in eligibility included under this bill, States will be able to furnish case management services to a larger group of women and children. Lay visitors services are designed to promote access to health care and appropriate use of necessary care.

k. Early and Periodic Screening Diagnosis and Treatment. The Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnosis and Treatment (EPSDT) program was added to the Medicaid statute in 1967. Under EPSDT, all Medicaid-eligible individuals under age 21 are entitled to comprehensive preventive and primary medical, dental, vision and hearing screening, diagnostic, and treatment services as well as immunizations, vision, hearing and dental care even if not otherwise included in a State's Medicaid plan. If the conditions are discovered in a screen. Since its inception, EPSDT, the nation's largest preventive health programs for low income children, has provided comprehensive preventive health care for millions of children. Children who participate in EPSDT have been found to have annual health care costs nearly 10 percent lower than children who do not receive such services.

The EPSDT benefit package has never been described in detail in the statute. There have arisen questions regarding the content of the program, as well as which providers are qualified to furnish the EPSDT screening and treatment. Additionally, while states have always had the option to do so, many still do not provide to children participating in EPSDT all care and services allowable under federal law, even if not otherwise included in the state's plan.

The EPSDT has grown in importance as millions of additional infants and children have become eligible for Medicaid and as other, complementary for children (such as the 1986 early intervention amendments to the Education for All Handicapped Children's Act) have been enacted. In order to strengthen and clarify the scope of EPSDT and its relationship to other programs for children with special health care needs and to encourage additional providers to participate in the program, the Committee bill thus contains a series of amendments to the Act.

General screening services.—The bill clarifies that the screening services required under EPSDT include health examinations provided at specified intervals described on a State's periodicity schedule, which must meet certain requirements. The bill also clarifies that separate vision, hearing, and dental schedules that meet accepted standards of practice and are determined in consultation with appropriate professional organizations must also be established.

The Committee amendment also requires states to cover screening services furnished at intervals other than those formally identified on the State's physical, dental, vision and hearing periodicity schedules when there is reason to believe that a child suffers from a physical or mental illness or condition that requires further assessment, diagnosis and treatment. These interperiodic examinations may be triggered even in the case of children who already have had a physical, mental or developmental problem diagnosed, if there is reason to suspect that the illness or condition has grown more severe or has altered sufficiently so that further examination is warranted.

No prior authorization may be required for interperiodic screening and diagnostic activities, just as none may be required for a periodic exam and diagnosis. However, prior authorization may be required for treatment services.

The Committee underscores that the determination of medical necessity for these "interperiodic" screens can be made by professionals who come into contact with a child through various channels. It is imperative that a child's treatment not be delayed until he or she is due for a periodic screen. So long as a referral (including a self referral in the case of health related providers that are also EPSDT providers) is made to an EPSDT provider, the child is entitled to "interperiodic" health, dental, vision or hearing assessment or treatment services covered under the State plan.

Anticipatory guidance.—The Committee bill clarifies that anticipatory guidance provided to the child or the child's parent or guardian is a formal part of any good EPSDT assessment. This guidance includes health education and counseling to both parents and children.

Vision, dental and hearing services.—The Committee bill clarifies that, while part of EPSDT, these services are independent of the physical and developmental components of the program in the sense that a physical and developmental examination and referral are not mandatory prerequisites to vision, dental and hearing care. Moreover, each of these services is to be governed by its own professionally appropriate periodicity schedule and is subject to its own interperiodic screening rules. As with physical assessments, no prior authorization is needed for either a periodic vision, dental or hearing exam or an interperiodic exam. Referrals (including self referrals) can be made if an interperiodic assessment is determined to be medically necessary.

Treatment.—Under current law, the items and services that must be provided to all children participating in the program (in addition to the assessment and diagnostic services) are immunizations and vision, dental and hearing care. Thus, if a child with a hearing defect needed a hearing aid and speech therapy to compensate for his hearing loss, both would be covered. However, if the child had cerebral palsy and also needed physical therapy, the therapy would not be covered for the child unless it was a covered Medicaid service generally.

The Committee amendment would require that states provide to children all treatment items and services that are allowed under federal law and that are determined to be necessary as a result of even if such services are not otherwise included in the State's plan. This means that all items and services described in Section 1905(a) of the Act must be provided if medically necessary.

In implementing this provision states may utilize prior authorization and other limitations related to ensuring that all care and treatment is medically necessary. However, such limitations may not interfere with the preventive purposes of the program, which is intended to identify and correct problems before they become serious.

Neither can states restrict the classes of providers eligible to participate in the program. Providers that meet the professional qualifications required under state law to provide an EPSDT assessment, diagnosis or treatment service must be permitted to participate in the program.

The Committee also expects that in States that enroll children with managed care providers, such providers, as a condition of participation, shall be expected to demonstrate that they have employed or under contract the full array or providers necessary to furnish all items and services required under this amendment. The Committee expects that payments to such providers shall be adjusted as necessary to permit the full provision of care to screened children requiring treatment and that in assessing the quality of care received by children enrolled in such plans, the ability of plans to meet the requirements of this amendment shall be taken into account.

The Committee hopes both HCFA and the states shall take aggressive action to publicize the changes in the program, to educate providers about the fact that childen participating in EPSDT have access to all needed treatment under certain circumstances regardless of whether it is also covered under the state plan and to develop simplified claims forms that reduce the administrative burdens of participating in the program. The Committee expects that HCFA and the states will involve professional organizations in the development of such forms. All activities designed to publicize the program are reimbursable as an administrative expense.

The Committee amendment also requires the Secretary to report no later than by July 1 of each year on the number of children receiving EPSDT services by age and by basis of eligibility for medical assistance.

l. Foster Children.—The Committee bill requires, effective January 1, 1990, that case plans for foster children include a health care record that is provided to the foster care provider before the child is placed (or within 30 days after emergency placement). The foster care provider must be notified of the availability of EPSDT services. The State must develop a health care plan for the child, must ensure that the foster care provider and caseworker understand their responsibilities with respect to the child's health needs, and must periodically review the plan to ensure that it is being adhered to.

m. Medicaid Coordination with WIC Program.—The Committee bill Requires State Medicaid plans to provide for coordination between the Medicaid and WIC programs, effective January 1, 1990. States are required to notify Medicaid beneficiaries who are pregnant, postpartum or breastfeeding women, or children under age 5, of the availability of WIC benefits and to refer such persons to the State agency administering the WIC program.

n. Improving Public Health Coordination—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to report to Congress by March 1, 1990, on a study of methods for improving coordination of public health programs, including Medicaid, WIC, and the Maternal and Child Health block grant. In competing the study, the Secretary is to consult with State Governors and the Secretary of Agriculture.

o. Use of Most Recent Data in Computing Federal Medical Assistance Percentage.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to promulgate Federal matching percentages in April or May of each year, to be effective October 1 of the same year; the requirement applies to payments for quarters beginning on or after October 1, 1990. For the last two quarters of FY 1990, the matching percentage for a State shall be the higher of its FY 1990 percentage under current law or the new percentage calculated under this provision.

p. Outreach as an Optional Service.—The Committee bill permits States to cover as an optional Medicaid service outreach services for pregnant women and infants, effective January 1, 1990. Outreach services are defined as services to identify pregnant women and infants who are potentially eligible for Medicaid and assist them in applying for benefits.

q. Provider Reimbursement Demonstration.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to provide for State demonstration projects to improve access for Medicaid beneficiaries to obstetricians and pediatricians. Projects will test approaches to improving provider participation, including expedited reimbursement and innovative payment methods, assistance with malpractice coverage, reducing administrative burdens, and covering services to meet the needs of high-risk pregnant women and infants. The Secretary is authorized to waive provisions of Medicaid law, with specified exceptions. A State application for a project must be approved or denied within 90 days, unless additional information is needed. The Secretary is required to report to Congress on the results of the projects by March 1, 1992. Appropriations of $10 million are authorized for each year, FY 1990 through FY 1992.

r. Maternal and Child Health Handbook.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to develop a maternal and child health handbook in consultation with the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality and other organizations, with the handbook to be ready for field testing by July 1, 1990. Field testing and evaluation is to be completed by June 1, 1991, after which the handbook is to be distributed nationally to all pregnant women and new families with young children. The Secretary is to coordinate distribution through public and private agencies. Appropriations of $1 million are authorzied for each year, FY 1991 through FY 1993.

s. Annual Report by Secretary.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to publish annually, beginning January 1, 1991, a report on the health status of children, including information from annual State reports (see item u, below) and statistics relating to child health and health services.

The Committee is increasingly concerned about the impact of the growing problem of substance abuse during pregnancy. Recent indications are that maternal and infant mortality and morbidity may be rising as a result of increased substance abuse during pregnancy. A recent study by the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families found that hospitals are reporting the reemergence of maternal death during labor and delivery, directly attributable to drug abuse during pregnency; in some hospitals, one of every six newborns is addicted. It is possible that the Secretary's annual report on the status of children may be an appropriate vehicle for assessing the scope of this problem, by including information on the number of newborns exposed to alcohol and other drugs, the availability of treatment slots for pregnant women and mothers, and related statistics. The treatment of substance abuse can be an important component of comprehensive prenatal care, and should be kept in mind when coordinating services for pregnant women under Title V and Medicaid.

The Committee believes it would also be valuable to have access to information not now available, including linked birth and death records that will allow better detection of infant death patterns; birth and death records that are linked to the Medicaid status of pregnant women and children; the number of children enrolled in Medicaid and the proportion using selected services, including EPSDT and inpatient psychiatric care; the number of children living in medically underserved and health manpower shortage areas; the proportion of Medicaid-enrolled pregnant women, infants and children receiving WIC or enrolled in special education programs. It is the Committee's understanding that the Secretary may require additional time to develop the data collection capacity and interagency arrangements necessary to acquire such information.

t. Requirements of the Secretary.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to develop definitions of medically high risk pregnancies, children at high risk of medical problems, and medically uninsurable children. Definitions ar to be developed in consultation with health care groups and health insurers. The Secretary is also to develop a model health benefit package for pregnant women and children, including at least primary care and catastrophic inpatient coverage. Reports on the definitions and the benefit package are to be provided to Congress by March 1, 1990.

u. Maternal and Child Health Services Block Grant.—The Committee bill increases the permanent authorization to $711 million for FY 1990 and later years. The Federal set-aside for special projects is fixed at 15 percent. In addition to other research, training, and special programs, the set-aside is to be used to fund 3-year demonstrations of ways to extend basic health insurance to children not covered by other public or private programs. Demonstration programs could be school-based plans or plans operated by hospitals or other non-profit entities. They would have a declining level of Federal funding over the 3-year period, could charge premiums to enrollees, but would be prohibited from excluding applicants for medical reasons or imposing pre-existing conditions or waiting periods.

The Committee intends that enrollees in these demonstrations are treated no differently than individuals enrolled in other insurance plans. Thus, it is recommended that children in the program be provided identification that is similar in nature to that used by other members of the organizations operating the program.

The Committee bill requires States, beginning January 1, 1990, to use at least 30 percent of their allotments for services to children with special health care needs and at least 5 percent for primary health services projects for children, the development of service networks and case management programs for children with special health care needs, and screening for sickle-cell anemia and other genetic diseases. A State's contribution to maternal and child health programs must be at least equal to the amount provided by the State in 1989. For FY 1990 through FY 1992, States are required to develop a system of family centered community-based care for children with special health care needs, coordinating with Medicaid and other programs and providing a toll-free hotline on available medical and support services. The Secretary is required to assist in developing these systems and to compile a national directory of the States' toll-free numbers. Annual reports required from States are expanded to include data on the extent to which the State has met individuals' needs, the nature of services provided, health status outcomes, and the amounts of funds devoted to the care networks for children with special health care needs. Reports must also include a maternal and child care needs assessment, including plans for meeting identified needs and a description of how grant funds will be used under the plan. In developing the annual needs assessment and the community-based care network, the State is required to work in consultation with a maternal and child health advisory board. The board must also provide a review and comments on the State's program of "one-stop shopping," an integrated maternal and child health service delivery system coordinating Medicaid, MCH programs, and other services.

It is the Committee's intent that the amendments related to planning and accountability are permanent. States are encouraged to allocate immediately resources sufficient to ensure compliance with the new accountability requirements. The Committee encourages States to continue placing a priority on preventive and primary care both for women and infants, and for children and adolescents. The Committee notes that State allocations under the block grant are intended to achieve the purposes of Title V of the Social security Act, and that resources for State agency overhead should be efficiently allocated.

The role of the Maternal & Child Health Advisory Board created by the bill could be strengthened if other key agencies engaged in providing services to children with special health care needs are also included, such as the state lead agency administering early intervention programs, the State mental retardation/developmental disability agency, and other groups.

The Committee notes that many States have involved parent groups in developing consolidated information systems for chronically ill children, and encourages similar involvement as States undertake to implement similar requirements under this bill.

The Committee has also included authority for a demonstration of home visiting programs to high risk pregnant women and infants, and hopes that adequate funding can be made available for this important initiative. The Committee also encourages the Bureau of Maternal and Child Health to fund diverse projects including those in sparsely populated and hard to reach areas. Applicants for funding in these areas may require technical assistance to develop proposals.

v. Buy-in Demonstrations.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary to enter into agreements with several States to conduct demonstrations of alternatives for extending Medicaid coverage, or alternative coverage, to pregnant women and children under 20 who are otherwise ineligible for medicaid and whose family incomes are below 185 percent of the Federal poverty level. Alternative coverage may include such options as enrollment under employer plans, the State's plan for its own employees, a State uninsured plan, or an HMO. If a project includes enrollment under employer plans, it must require an employer contribution. Projects must provide for premiums to be charged to families above 100 percent of the poverty level. The premium may be based on a sliding scale or may be set at 3 percent of family income. Demonstrations are to begin by July 1, 1990, and continue for three years, unless the Secretary finds the State noncompliant with program requirements. Total Federal Medicaid participation in the projects is limited to $10 million in FY90, $45 million in FY91, $55 million in FY92, and $10 million in FY93. The Secretary is required to submit an interim evaluation of the projects to Congress by January 1, 1992, and a final report by January 1, 1994.

The Committee bill requires the Secretary to enter into agreements with two States to conduct demonstrations of alternatives for extending Medicaid coverage, or alternative coverage, to individuals (including individuals who are medically uninsurable or have exhausted health insurance benefits) who are ineligible for Medicaid and whose family incomes are below 150 percent of the Federal poverty level. The Secretary may also impose an asset test, taking into account those used in other Federal programs. Alternative coverage may include such options as enrollment under employer plans, the State's plan for its own employees, a State uninsured plan, or an HMO. If a project includes enrollment under employer plans, it must require an employer contribution and, if the employer plan does not furnish all Medicaid benefits, the State must make those benefits available to enrollees. Projects must provide for premiums to be charged to families above 100 percent of the poverty level, and the Secretary may also require that plans on a sliding scale or may be set at 3 percent of family income. Demonstrations are to begin by July 1, 1990, and continue for three years, unless the Secretary finds the State noncompliant with program requirements. The Secretary is authorized to waive the requirement that State Medicaid plans operate uniformly throughout the State. Total Federal Medicaid participation in the projects is limited to $5 million in each of FY90 through FY92. The Secretary is required to submit an interim evaluation of the projects to Congress by January 1, 1992, and a final report by January 1, 1994.

w. Medicaid Coverage of Community Health Clinic Services.—The Committee bill requires States to cover ambulatory services and (in areas with a shortage of home health providers) home health services provided by community health clinics. Community health clinics include Federally-funded community and migrant health centers and providers of health care to the homeless, as well as providers that are not receiving Federal grant funds but meet the requirements for community or migrant health center funding. Payment for community health clinic services must be equal to 100 percent of the facilities' reasonable costs for providing the services.

x. Medicaid Transition for Certain AFDC Families.—

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill makes permanent the four month extension of Medicaid benefits.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

INSTITUTIONS FOR MENTAL DISEASE

Present Law.—Under current Medicaid law, amounts expended by a State for the care of individuals between the ages of 22 and 65 who are patients of an institution for mental disease (IMD) are not eligible for Federal matching funds. This exclusion, which has been effective since the beginning of the Medicaid program, was based upon the judgment that it is the responsibility of the States to provide long-term care for individuals residing in mental institutions.

Federal financial assistance is available for inpatient psychiatric care furnished in general hospitals.

The law defines an IMD as a hospital, nursing facility, or other institution of more than 16 beds that is primarily engaged in the diagnosis, treatment, or care of individuals with mental disease.

Current regulations provide that a determination as to whether an institution is an IMD will be based upon its "overall character." One of the tests for IMD status is whether more than 50 percent of an institution's patients have a mental disease requiring inpatient treatment.

For a single facility that is under common administration and contains a number of separately licensed units serving individuals with different needs, inclusion or exclusion of patients in these affiliated units will obviously affect whether the facility exceeds the 50 percent limit.

Committee Provision.—The Committee bill requires the Secretary of Human Services (Secretary) to study and report to the Congress by not later than October 1, 1990, on the appropriateness of continuing the IMD exclusion in light of changes in the delivery of mental health services since the exclusion was enacted.

The bill provides that any determination by the Secretary (on or after June 1, 1988) that a facility is an IMB will not take effect until October 1, 1991, if the facility meets certain requirements. The requirements are that: (1) as of June 1, 1989, the facility was certified to provide both inpatient hospital services and nursing facility services under Medicaid and had more beds certified for the provision of nursing facility services than for inpatient hospital services, (2) the average length of stay, in those units of the facility primarily providing care for individuals with mental disease, was 25 days or less for the facility's most recent fiscal year ending before June 1, 1989, and (3) the facility was not formally and finally determined to be an IMD before June 1, 1988.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: DELAY IN EFFECTIVE DATE OF FEBRUARY 2, 1989 FINAL REGULATION

Current Law.—On October 16, 1987, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) published a notice of proposed rulemaking (NPRM) specifying revisions in the requirements for nursing homes participating in Medicare and Medicaid (52 Fed. Reg. 38582). There was a period for public comment on the NPRM.

OBRA 87, which became law on December 22, 1987, revised the requirements for these facilities substantially. While some provisions of the NPRM were similar to those of the new law, the proposed rule did not reflect a number of changes made by the statute.

On February 2, 1989, the Secretary issued a final rule that (1) implements those parts of the NPRM paralleling provisions in OBRA 87, and (2) incorporates those provisions of the new law that the Secretary determined to be "self executing." With respect to the "self executing" provisions of OBRA 87, the Secretary has restated the exact language of the statute.

Those parts of the rule that were based upon the NPRM were to become effective August 1, 1989 (they have subsequently been delayed until January 1, 1990), while portions implementing newly imposed statutory requirements are not effective until October 1, 1990 (the effective date specified in OBRA 87).

The Secretary provides for a comment period on the final rule.

Concern has been expressed that implementation of the final rule is premature and violates the intent of Congress that the revised conditions of participation are to become effective October 1, 1990; in addition, there has been no notice and comment period before the promulgation of final rules iplementing the "self executing" portions of OBRA 87.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill delays until October 1, 1990, the effective date of those portions of the February 1989 final rule that are scheduled to become effective on January 1, 1990. This delay would apply under both Medicare and Medicaid.

The bill also requires the Secretary to publish an NPRM with respect to the "self executing" provisions of OBRA 87.

Effective Date:—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: STATE APPROVAL OF NURSE AIDE TRAINING PROGRAMS

Current Law.—OBRA 87 revised the requirements for nursing homes participating in Medicare and Medicaid. Among other things, it requires an individual employed as a nurse aide to complete successfully a competency evaluation program, or a training and competency evaluation program, approved by the State in which the facility is located.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) was required to establish standards, not later than September 1, 1988, to guide States in approving such programs. The States were also required to specify, not later than January 1, 1989, those programs that have been approved by the States as meeting the Secretary's standards.

Publication of regulations establishing standards for State approval of these programs has been delayed; some guidance is contained in HCFA Transmittal No. 62, Sections 2504-2512, which was effective May 12, 1989.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill requires the Secretary to publish a proposed rule on standards for approval of nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs, and competency evaluation programs, not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of FY 1990 reconciliation legislation.

The bill also requires a final rule to be promulgated not later than 90 days after the close of the comment period.

The bill requires States to complete approval of such programs not later than 90 days after the promulgation of the final rule.

The bill further prohibits the Secretary from taking compliance actions against a State that has made a good faith effort to comply with the program approval requirements of OBRA 87 until 90 days after promulgation of the final rule.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: GRACE PERIOD FOR CERTAIN NURSE AIDES

Current Law.—OBRA 87 requires an individual employed as a nurse aide to complete a training and competency evaluation program approved by the State in which the facility is located. Effective January 1, 1990, a facility may not employ for more than 4 months an individual who has not completed such a program.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill provides that the 4-month grace period does not apply in the case of a nurse aide who is retained on a per diem or other temporary basis under arrangements with a nurse aide pool or agency.

Effective date.—January 1, 1990.

NURSING HOME REFORM: NURSE AIDE TRAINING REQUIREMENTS

Current Law.—OBRA 87 requires an individual employed as a nurse aide to complete a training and competency evaluation program (or in the case of an individual employed as of July 1, 1989, a competency evaluation program), approved by the State in which the facility is located. Effective January 1, 1990, a facility may not employ an individual who has not completed such a program for more than 4 months.

The law specifies that initial training under a nurse aide training and competency evaluation program be at least 75 hours in duration.

The Secretary was required to establish standards to guide States in making program approval determinations not later than September 1, 1988. Regulations establishing such standards have been delayed.

The law permits a State to deem an individual who has completed a training and competency evaluation program before July 1, 1989, to have completed a State-approved program if the program met the requirements for approval at the time it was offered.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill:

(1) delays until October 1, 1990, the requirement that nurse aides complete a training and competency evaluation program, or a competency evaluation program;

(2) requires a State to waive the nurse aide training and competency evaluation requirements for an individual who (A) was hired as a nurse aide by an employer before January 1, 1990, (B) can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the State that he or she has served as a nurse aide at one or more facilities of the same employer in the State for at least 24 consecutive months, and (C) has completed a 15-hour course of instruction in basic skills developed by the State; and

(3) requires a State to waive the nurse aide training and competency evaluation requirements for an individual who (A) was employed as a nurse aide before January 1, 1990, (B) was employed as a nurse aide in the State in the 24 preceding months and (C) has completed a State-required nurse aide training program established before the date of enactment of OBRA 87.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: NURSE AIDE TRAINING PROGRAMS

Current Law.—OBRA 87 requires an individual employed as a nurse aide to complete a training and competency evaluation program. Effective January 1, 1990, a facility may not employ for more than 4 months an individual who has not completed such a program.

The law is generally silent on the details of these programs.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill specifies a number of requirements for nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs. The bill:

(1) prohibits the imposition of a fee for textbooks, course materials, and other items directly related to a program;

(2) requires States to ensure the availability of materials for use by approved nurse aide training and competency evaluation programs in preparing individuals for competency examinations, and requires programs to distribute materials to individuals preparing for the examination;

(3) provides that an individual may elect to take an oral rather than a written competency examination;

(4) requires that a program must address issues relating to the provision of care to cognitively impaired residents, including those with Alzheimer's disease and related disorders, in order to be approved by the State; and

(5) clarifies that a State may not contract with an extended care facility for the facility to conduct the nurse aide competency examinations for individuals it employs.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: TEMPORARY ENHANCED FEDERAL MATCH FOR NURSE AIDE TRAINING PROGRAMS

Current Law.—OBRA 87 requires an individual employed as a nurse aide to complete a training and competency evaluation program approved by the State. Effective January 1, 1990, a facility may not employ for more than 4 months any individual who has not completed such a program.

The law provides that the Federal share of expenditures for training and competency evaluation programs is 50 percent. For fiscal years 1988 and 1989, the Federal share for these programs is temporarily increased to the lesser of 90 percent or a percentage equal to the State's Federal medical assistance percentage, increased by 25 percentage points.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill extends the provisions relating to a temporary enhanced Federal share through FY 1990.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: NURSE AIDE REGISTRY

Current Law.—OBRA 87 requires each State to establish a registry of all nurse aides who have successfully completed a nurse aide training and competency evaluation program approved by the State.

The registry is required to include any documented findings by the State about resident abuse or neglect involving a particular nurse aide, as well as a brief statement of the nurse aide disputing the findings.

The law prohibits a facility from using a nurse aide to provide services for which the nurse aide has not demonstrated competence, or from using a nurse aide unless the facility has inquired of the State nurse aide registry about the individual.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill requires a facility to consult the registry of another State if the facility has reason to believe that an individual applying for employment at the facility has been employed as a nurse aide in that State.

The bill also clarifies that resident abuse or neglect does not include cases that are demonstrably beyond the control of the individual.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: RESIDENT'S RIGHT TO EXAMINE MEDICAL RECORD

Current Law.—OBRA 87 revised the requirements for nursing homes participating in the Medicare and Medicaid programs. Among other things, it requires a facility to protect and promote the rights of each resident. The statute includes a nonexclusive list of specific rights, which include the right to be fully informed in advance about care and treatment (including any changes that may affect the resident's well-being), and, except in the case of a resident adjudged to be incompetent, the right to participate in planning his or her care and treatment.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill provides that a resident (or in the case of a resident adjudged incompetent, his or her guardian or legal representative) has the right to examine the resident's medical records promptly upon reasonable request (as defined by the Secretary).

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: REGULATORY STANDARDS FOR CERTAIN SERVICES

Current Law.—OBRA 87 revised the requirements for nursing homes participating in Medicare and Medicaid. Among other things, the law requires a facility to provide, directly or under arrangements, various types of services, including medically-related social services, dietary services, and an on-going program of activities designed to meet the interests and the physical, mental, and psychosocial well-being of each resident.

Final regulations issued by the Secretary of Health and Human Services on February 2, 1989, impose less stringent requirements for social services, dietary services, and activities in nursing homes than those specified under pre-OBRA 87 law and regulations.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill requires that regulations relating to social services, dietary services, and activities in extended care facilities be at least as stringent as those in effect before the enactment of OBRA 87.

Effective Date.—As if included in OBRA 87.

NURSING HOME REFORM: ENFORCEMENT FOR DUALLY CERTIFIED FACILITIES

Current Law.—OBRA 87 extensively revised the requirements for nursing homes participating in Medicare and Medicaid.

In order to coordinate Federal and State enforcement efforts to maximize compliance by facilities with these requirements, current law specifies when Federal or State enforcement efforts should take precedence.

The law does not, however, address the issue of which enforcement effort takes precedence in the case of a facility that is certified as both a Medicare and Medicaid provider.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill provides that the enforcement rules applicable to a Medicare-certified facility will apply even if the facility is also Medicare-certified.

On a related matter, in OBRA 87 the Congress directed the Secretary to include civil money penalties in the range of intermediate sanctions he was to develop for use against providers for noncompliance with statutory requirements and conditions of participation. The Secretary has delegated responsibility for imposing civil money penalties under section 1128A to the Inspector General. By requiring that civil money penalties for noncompliance be imposed in the same manner as under section 1128A, we did not intend to dictate that the Secretary delegate this authority to the Inspector General, as well. We believe that that responsibility rests with the Secretary. We do expect the Inspector General to exercise his independent oversight responsibility to ensure that the Department uses these new intermediate sanctions effectively and efficiently to ensure that providers maintain continued compliance with the statutory and regulatory requirements for program participation.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: DELAY IN EFFECTIVE DATE OF STATE ENFORCEMENT REQUIREMENT

Present Law.—OBRA 87 substantially revised the conditions of participation for nursing facilities under the Medicaid program. To ensure adequate enforcement of the new requirements, it requires States to establish (by statute or regulation) various types of sanctions for violation of these conditions. The deadline for doing so was October 1, 1989.

Although the law requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to provide guidance to State by October 1, 1988, on the establishment of these sanctions, section 1919(h)(2)(B)(i) of the Social Security Act specifically provides that failure of the Secretary to provide such guidance does not relieve a State of its responsibility for establishing such sanctions by the statutory deadline.

The Secretary has not yet issued regulations providing such guidance.

Committee Bill.—Delay until April 1, 1991, the requirement that States establish such sanctions.

RESIDENTS RIGHT TO REFUSE INTRAFACILITY TRANSFER

Current Law.—In April 1988, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) issued a new manual to Medicare carriers to clarify what types of conditions require skilled nursing care and will make an otherwise qualified individual eligible for skilled nursing facility (SNF) services under Medicare. The manual contains detailed specifications and a number of examples of cases that would be eligible for the SNF benefit.

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 removed the requirement that an individual be hospitalized for three days before entering a SNF and changed the number of days of SNF care that an individual could receive from 100 days per spell of illness to 150 days per year. These changes became effective January 1, 1989.

Many Medicaid-eligible nursing facility residents have become eligible for SNF services under Medicare because of these changes. These individuals are frequently referred to as "dual eligibles."

In most States, reimbursement for SNF services under Medicare exceeds the reimbursement for similar services under the Medicaid State plan. As of consequences, some dual eligibles are being transferred from one part of a facility, which is not certified as a Medicare provider, to another part, which is.

Parallel incentives exist for the States: services furnished under Medicare are paid for solely from Federal funds, while Medicaid services are funding in part by the State.

Current regulations permit the transfer of a dual eligible within a facility "only for medical reasons or for his welfare or that of other patients or for non-payment of his stay" and only if the resident is given "reasonable advance notice to ensure orderly transfer or discharge and such actions are documented in his medical record . . . "

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill clarifies that an individual who is eligible for nursing facility services under both Medicare and Medicaid may refuse to be transferred from one part of a facility to another for purposes of qualifying for Medicare coverage unless the facility can document that it will be unable to care for the individual without a transfer.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: NURSE STAFFING REQUIREMENTS

Current Law.—OBRA 87 revised the requirements for nursing services that must be provided by nursing homes under Medicare and Medicaid. It requires a facility to provide 24-hour nursing services sufficient to meet the nursing needs of its residents and to employ a registered professional nurse (RN) for at least 8 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Under Medicare, the law permits the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) under certain circumstances to waive the requirement that a facility employ a registered professional nurse more than 40 hours a week. In order to qualify for a waiver, the facility must (1) be located in a rural area with a shortage of SNF services, (2) employ an RN at least 40 hours a week, and (3) either have only patients who are certified by their physicians not to require the services of an RN or a physician for a 48-hour period or have arrangements with an RN or a physician to spend such time as necessary to provide skilled nursing services when the RN is not on duty.

Under Medicaid, waiver authority rests with the State, which is authorized to waive both the 24-hour nursing requirement and the 8-hour RN requirement if (1) the facility demonstrates that it has been unable to recruit appropriate personnel despite diligent efforts (including offering wages at the community prevailing rate for nursing facilities), (2) the State determines that a waiver will not endanger the health or safety of the residents, and (3) an RN or a physician is obligated to respond immediately to a telephone call from the facility. Although waiver authority rests with the State, the law also provides for the Secretary to assume the State's waiver authority if there is a pattern of waivers being granted in the absence of diligent efforts to recruit personnel.

Under both programs, waivers are subject to annual renewal.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill requires the State agency granting a nurse staffing waiver to provide appropriate notice of the waiver to the appropriate State and substate long-term care ombudsman, to the protection and advocacy system, and other appropriate State and private agencies.

The bill also requires a nursing facility that is granted a waiver to make reasonable efforts to notify present and prospective residents of the facility (or a guardian or legal representative) of the waiver.

The Committee's bill further requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to study and report to the Congress by January 1, 1991, on the appropriateness of establishing minimum caregiver/resident ratios and minimum superviser/caregiver ratios for nursing facilities. If the Secretary determines that the establishment of such ratios is advisable, the report should specify appropriate ratios or standards.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: IMPLEMENTATION OF PASARR REQUIREMENTS

Current Law.—OBRA 87 established a process of preadmission screening and annual resident review (PASARR) for nursing facilities under Medicaid. This process is intended to prevent the inappropriate placement of individuals with mental illness or mental retardation in a nursing facility.

It does so by requiring the screening of all potential residents before admission, as well as the screening of all residents at least annually, to determine whether they are mentally ill or mentally retarded, and if they are, whether (1) they require the level of care provided in a nursing facility, and (2) whether they require "active treatment" for their mental illness or mental retardation.

If a resident is found to be mentally ill or mentally retarded and does not require nursing facility care, the individual may not reside in a facility, except under very limited circumstances. If a resident is found to be mentally ill or mentally retarded and requires nursing facility care, the individual may reside in a facility, but the State is required to provide active treatment if the individual is found to need it.

OBRA 87 permits a State to file an alternative disposition plan (ADP) for those individuals who are required to be discharged from a nursing facility under PASARR. ADPs provide additional time for States to arrange for the disposition of persons who must be discharged. This authority expired April 1, 1989; approximately 47 States submitted an ADP by the deadline.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) was required to develop by October 1, 1988, "minimum criteria" for States to use in making screening determinations under PASARR. It also provided that the requirement for States to conduct screening became effective January 1, 1989, whether or not the Secretary had developed these "minimum criteria."

The Secretary has not issued regulations establishing these criteria. Pending the issuance of final regulations, the Secretary issued interim guidelines, effective May 26, 1989, (HCFA Transmittal No. 42, Sec. 4250-4253 (May 1989)) for use by States in establishing PASAAR programs.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill includes amendments to the OBRA 87 PASARR requirements. The bill—

(1) requires the Secretary to issue proposed regulations, not more than 90 days after enactment, establishing minimum criteria for State screening programs under PASARR;

(2) prohibits the Secretary from taking enforcement actions against a State if it has made a good faith effort to comply with the statute based upon the May 26 transmittal;

(3) permits a State to amend its ADP on or before September 30, 1990 and clarifies that an ADP may not be approved unless it provides for the disposition of all residents subject to discharge before April 1, 1994; and

(4) requires States to report to the Secretary annually on the number and disposition of nursing facility residents covered under the State's ADP.

NURSING HOME REFORM: SCOPE OF PASARR REVIEW REQUIREMENTS

Current law.—OBRA 87 established a process of preadmission screening and annual resident review (PASARR) for nursing facilities under Medicaid. This process is intended to prevent the inappropriate placement of individuals with mental illness or mental retardation in a nursing facility.

It does so by requiring the screening of all potential residents before admission, as well as the screening of all residents at least annually, to determine whether they are mentally ill or mentally retarded, and if they are, whether (1) they require the level of care provided in a nursing facility, and (2) whether they require "active treatment" for their mental illness or mental retardation.

The law implies, but does not explicitly indicate, that it is the obligation of a State to furnish "active treatment" to an individual who needs it.

OBRA 87 provides that an individual is considered to be mentally ill if the individual has a primary or secondary diagnosis of mental disorder (as defined in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual Disorders, 3rd edition) and does not have a primary diagnosis of dementia (including Alzheimer's disease or a related disorder)."

This definition encompasses conditions ranging widely in their severity.

The law does not define "active treatment," but provides that it does not include services within the scope of those a nursing facility is required to provide to its residents.

This has given rise to some confusion, particularly about whether active treatment has the same meaning for purposes of PASARR as it does for intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill contains a number of amendments addressing these issues. The bill—

(1) provides that an individual is considered to be mentally ill if the individual has a serious mental illness as defined by the Secretary;

(2) retains the current exclusion for individuals with a primary diagnosis of dementia (including Alzheimer's disease or a related disorder);" and clarifies that an individual with a non-primary diagnosis of dementia is also excluded if the primary diagnosis of the individual is not a serious mental illness;

(3) clarifies that a resident who is transferred from a nursing facility to a hospital for acute care services is not subject to preadmission screening upon their return to the facility;

(4) excludes from preadmission screening requirements individuals who receive inpatient acute care at a hospital, seek admission to a nursing facility from the hospital, require nursing facility services for the condition for which they received inpatient acute care, and are certified by their physician as needing nursing facility services for not more than 120 days; and

(5) substitutes the term "specialized services" for "active treatment."

Effective date.—Enactment.

NURSING HOME REFORM: RESPONSIBILITY FOR PASARR SCREENING

Current Law.—OBRA 87 established a process of preadmission screening and annual resident review (PASARR) for nursing facilities under Medicaid. This process is intended to prevent the inappropriate placement of individuals with mental illness or mental retardation in a nursing facility.

It does so by requiring the screening of all potential residents before admission, as well as the screening of all residents at least annually, to determine whether they are mentally ill or mentally retarded, and if they are, whether (1) they require the level of care provided in a nursing facility, and (2) whether they require "active treatment" for their mental illness or mental retardation.

The law requires the State mental health authority (or the State mental retardation authority) to make screening determinations based upon an independent physical and mental evaluation performed by a person or entity other than the authority.

Committee Provision.—The Committee's bill clarifies that the independent evaluations may not be conducted by a nursing facility.

Effective Date.—Enactment.

MEDICAID DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE ADJUSTMENT

Present Law.—Under current law, States are required, in making payment for inpatient hospital services, to take into account the situation of hospitals that serve a disproportionate number of low-income patients with special needs.

Section 4112 of OBRA 87 established minimum criteria for defining disproportionate share hospitals and for payment adjustments States are required to make to those hospitals.

It provided for a transition period during which a State could, instead of paying 100 percent of the minimun adjustment, pay one-third of the adjustment that would otherwise apply during the July 1988–June 1989 period, and two-thirds of such adjustment during the July 1989–June 1990 period.

OBRA 87 and the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 established special rules in the case of certain States that already had a program for compensating these hospitals before the enactment of the minimum requirements.

The State of New Jersey has established an Uncompensated Care Trust Fund that reimburses acute care hospitals in the State for uncompensated care. Under waiver agreements with the Department of Health and Human Services, the State's Medicaid program contributes to the Trust Fund, as do all other payers in the State. Additional payments to disproportionate share hospitals in the State would be duplicative.

The State of Missouri has implemented a transition under which it phases in the disproportionate share adjustment by applying the full minimum adjustment to different classes of hospitals at specified intervals, rather than paying all qualifying hospitals a fraction of the minimum adjustment. The Secretary of Health and Human Services has determined that this type of transition is not permitted under the law.

Committee Bill.-Provide that New Jersey will be considered to meet the Medicaid disproportionate share requirements if the aggregate amount of payment adjustments for such hospitals under the State Medicaid plan is not less than the amount required by the OBRA 87 amendments.

Provide that the State of Missouri will be deemed to meet the disproportionate share requirements under Medicaid if the total amount it expends for disproportionate share adjustments during the period from July 1988 through June 1990 equals the minimum amount it is required by law to expend for such adjustments during such period.

Effective Date.-Enactment.

AMENDMENTS RELATED TO COMMISSIONS

Current Law.-The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 created a National Commission on Children. This Commission's interim report is due to Congress by September 30, 1988 and its final report by March 31, 1989 (when the Commissioners' terms end). Currently, there is a "such sums" authorization for the Commission's activities.

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 created the U.S. Bipartisan Commission on Comprehensive Health Care. The Commission's report on long-term care is due March 9, 1989 and its report on comprehensive health care is due November 9, 1989. The Commission has a $1.5 million authorization.

Committee Provision.-The Committee's bill extends the interim and final reporting dates for the National Commission on Children to March 31, 1990 and 1991, respectively. It also extends the Commissioner's terms until March 31, 1991.

The Committee's bill further extends the final reporting date of the Bipartisan Commission to March 1, 1990, and changes its name to the Claude Pepper Bipartisan Health Care Commission.

Also, the bill adds authority to raise and spend private money for the childens' commission.

Effective date.-Enactment.

STUDY OF HCFA PERSONNEL

Present Law.-None.

Committee Provision.-The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), which administers the Medicare and Medicaid Programs serves more than 60 million Americans. In the past several years, Congress, through legislation, has required the agency to address major new health policy initiatives. These new initiatives require personnel with highly specialized skills. Congress is concerned that the agency is adequately and appropriately staffed to undertake these new initiatives.

OTA STUDY OF CLOSED CAPTIONING

Present Law.-No provision.

Committee Provision.-The Committee bill requires the Office of Technology Assessment to conduct a study and report to Congress by January 1, 1991, on the advisability of requiring hospitals and nursing homes participating in Medicare and Medicaid to make closed captioning available on televisions in the facilities.

Effective Date.-Enactment.

Additional Views of Senator William L. Armstrong

They say one grows wise by learning from mistakes. If that is true, the Senate Finance Committee should be very wise indeed.

Unfortunately, however, we do not seem wise enough to avoid putting our stamp of approval on another over-built and under-reasoned piece of legislation reminiscent of similar bills which have gotten the Senate into serious trouble recently. Watching this reconciliation bill work its way through the Finance Committee has been like watching the tinker's junk wagon wind through the bad side of town . . . with householders heaving onto it all manner of things they can't get rid of any other way.

The English author Samuel Johnson observed: "He who expects much will be often disappointed; yet disappointment seldom cures us of expectation, or has any other effect than that of producing a moral sentence or peevish exclamation." Well, I don't know about a moral sentence, but we are sure going to hear some peevish exclamations when the Senate finishes inflicting this reconciliation bill on the country.

ABUSE OF THE RECONCILIATION PROCESS

The Finance Committee and the Senate are risking well deserved ridicule by whistling through Congress such a mish-mash under the guise of a deficit reducing reconciliation bill. All the ordinary caution, all the rules of the Senate are being distorted and misused, as we pave the way for another in a long series of legislative disasters . . . such ideas as withholding of interest and dividends, mandatory catastrophic benefits for people who already have catastrophic insurance, section 89 reform that is completely out of proportion to any perceived problem . . . and the list goes on and on.

All of these faux-pas have a lot in common; they are getting to be pretty easy to recognize by now. They are ill-considered at the time by an inattentive Congress, though enough people think they are good ideas that a kind of phony urgency is felt. Congress is stamped into approving them and, when they grow into the monsters we ought to have seen them for, it is Congress who has to come sheepishly back and undo as much of the damage as possible.

Why does the Senate repeatedly get itself into such situations? What possesses the Finance Committee to fill the reconciliation bill with legislative experiments that tinker with some of the basic building blocks of our society? There is something fundamentally wrong with the way the Committee, the Senate and indeed the whole Congress is conducting its business.

Reconciliation is supposed to be the way spending cuts are implemented, so that individual committees of the Congress come up with the savings required for our annual budget. Reconciliation is supposed to be a supplement to the normal legislative process, but every year it seems to become more and more a replacement for the legislative process. It is not, in any event, supposed to be some sort of annual legislative congaline, made up of all the ideas that, taken individually, didn't get enacted. Reconciliation has fractionalized the Senate, with each committee having become a sovereign Senate, having vast powers to enact sweeping legislation affecting the programs under its jurisdiction. Washington is rapidly becoming a kind of Swiftian fantasyland, where the Congress of Lilliputian Congresses convenes, to arc their tiny threads of regulation out over the country.

Reconciliation is an easy process to exploit, and exploit it we have. So much so that, in 1985, the Byrd Rule of procedural practice was implemented to help defend against "extraneous" provisions. The legislative excess that was the proximate cause of the Byrd Rule was a heavily protectionist provision that aided the U.S. textile industry at the expense of U.S. consumers who purchase textiles.

But abuse of the process had already become the established norm well before the Byrd Rule, and has remained so even after the rule was implemented. Almost every year has seen the reconciliation bill being used as a stalking horse for huge new expansions of the Medicaid and Medicare programs. From 1982 to 1987, for example, five separate reconciliation bills saw no fewer than 30 separate expansions of the Medicare program. And the last three reconciliation bills alone witnessed at least another 30 expansions in the Medicare program. Almost every reconciliation bill has elaborate provisions to renew expiring revenue provisions. And every Senator can name more examples.

The problem with extraneous legislation on a reconciliation bill is not so much that it violates an abstraction like the Byrd Rule—though the rule exists for a wholesome purpose and, if a lawgiving body cannot respect its own rules, how can it hope for its laws to be taken seriously by the general public? Rather, corruption of the legislative process has led directly in recent years to a more alarming and thoroughgoing corruption of the policy-making process. Instead of an ordered system of rules where the healthy clash of ideas produces ever superior ideas, our system of lawmaking is being reduced to a meaningless and content-free cycle that alternates between over-reaction and careless repair.

Which is the perfect way to describe the twin irrational impulses taht together produced this bill's provisions on physician payment reform.

PHYSICIAN PAYMENT REFORM

"It's idiotic . . . but we're supporting it."

That's what I was told when I sought the views of the administration on the physician payment reform proposal. If ever there was a case of legislators closing their eyes when they vote and just hoping for the best, this is it.

The rate of growth of health care costs is a great and legitimate concern to every member of Congress. Each year sees a further increase in the proportion of our gross national product devoted to health care and in the proportion of federal expenditures devoted to health care. But the Committee's recommendation is likely to lead to continued increases in health care costs and a gross disruption to our health care system.

When we look back on this legislation some years down the line, and we see how health care costs have accelerated instead of slowing down, I expect we will recognize that, at the very moment we were repealing Medicare Catastrophic, we were passing into law the son-of-catastrophic.

The heart of the proposal is the creation of a national fee schedule to determine physician fees under Medicare rather than use the "reasonable charge" method which reflects historical charges for a service in an area. A key premise in developing such a schedule is the idea that doctors' compensation rates should be more equal across the nation. According to this view, doctors in Palo Alto, California for example, should not receive signficantly more for performing the same service as do doctors in Portland, Maine.

In an attempt to control the growth in health care costs, this proposal develops a complicated information reporting scheme and price control mechanism. One thing we should have learned by now is that price controls don't work. Whether they be on gasoline, natural gas, inner-city rents, or physicians' fees, the result is dislocation, supply shortages and, very often, spiralling costs. The second thing we should have learned is that the more complicated the price control mechanism, the less able it will be to keep costs from increasing.

The growth of health care costs, which is rapidly becoming a fiscal nightmare, can be traced primarily to three causes. The first is simply the steady increase in federal, state and local dollars that go into health care. This might be viewed as a chicken-or-the-egg kind of problem. Are health care costs rising because the government keeps spending more, or does the government keep spending more because health care costs keep rising? The fact is, both are true. It is also a fact, however, that if governments at all levels were to slow their spending on health care, these costs would quickly stabilize.

It is a simple matter of economics. If you keep spending more on a product, eventually the price is going to start to increase. In this case, as federal health programs expanded, they expanded the availability of health care, but they also drove up the price of that care. As the price increased, the federal health entitlement programs had to increase also. And so on, until today we find ourselves facing a fiscal disaster which the physician payment proposal is intended to prevent.

A second cause of the explosion in health care costs is closely related to the first. It is the steady increase in federal regulation of medicine in this country. The genesis of this regulation was a wish to improve the quality of medicine and to protect the federal purse against fraud. However, as costs began to escalate, the Congress turned to price controls, regulations and restrictions to try to slow the escalation. What it got instead was what one always gets when controls are placed on a market: dislocations, supply restrictions, and even greater cost run-ups.

An important premise of government health care programs, and one that really came home to roost last year with the ill-conceived Medicare Catastrophic program, is that Americans should be protected from having to face high health care costs. In fact, under Catastrophic, affordable health care for the elderly was practically made into an entitlement program. For example, the typical program requires you pay something up front, after which your insurance covers 100% of the costs. Suppose instead that the patient always faced at least a minimal copayment rate. For some procedures, no doubt, the inclusion of a price mechanism into health care decisions would have little effect. For many instances, just knowing that he or she faces some personal financial costs will cause the individual to examine more closely the costs that are incurred in his or her behalf.

The Committee proposal includes an attempt to reign in the growth of health care costs. One part of the proposal would construct very specific guidelines about how various procedures and specialties should be compensated through Medicare. In order to develop these guidelines, doctors throughout the country would be required to provide detailed information about their charges and the costs they incur to provide their services. This information is then to be processed to develop national pricing guidelines.

A central tendency, and the central failing of using economic controls to replace market forces, is that the failure of controls is always blamed on an inadequancy of information or an inadequancy of power. The proposed solution, therefore, is always to get more information with which to make more informed decisions, and more power with which to carry out those decisions. But the health care system is out of control precisely because government has tried to control it. The new approach, well-intentioned though it may be, nevertheless promises just more of the same—it is the next step in establishing a command economy in medicine that is doomed to failure.

There is another reason why the proposal will increase rather than reduce the calamity of our health care system and this one is based not on policy but on politics. Their proposal is to use their physician payment guidelines to equalize compensation rates between like services and across geographic regions so that a surgeon performing an appendectomy in Billings, Montana will be paid more nearly the same as one in Boston, Massachusetts.

They do not propose to increase Medicare expenditures while equalizing compensation rates. They intend to hold steady the rate of increase in Medicare by raising the compensation rates in Billings and reducing the rates in Boston. Unfortunately, the law of unintended consequences is going to rear its head in a big way because, while the Billings surgeon will be more than content with his windfall, the Boston surgeon is going to revolt. And he will revolt in one of a very few ways. He will either stop accepting Medicare patients, he will stop performing those services for which he deems his compensation too low, he will increase the rate at which he performs those services to increase his revenues, or he will get in touch with his Congressman and Senators and say he has got to have some relief.

Evidently, the Committee recognizes the potential for doctors in what are currently high paying specialities or geographic regions to "game" the system by making up lost income by performing more medical procedures. Therefore, the Committee proposal includes the creation of volume performance standards to monitor whether abuses are present.

Recognizing the difficulty of the situation, the proposal then leaves it up to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to suggest remedies. If the Congress chooses, it can adopt the Secretary's suggestions or come up with its own remedies. What sensible remedy would there be? Would the Congress then legislate that fewer appendectomies are to be performed in the following year? Or that certain doctors are hereby given a quota on the number of procedures for which Medicare will pay? This would seem to be where the proposal must lead. We are legislating a price control system that will lead to quotas on Medicare-covered physicians' services. What will Congress do when somebody dies because his or her operation exceeds a quota set in Washington?

At the same time that the price control system is perverting the provision of health care services, the compensation rates for the Billings surgeon will be increased, while the compensation of the Boston surgeon will be left unchanged. That is, we will level compensation rates by raising the lower rates without reducing the higher rates. I understand that the legislation is written so that higher-paid physicians are supposed to get a pay-cut. But I suspect, and I think many of my colleagues would believe this if they thought about it for awhile, that when the pay-cuts begin to phase-in, the high-priced physicians throughout the land will get enough slack put into the system that they won't face any cuts at all.

MAKING SOCIAL SECURITY AN INDEPENDENT AGENCY

A provision of this bill that is easier to understand but just as defective on policy grounds is the plan to make the Social Security Administration (SSA) an independent agency. This an idea that just does not make sense; it is bad government and bad public service.

At a time when the federal budget is plunging headlong into a rising tide of red ink, this is hardly the time to create new bureaucracies. As a part of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Social Security Administration is run far more economically. If it were separated, it would require duplicative expenditures for routine administrative costs like personnel and payroll, together with a number of other support facilities already provided efficiently within HHS.

A greater concern is what a change of this magnitude would mean to the ordinary Social Security beneficiary. Today, the local Social Security offices around the country are looked at as user-friendly places where America's seniors can go for "one stop shopping," that will cover both their Medicare and Social Security questions and needs. It doesn't make sense to force our senior citizens to deal with two federal bureaucracies in two different local offices.

Many other federal programs of HHS are directly related to Social Security programs: the social services for the elderly that are funded by the Administration on Aging; the health programs for the aged that are administered by the National Institute on Aging; and there is the essential link between Social Security and the Medicare and Medicaid programs of the Health Care Financing Administration. These programs for seniors are already complicated enough, without building up a whole second layer of bureaucracy to contend with.

Younger Americans will also be worse off if this provision becomes law and the SSA is removed from HHS. Today, approximately 9.2 per cent of disability insurance beneficiaries are children. SSA also pays retirement and survivors benefits to children. All of these SSA programs are linked to other programs within HHS, such as Head Start and the Administration on Disabilities. Tearing SSA out of HHS would disrupt a comprehensive system of programs that well serves young America.

No one has adequately explained what is supposed to be the magic of being an independent agency. Indeed, a lot of our experience of other independent agencies would suggest just the opposite.

Finally, an "independent" SSA would be run by a much lower ranking official than the Secretary of HHS, who is of course a member of the President's Cabinet. Today, America's seniors are represented at the table when the Cabinet meets; that kind of input is extremely valuable to President Bush, and I think the Social Security concerns of this country's elderly should continue to be heard in the Cabinet Room of the White House.

INCREASING THE EXEMPT AMOUNT FOR THE SOCIAL SECURITY EARNINGS TEST

Victor Hugo once said, "Greater than the tread of a mighty Army is an idea whose time has come." The provision pertaining to the retirement earnings test that is included in this reconciliation package proves Mr. Hugo's point.

The Committee's proposal increases the exempt amount by $5,000 over two years and establishes an additional $5,000 bracket in which the benefit reduction ratio is liberalized. It goes further toward mitigating the harsh tax burden on the elderly than any measure we have passed in recent history.

To understand fully the magnitude of what has been accomplished, it is necessary to delve into the history of the retirement earnings test. Social Security was established in the wake of the Great Depression. At that time, it was deemed appropriate to establish incentives for the elderly to leave the workforce and open up jobs for others. The earnings test was born of this notion.

In the Congressional Record from June 14, 1935, Senator Robert Wagner, the original chief sponsor of the Social Security Act, asserted that, "the incentive to the retirement of elderly workers will improve efficiency standards, [and] make new places for the strong and eager." There is no question that our attitudes about the elderly's participation in the workforce have changed since the 1930s. These changes were motivated by several considerations. One was the conviction that the elderly should not automatically be shunted aside when they reach a certain age. Another was that life expectancy continues to increase and the elderly are more healthy and productive than 40 years ago. At the same time, birth rates have dropped sharply and the demand for experienced labor is on the rise. There is, as alluded to above, a real need to encourage people to continue working. Directing people into retirement through excessive benefit reductions is obviously inconsistent with that goal.

Our attitudes have not simply changed somewhat. It is not an exaggeration to state that, today, Sen. Wagner's view is a complete anachronism. In the past decade, mandatory laws have been repealed and the normal retirement age under social security was salted to increase to 67 in the next century. Back in 1983, in fact, Senator Dole and I advanced a proposal to eliminate the retirement earnings test during consideration of the Social Security solvency amendments. That proposal was approved by the Senate Finance Committee and was included in the Senate-passed version of those amendments. Senator Moynihan, a longtime member of the Finance Committee and an acknowledged expert on Social Security matters, stated at the time that the proposal which would have "the most impact upon the lives of present and future retirees is the abolition of the earnings test." Unfortunately, however, this provision was dropped in conference committee at the insistence of the other body.

Despite such a promising beginning, we have made little recent progress in lessening the burden of the earnings test penalty on the elderly. Yet, congressional interest in eliminating the retirement earnings test remains strong. At least 26 bills (with 151 cosponsors) to modify substantially or eliminate the test were introduced in the 100th Congress and at least 12 bills have been introduced so far in the 101st Congress. In fact, one bill to eliminate the earnings test, introduced this session by Rep. Dennis Hastert, has garnered more than 100 cosponsors. It is clear that the will of the people and the intent of the Congress is that some action be taken to right this injustice.

In the 101st Congress, the Senate has passed amendments to increase the earnings limit on the Minimum Wage Bill, the Budget Resolution, and the Childcare legislation. All of these provisions, however were dropped in conference. With our proposal in this reconciliation package, finally something substantial may be accomplished.

Some unfamiliar with the earnings test may be surprised at the interest this topic engenders. Currently, social security beneficiaries under 70 face sharp reductions in their monthly benefit if their wage earnings exceed a specified amount. These seniors will lose fully $1 of benefits for every $2 of income they receive above the earnings limit, today $8,880. In other words, people earning just $9,000 are subject to what is in effect a marginal tax rate that is confiscatory. Because of the earnings limit, a senior worker who should be in the lowest tax bracket may end up paying marginal tax rates as high as 83 percent (50 percent earnings test, 15 percent income tax, 7.51 percent FICA, 7.5 percent income tax on social security benefits, and 3.37 percent on Catastrophic).

If we compare the tax consequences of working, there is a starkly unequal treatment before the law. A young worker doing exactly the same work and making precisely the same income would face a marginal tax rate of 15 percent and a social security tax rate of 7.51 percent in 1989. No one would tolerate such abusive age discrimination if they could see it but because it is a hidden effect of an outdated Social Security policy, this kind of discrimination has become an appalling fact of working life for this country's wage-earning elderly.

Moreover, as alluded to above, the earnings limit is bad labor policy. According to the Social Security Administration, about 1 million people currently suffer some reduction in benefits because of the earnings limit: 700,000 workers, 115,000 dependents, 40,000 survivors, and an estimated 140,000 people who do not even bother to file. The retirement earnings test imposes a terrible disincentive on elderly citizens who want to continue workng. After contributing to the social security program for decades and reaching age 65, the elderly are presented with a stark choice: eliminate virtually all significant earnings when retired or face stiff cuts in benefits to which they are otherwise entitled. A choice like that cannot help but drive productive individuals to a full retirement or force them to forego benefits they have worked for over a lifetime.

Many elderly citizens, while ready to reduce their work activity at age 65, do not want to withdraw from the workforce completely. Many desire to remain productive and contributing members of society. Some need additional earnings to meet living and health care expenses at a time when their principal sources of income are fixed. Yet, because of the low earnings limit, there is seldom a real choice but to stop working. Caught in the earnings test trap, this is just what many of our elderly have done. Today, 83% of all men and 92% of all women age 65 and older are completely retired. Between 1970 and 1985, the retirement rate among those 65 years old has increased by 40%. In the face of the labor shortages economists are now predicting for the United States, this problem take on new dimensions.

Another supposed concern about alleviating the burden placed on our elderly by the earnings limit is that we would be helping those who did not need help. Some say that this provision benefits the relatively "rich" among social security beneficiaries—those able to continue working and earn extra income. The fact is that elderly workers earning as little as $4.65 an hour lose benefits under the test.

There is a reverse-Robin Hood feature to the earnings test that is one of the more egregious anomalies under present law. Perverse as it may seem, people with unlimited "unearned" income from pensions, investments, or stock dividends face no reductions in their social security benefits through the earnings test. Retiring executives with incomes in excess of $100,000 may not lose one penny in benefits as a result of the earnings test when the elderly person working in a local pharmacy to earn $10,000 a year faces sharp reductions in her benefits. Rather than favoring the well-to-do, this proposal should restore some sense of equity in the tax treatment of retired citizens.

Beyond the fairness question, there are also practical problems with the earnings test. Quite simply, the earnings limit is an administrative monster to the Social Security Administration. SSA spends more than $200 million a year and uses 8 percent of its employees to police the income levels of beneficiaries. In the current practice, at the end of one year, elderly workers are asked by the Social Security Administration to estimate what their earnings will be for the following year. On the basis of this "estimate," SSA assesses the penalty to be paid by the worker. For example, if the person names a certain amount, he may be told that he will only get the equivalent of 10 months of benefits over the next year. The two month "penalty" is then paid up front. That elderly worker has his benefits withheld for the first two months of the year. This is real money that the senior worker does not have to spend on food, clothing, and shelter.

At the end of that year, the Social Security Administration goes back and makes adjustments for all inaccurate estimates. As anyone can well imagine, there are quite a few adjustments to be made. In fact, the Social Security Administration estimates that 60% of all overpayments and 45% of underpayments are attributable to the earnings limit. For beneficiaries, the earnings limit can mean confusion, frustration and financial hardships because of requirements to monitor, estimate and report income levels. The result is often a sense of disillusionment in the government and in a program many believed would pay full benefits when they turned 65.

For a long time, those of us interested in doing something to raise or eliminate the retirement earnings test had to overcome quite a sizable obstacle . . . cost. Static revenue models used by the Congressional Budget Office to estimate costs of raising or eliminating the penalty are daunting. Indeed, the provision in this reconciliation package had to be "offset" completely. Finally, two former Treasury economists at the National Center for Policy Analysis did a dynamic analysis of increasing the earnings limit. In their study, they took into consideration the fact that people respond to incentives. Consequently, they concluded that raising the limit a mere $3,000 would generate $1.5 billion in extra revenue a year. According to this study, increasing the $8,880 limit to its revenue-maximizing point of $39,400 would bring in an additional $3.2 billion a year. And eliminating the earnings test altogether would inject at least 700,000 additional elderly retirees into the labor market. If these estimates are realized, we may have found that truly rare gem in the world of politics and fiscal realities—a policy change that makes money and is worth pursuing on its own merits.

Increasing the retirement earnings test is supported by the American Association of Retired Persons. In a statement given before the Subcommittee on Social Security of the House Committee on Ways and Means on May 25, 1989 they state bluntly, "AARP believes it is time to liberalize the current earnings limit." They include in their statement an excerpt from a letter they received from one of their members who stated:

"I am not alone in believing the law restricting the amount earned by Social Security is the most unfair and discriminatory law in our beloved United States. The maximum allowable amount is total earnings, and not take home pay . . .

"I am an executive secretary, a widow of one year, and I could not possibly live on the allowable earnings and my meager Social Security benefit. Would the government prefer us to live in subsidized low-cost housing, receive food stamps and/or welfare? I am too proud to do that . . ."

In their testimony, AARP summarizes the situation very well. They maintain, "we should not penalize . . . individuals who try to improve their economic situation through the only means available to them—work."

Although our efforts since the 1983 vote in the Senate to eliminate the earnings test penalty have been fruitless, I believe we have made almost unbelievable progress this year. People like Sens. Bentsen, Dole, Exon, and Roth—along with Reps. Hastert, Armey, Archer, and Brown—have worked almost unceasingly to lessen or eliminate the earnings test penalty. As a result, we are on the brink of realizing this goal. We are on the verge of taking the steps which would carry us down the path laid out by President Bush in his inaugural address when he stated, "We must bring in the generations, harnessing the unused talent of the elderly."

D—indicates direct spending.
A—indicates spending amounts subject to appropriation.
R—indicates revenues.
*—indicates less than $500,000.
a—Some direct spending could result from the provision, but estimates of potential effects are highly uncertain. Lack of information on the numbers of homeless individuals, their health and work history characteristics, and the specifications of the proposed program severely limit the reliability of any estimates of program costs.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, July 21, 1989.

Hon. JAMES R. SASSER,
Chairman, Senate Committee on the Budget, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to H. Con. Res. 106, the Congressional Budget Resolution Conference Report, the recommendations of the Governmental Affairs Committee to effect the required budgetary savings are enclosed.

These savings are achieved by removing the United States Postal Service from the unified Federal budget and through Federal pension and postal reforms.

Sincerely,

JOHN GLENN.
Chairman.
WILLIAM V. ROTH,
Ranking Minority Member.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS—BUDGET RECONCILIATION RECOMMENDATIONS

Pursuant to H. Con. Res. 106, the Congressional Budget Resolution Conference Report, the Committee on Governmental Affairs has approved legislation which is projected to reduce the fiscal year (FY) 1990 budget deficit by approximately $2.9 billion. These savings are achieved through removing the United States Postal Service from the unified Federal budget and through federal pension and postal reforms.

POSTAL REORGANIZATION

The Committee has approved legislation that amends Chapter 20 of title 39, United States Code, to remove the receipts and disbursements of the Postal Service fund from the totals included in the budget submitted by the President, the Congressional budget, and the estimates used to calculate the deficit under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, beginning in fiscal year 1990. Using the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) baseline, the effect of removing the Postal Service from the budget totals, as specified in the Committee's legislation, is approximately $1.8 billion in FY 1990.

The reconciliation agreement would also phase-out direct subsidies to the Postal Service for retirement cost-of-living adjustments (COLAs) and survivor health benefit premiums. Under the terms of the legislation, the Service is required to make a one time payment of $400 million in FY 1990 to cover a portion of past unfunded COLA liabilities. For future years, the Service is required to pay on amortized, prorated basis the COLA cost of each new group of retirees. In addition, the Postal Service is required to assume payment of retiree survivor's health benefit premiums beginning in FY 1990. Using CBO estimates, the cumulative impact of these prorated COLA and health insurance premium payments by the Postal Service to the federal government will be $106 million by the end of FY 1994.

DEFERRED PAYMENT OF RETIREMENT LUMP-SUM CREDIT

The Committee has approved legislation that provides for deferred payments of the lump-sum credit that certain federal and postal employees elect to receive upon retirement. Under the terms of the reconciliation agreement, an employee whose annuity commences after September 30, 1989, and before October 1, 1990, would receive 50 percent of the amount of the lump-sum credit which such employee elects at the time of retirement, and 50 percent of the amount of the lump-sum credit on the date 12 months after the date on which the lump-sum credit would otherwise have been paid. The remainder of the lump-sum credit shall be payable with interest. The CBO estimates that this deferral of payments will reduce the Federal budget deficit by $700 million in FY 1990.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 20, 1989.

Hon. JOHN GLENN,
Chairman, Committee on Governmental Affairs, United States Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget has prepared the attached cost estimate for the reconciliation recommendations of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE—COST ESTIMATE

1. Bill Number: Not available.

2. Bill Title: Reconciliation Recommendations of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs.

3. Bill Status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, July 13, 1989.

4. Bill purpose: The bill would require lump-sum annuities of federal employees to be paid over two years for employees retiring in fiscal year 1990.

In addition, the bill would exclude the receipts and disbursements of the Postal Service fund from the totals in the budget submitted by the President, the Congressional budget, and the estimates used to calculate the deficit under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, beginning in fiscal year 1990. The bill would also exempt the Postal Service fund from sequestration, and would make the following other changes affecting the Postal Service:

Require the Postal Service to deposit $400 million into the Civil Service Retirement Fund at the end of fiscal year 1990, and to pay additional sums to the Civil Service Retirement Fund for cost-of-living adjustments (COLAs) given to Postal Service annuitants who retire on or after October 1, 1990, their survivors, and survivors of individuals who die on or after October 1, 1990, while employed by the Postal Service; and require the Postal Service to pay for health benefit premiums for survivors of certain former employees of the Postal Service and survivors of individuals who died on or before October 1, 1986, while employed by the Postal Service.

5. Estimated Cost to the Federal Government: On an aggregate basis, only one provision of the bill would have a net effect on federal spending. The spreading of lump-sum annuity payments over two years would reduce outlays by $700 million in 1990, but would increase outlays by $750 million in 1991.

Placing the Postal Service fund off-budget and modifying Postal Service payments in the Civil Service Retirement Fund and for health benefits would only change the mix between on-budget and off-budget spending, and would not affect total federal spending. In years in which the Postal Service is operating at a surplus, this would have the effect of increasing the on-budget deficit; in years when disbursements by the Postal Service exceed receipts, the on-budget deficit would be reduced.

The following table shows the estimated budget impact of the bill, based on the baseline projections underlying the 1990 budget resolution.

[1] On-budget and off-budget effects are offsetting; there would be no net effect on Federal spending
[2] Less than $500,000.

Some of the off-budget spending increases shown in the table may be entirely or partially offset if future rate increases are adjusted to cover these costs. The first such increase, under baseline assumptions, would be in fiscal year 1991.

The effects of this bill fall within budget functions 370, 550, 600 and 950.

Basis of Estimate

Partial Deferred Payment of Lump-Sum Credit.—Under current law, federal civilian employees retiring after September 30, 1989, and electing to receive their contributions to the civil service retirement system in lump-sum amounts, would receive 100 percent of their lump-sum amounts upon retirement. The bill would change the payment schedule to 50 percent of the lump-sum amount the first year, and the remaining 50 percent plus interest one year after retirement. This new payment plan would be effective for all employees retiring after September 30, 1989 and before October 1, 1990.

Postal Service Budgetary Treatment.—For purposes of this estimate, the budget resolution baseline has been used to show the effect of removing the Postal Service fund from the budget totals, as specified in the bill. The baseline for the Postal Service fund reflects operating costs, capital expenses, borrowing, income from investments, federal appropriations, and mail revenue. It also incorporates adjustments for two future rate increases. The change in treatment mandated by the bill would reduce on-budget outlays by $1.77 billion in 1990, but would increase on-budget spending in three of the next four years. Aggregate federal spending would not be affected.

Under current law, the operations of the Postal Service are exempt from sequestration, but its administrative expenses are considered sequestrable resources and are subject to across-the-board reductions. The bill would exempt all Postal Service resources from sequestration. To the extent that a sequester of Postal Service resources would contribute to the savings required under sequestration percentage applied to other nondefense discretionary programs in order to reach the same deficit target.

The bill would also exclude the Postal Service from the estimates used to calculate the deficit for purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985. In years when the Postal Service disbursements exceed receipts, the deficit in the budget base would be less than under current law, and the savings required by sequestration would be reduced. On the other hand, when Postal Service receipts exceed disbursements and net outlays are expected to be negative, excluding the Postal Service from the budget base would increase the savings required from sequestration, thus increasing the percentage applicable to other programs.

The Postal Service has authority to borrow up to $10 billion for capital and operating purposes. Outstanding Postal debt at the end of fiscal year 1989 is estimated to be over $6 billion. The Postal Service has borrowed almost all of this amount from the Federal Financing Bank to fund its capital investment program, and we would expect this practice to continue. Under current scoring treatment, which we would not expect to change if the Postal Service were moved off-budget, the use of borrowing authority is reflected as budget authority when obligations are made, and as outlays when obligations are liquidated.

Postal Service Payment to the Civil Service Retirement Fund.—The bill would require the Postal Service to make a one-time payment of $400 million to the Civil Service Retirement Fund, to occur at the end of fiscal year 1990. This would result in off-budget outlays and on-budget offsetting receipts of $400 million.

Postal Service Funding of Cost-of-Living Adjustments (COLAs).—The bill would make the Postal Service pay, in fifteen annual installments, for the increase in the unfunded liability of the Civil Service Retirement Fund resulting from providing COLAs to reitrees, and survivors of retirees, of the Postal Service. This change would be effective for all Postal Service employees retiring on or after October 1, 1990, and thus would result in costs beginning in fiscal year 1991. The Postal Service would be liable only for the portion of the retiree's total years of service that is attributable to Postal Service employment. payments would be negligible in 1991, but would grow to $26 million by 1994.

Postal Service Funding of Health Benefit Premiums.—This estimate assumes that the number of survivors grows at the rate of 800 per year and is based on the average benefit premium for annuitants. The fiscal year 1989 average benefit premium is about $150 per month and is projected to grow by 16 percent in fiscal year 1990 and by 12 percent per year thereafter. Postal Service payments are estimated to be $6 million in 1990, increasing to $20 million in 1994.

6. Estimated cost to State and local governments: None.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimates:

On July 14, 1989, CBO transmitted a cost estimate for the reconciliation recommendations of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, as ordered reported by that committee on July 12, 1989. CBO estimated an on-budget savings of $2.8 billion in 1990, and on-budget costs of $1.7 billion over the 1991-1994 period. CBO also estimated that there would be off-budget costs of $2.5 billion in 1990, and off-budget costs of $1.9 billion over the 1991-1994 period, which could be entirely or partially offset beginning in 1991 if future rate increases are adjusted as a result. The House committee's recommendations include a number of provisions not in the Senate bill, including an increase in Postal Service borrowing authority, changes in the Postal Service's borrowing, deposit, and investment procedures, and a change in the timing of the Postal Service payment to the Department of labor for workers' compensation.

On July 14, 1989, CBO transmitted a cost estimate for H.R. 982, as ordered reported by the House Committee on Post Office and CIvil Service, July 12, 1989, and on June 27, 1989, CBO transmitted a cost estimate for H.R. 982, as ordered reported by the House Committee on Government Operations, June 27, 1989. Both bills had identical language regarding the budgetary treatment of the Postal Service, but did not contain the other provisions in this bill.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES,
Washington, DC, October 5, 1989.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Budget Committee, Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SASSER: The 1990 Budget Resolution, adopted on May 4, 1989, required the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee to submit the recommendations to save $70 million in fiscal year 1990. The attached material represents the Labor Committee's compliance with that mandate.

The Labor and Human Resources Committee has achieved its savings through two proposals. We have raised the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation (PBGC) premium rate from $16 per participant in a plan to $18 per participant.

The second proposal will close a loophole in the Stafford Student Loan Program by prohibiting medical schools from classifying residents as students for purposes of a student loan deferment. To avoid unnecessary hardship on the residents, we have included language to ensure that residents can receive forebearance upon request, without a fee, and without adverse consequences on their credit record.

The total reduction in federal expenditures achieved by the Labor Committee recommendations, after accounting for $1 million in outlays for an educational forgiveness provision, is $74 million.

The Committee has also included several provisions which require immediate legislative action. Any costs associated with these provisions are offset by the revenue raised from increased penalties assessed under OSHA, MSHA and ERISA.

On behalf of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, I am pleased to forward these recommendations to the Budget Committee for inclusion in the 1990 Senate Reconciliation bill.

Sincerely,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

SUBTITLE A—PENSION PLANS

OVERVIEW

Pension Plan Terminations

The United States relies on a three-tiered system to provide income to individuals in their retirement years. The Social Security system, financed jointly through mandatory employer and employee contributions, provides a minimum level of income support to individuals. Employer-sponsored pension benefits, where funds are set-aside on a tax-deferred basis, supplement Social Security payments. Individuals may further supplement their income needs in retirement through private savings.

In recent years, the need for adequate employer-sponsored retirement benefits has intensified. Pressure to reduce Social Security benefits and the failure of individuals to set-aside sufficient discretionary savings have increased reliance on the private retirement system. In addition, Americans are living longer and retiring earlier, increasing the need for a viable system to provide income support to individuals during their retirement years.

In 1974, Congress enacted the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) to safeguard the employer-sponsored retirement benefits earned by millions of workers. Over forty million workers, plus an additional 10 million retired workers, are currently covered by the private pension benefit system. There are two basic types of pension plans—defined benefit and defined contribution plans. Defined benefit plans rewards long-service workers by guaranteeing a certain level of benefits during retirement. Retirement benefits generally are calculated to provide a specific percentage of a worker's final or average salary. Sixty five percent of employers offering plans provide defined benefit plans. Eighty percent of pension plan participants are covered by a defined benefit plan. In contrast, defined contribution plans are akin to bank accounts in which employers contribute a specific dollar amount each year. Defined contribution plans often are used as a supplement to a basic defined benefit plan.

To ensure benefit security, ERISA established minimum standards for tax-deferred pension plans including standards relating to coverage, vesting, benefit accrual, and plan funding. Other requirements enacted to protect plan participants and beneficiaries include detailed reporting and disclosure rules and fiduciary protections. ERISA adopted longstanding trust law principles to ensure that plan fiduciaries act solely in the interest of participants and beneficiaries and that assets are held for the exclusive purposes of providing benefits to participants. ERISA also established the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC), a Federal government agency that guarantees the pension benefits promised to workers and retirees in defined benefit pension plans.

ERISA generally has been successful in protecting the pension benefits promised to workers. Some weaknesses remain, however, that allow employers to jeopardize the benefit security of workers and their beneficiaries and put the PBGC at risk to a greater degree than is desirable or necessary. In recent years, the termination of defined benefit pension plans by employers who seek to recover what are considered "excess" pension assets has jeopardized the retirement security of millions of workers and retirees. Since 1981, two thousand employers have terminated defined benefit plans in order to recapture $20 billion. Two million workers and retirees have been affected by these terminations. Very often these terminations are related to merger and takeover activity. According to the General Accounting Office, 40 percent of the terminations occurred incident to a merger or takeover.

Defined benefit pension plans accumulate such significant "excess" assets because they are funded to provide benefits based upon future salary levels and years of service. ERISA's minimum funding rules permit employers to pre-fund pension benefits to ensure that sufficient funds are set aside to provide the benefits needed decades into the future. Most employers, for reasons of prudence and tax advantage, choose either to fund their plans by a level amount each year or to make greater contributions in the early years of a plan. The tax-deferred treatment for funds contributed to a pension plan provides a tremendous incentive to employers to fund their plans adequately. Decades of this prefunding have led to billions of dollars being set aside for benefits not yet paid out.

Strong investment returns over the past decade also have contributed to the amount of assets accumulating in pension plans. Although pension plans are required to amortize investment returns if greater (or lower) than plan estimates over future years, the prior limit of 15 years was too long to reduce "excess" assets in the short run. (The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 reduced the period for amortization of new gains and losses to 5 years.) According to the Department of Labor, approximately $250 billion has accumulated in pension plans for liabilities not yet due.

Both title I of ERISA and the Internal Revenue Code provide that plan assets must be used to provide benefits exclusively to participants and beneficiaries and generally may not inure to the benefit of an employer. However, when an employer terminates a single-employer defined benefit pension plan, the employer is only liable for benefits accrued up to the date of plan termination. Both ERISA and the Code permit an employer, through explicit plan language, to recover residual assets in excess of termination liabilities. The drafters of ERISA did not anticipate the incentive to terminate created by the disparity between the assets contributed to meet the ongoing funding needs of a pension plan and the liabilities owed upon premature plan termination.

Unfortunately, many employers have been greatly tempted by the ready cash that pension plans contain. In 1981, a German conglomerate bought the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company (A&P) and terminated the pension plan to finance the takeover. The buyer realized that even though the assets in the pension plan were necessary to meet future pension liabilities, an employer may terminate the plan and only be liable for the benefits that workers have accrued up to the date of termination. Because plan termination is the only means through which an employer may obtain pension assets, employers have an incentive to terminate pension plans to gain access to the assets.

The A&P pension termination was the beginning of a disturbing trend. In 1981, 35 employers terminated pension plans and recaptured pension assets. By 1983, the number had risen to 166 and by 1984, 329 companies had applied to recover pension assets. This trend led many workers and retirees, unions, and several members of Congress to seek changes in the law. The agencies with responsibility for regulating defined benefit plans (i.e., the Department of Labor, the Department of Treasury, and the PBGC) became concerned that employers' interest in obtaining excess assets would result in the discontinuance of defined benefit plan coverage for large numbers of American workers. Several Congressional hearings were held in both the House and Senate on this issue, and members of Congress urged the Administration to review the problem. (See History of Congressional Action below.)

It took three years for the Reagan Administration to determine the legality of these pension plan terminations. Initial agency positions determined that the practice was illegal, but the agencies were overruled by the President's Domestic Policy Council. In mid-1984, the Department of Labor, the Internal Revenue Service and the PBGC, jointly issued the Asset Reversion Implementation Guidelines. The Guidelines sanctioned pension plan terminations with employer reversions and permitted "sham" terminations where employers either split plans in two or terminate a plan and immediately reestablish an identical plan stripped of assets (spin-off terminations and termination/reestablishments). The Guidelines were criticized by many (including several Members of Congress) who believed that stronger action could and should be taken to safeguard benefit security.

The Guidelines allow employers to eliminate all assets in excess of termination liabilities. This leaves any reestablished defined benefit plan with few or no assets to serve as a "cushion." The elimination of any assets cushion severely jeopardizes participant benefit security. A reestablished plan would no longer contain sufficient assets to provide benefits to workers in the future and is inconsistent with funding rules that have been designed to require employers to contribute (and to deduct) amounts that will lead to the accumulation of assets sufficient to pay retirement benefits. The cushion also protects the plan against adverse investment performance and may be used to fund future benefit increases. For retirees, the stripping down of a plan through a Guidelines termination generally means that there are no assets left to provide cost-of-living adjustments.

In 1985, terminations increased dramatically as 582 employers terminated plans and recaptured $6 billion in pension assets. Congress remained concerned about the effect of these terminations on workers pension benefits and required the Secretary of Labor to conduct a study of employer reversions upon pension plan termination (the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (P.L. 99-272). Importantly, the study found that terminations with employer reversions did jeopardize the retirement benefit security of workers and retirees. The Administration concluded that terminations "reduced participant's benefit security with respect to future benefit accruals and may also discourage the employer from granting ad hoc benefit increases or cost of living allowances for retirees."

On February 19, 1987, the Administration submitted to the Congress a series of legislative recommendations relating to the termination and funding of single-employer defined benefit pension plans. The proposal submitted to Congress was more comprehensive than originally requested and covered both overfunded and underfunded plan terminations. The House Committee on Education and Labor and the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources adopted many of the provisions contained in the Administration proposal and included them in the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987. Separate provisions were passed by the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee. Congress enacted both sets of recommendations. The Labor Committees' provisions were deleted in conference after an impasse arose over the provisions affecting underfunded plans.

In 1988, the Treasury Department agreed to suspend the issuance of all determination letters permitting employers to recover pension assets upon termination from October 24, 1988 until May 1, 1989. In February 1989, the Senate Subcommittee on Labor held a hearing to receive testimony from the Administration on their efforts to reconsider the reversion problem. The Administration agreed to continue to review the matter.

In April, Senator Metzenbaum, chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor, introduced S. 685, the Employee Pension Protection Act. The bill protects the pension benefits of workers and retirees upon plan termination and encourages employers seeking to recover pension assets to reestablish new pension plans. The Subcommittee on Labor held a hearing on the bill on April 11.

Transfers of Pension Assets to Retiree Health Benefits

The issue of transferring "excess" pension assets to retiree health benefit plans first surfaced during the Reagan Administration's study of the funding and termination of defined benefit pension plans in 1987. The Administration recognized that employers' obligations for retiree health benefits were growing rapidly while the law restricted an employer's ability to pre-fund the benefits. The Administration's legislative proposal to Congress recommended that both ERISA and the Internal Revenue Code be amended to permit the transfer of pension assets, above a sufficient cushion, to help employers meet their growing retiree health care liability. The proposal was quite controversial for several reasons. Longstanding pension policy prohibits transfers of pension plan money from ongoing pension plans for any purpose. The money contributed to pension plans is viewed as the deferred wages of workers, wages set aside to provide them with pension benefits. Moreover, existing law set no standards for the provision of retiree health benefits. Members of Congress and the Administration agreed that any serious proposal had to ensure that tax free contributions to retiree health benefit plans actually benefited retirees. The transfer issue raised complex policy questions that needed detailed consideration. Due to the complicated nature of the proposals being debated with respect to overfunded and underfunded plans, the transfer proposal was deleted.

During this time, the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) was working on a proposed statement to require employers to report their retiree health liabilities on corporate balance sheets. The proposed statement was finally released in February, 1989. The statement establishes accounting standards for employers' accounting of post-retirement benefits other than pensions, primarily post-retirement health care. The statement will generally become effective in 1992.

The reporting requirements contained in the FASB accounting statement have created incentives for many employers, particularly large employers, to reduce these liabilities from their balance sheets prior to 1992. Some of these large employers have resumed their effort to amend ERISA and the Code to permit transfer of pension assets to offset existing retiree health liabilities. These companies have argued that such transfers would increase federal revenues at least in the short run, because health care deductions need not be taken if untaxed pension funds are used to pay for benefits. The federal government's urgent need for revenues has transformed what was once an issue of public policy into an attractive fiscal proposal. The House Ways and Means Committee has adopted, as part of its budget reconciliation recommendations, provisions to permit limited transfers of pension plan assets for retiree health benefits. The Ways and Means Committee did so reluctantly in order to meet the Committee's Budget Reconciliation instruction.

HISTORY OF CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

Congress first became concerned about the security of the retirement benefits promised to workers in well-funded pension plans after the 1981 plan terminations involving the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company (A & P) and Harper & Row Publishers. The House Select Committee on Aging held oversight hearings on June 7, 1982 and September 28, 1983 on this emerging issue. Witnesses included representatives of the Reagan Administration, union officials and corporate executives.

On March 15, 1984, Senator Howard M. Metzenbaum, ranking minority member on the Subcommittee on Labor of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, introduced S. 2435 to impose a nine-month moratorium on employer reversions of assets from terminated pension plans. Identical legislation was introduced by Congressman Edward R. Roybal, chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, on March 16, 1984 (H.R. 5168).

The Senate Subcommittee on Labor held a hearing on April 4, 1984 on S. 2435. Testimony was presented by representatives of the Administration, older worker organizations, union officials, business organizations, and corporate executives. On November 5, 1984, Congressman Roybal introduced H.R. 6404 to provide for controls on terminations of pension plans where employers seek to recover pension plan assets.

On June 6, 1985, Congressman Roybal introduced H.R. 2701 to protect the retirement benefits of workers and retirees affected by pension plan terminations and employer reversions. On June 12, 1985, joint oversight hearings were held on overfunded pension plans by the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations of the House Committee on Education and Labor and the House Select Committee on Aging. Witnesses included representatives of the Administration, pension plan participants and retirees, union officials and business representatives. Senator Metzenbaum and Congressman Roybal reintroduced legislation to impose a nine-month moratorium on pension plan reversions on July 30, 1985. (S. 1532, H.R. 3121).

In 1985, Congress required the Secretary of Labor to study the effects of pension plan terminations where employers recover residual assets. The study requirement was included as part of the Single-Employer Pension Plan Amendments contained in the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (P.L. 99-272). As a result of the study, the Reagan Administration concluded that the termination of well-funded pension plans jeopardized the retirement benefit security of workers. On February 19, 1987, the Reagan Administration sent to the Congress a legislative proposal on the funding and termination of defined benefit pension plans.

On March 24, 1987, the Senate Subcommittee on Labor and the House Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations held a joint oversight hearing on the Administration's proposal. Secretary of Labor William Brock testified on behalf of the Administration. Other witnesses included retired workers, senior citizens' organizations, union officials and business organization representatives. Congressman Roybal introduced legislation to prohibit reversions on April 6, 1987 (H.R. 1942). On July 28, 1987, the House Education and Labor Committee reported legislation modifying the Administration proposal as part of the Committee's 1987 Budget Reconciliation amendments. The Committee recommendations were included in H.R. 3545, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, which was enacted by the House on October 29, 1987 (H. Rept. 100-391). The Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources reported identical provisions as part of its budget reconciliation amendments on October 9, 1987. The Senate enacted its amendments to H.R. 3545 on December 11, 1987 by voice vote. The Senate insisted on its amendments and requested a conference. The conferees reached tentative agreement on pension protections for workers and retirees affected by well-funded pension plan terminations. The provisions were deleted however, when the conferees could not reach agreement on other pension issues.

On March 9, 1988, Congressman William L. Clay, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, introduced H.R. 4111 to impose a moratorium on pension plan reversions until October 1, 1989. Senator Metzenbaum introduced identical legislation on April 4, 1988 (S. 2284). On June 23, the Senate Committee on Appropriations in its executive session included S. 2284 in H.R. 4783, the 1989 appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and Related Agencies (S. Rept. 100-399). On July 26, S. 2284 was removed from H.R. 4783 during debate on the Senate floor, the Senate enacted a resolution encouraging Congress to increase the excise tax on reversions to 60% until May 1, 1989. On September 8, the Senate Finance Committee adopted the excise tax provision as part of S. 2238, the Technical Corrections Act of 1988. The Senate enacted S. 2238 as an amendment to H.R. 4333, the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, on October 11, 1988. During conference, the excise tax was deleted. The Treasury Department agreed to suspend the issuance of all requests for determination letters where employers attempt to recover pension plans assets upon termination from October 24, 1988 until May 1, 1989. The Treasury Department also agreed to review the pension plan termination issue.

On February 9, 1989, the Senate Subcommittee on Labor held an oversight hearing to receive testimony from the Bush Administration on the moratorium on reversions and the Administration's consideration of the pension plan termination problem. Witnesses included representatives of the Departments of Labor and Treasury, current and retired workers, union officials, senior citizens' organizations and business representatives.

On April 4, 1989, Senator Metzenbaum and Representative Clay introduced the Employee Pension Protection Act of 1989 (S. 685, H.R. 1661). The Senate Labor Subcommittee held a legislative hearing on April 11, 1989. Witnesses included current and retired workers, union officials, senior citizens' organizations and business representatives. On April 18, the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations held a hearing and favorably reported H.R. 1661 with one technical amendment. On July 5, 1989, the House Committee on Ways and Means adopted provisions to permit a one-time transfer of "excess" pension plan assets to retiree health benefit plans as part of its Budget Reconciliation Act recommendations. On July 13, Congressman Clay offered an amendment to the House Committee on Education and Labor's Budget Reconciliation recommendations which would impose a ban on employer reversions and permit employers to transfer "excess" pension assets to retiree health benefit accounts provided certain minimum standards are met. The amendment was favorably reported by a roll call vote of 21-11 and the Committee favorably reported its Budget Reconciliation amendments by voice vote. The Committee on Education and Labor separately reported H.R. 1661 by voice vote on July 13.

COMMITTEE EXPLANATION OF SUBTITLE A—PENSION PLANS

Under S. Con. Res. 30, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for 1990, the Committee on Labor and Human Resources is instructed to reduce spending outlays by $70 million in FY 1990 (S. Rept. 101-20). The primary recommendation adopted by the Committee to meet its Budget Reconciliation instruction increases the annual premium paid to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation by single-employer pension plans by $2, from $16 to $18 per participant. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that the premium increase will reduce spending outlays by $65 million each year.

The Committee has been acutely concerned over the problems related to the funding and termination of defined benefit pension plans for the past six years. As stated previously, our country is becoming increasingly dependent upon the pivate retirement system to ensure that the retirement income needs of our citizens are met. The Social Security system cannot provide sufficient retirement income for the majority of Americans. We must have an adequate supplemental retirement income system.

We also must assure that the termination of defined benefit pension plans does not put the federal government unreasonably at risk. The federal government, through the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, insures most of the pension benefits promised to employees under defined benefit pension plans. The PBGC is intended to be self-financing. Employers pay an annual premium to the PBGC, and the PBGC becomes the trustee of all pension assets in insufficiently funded pension plans.

The PBGC has generally operated at a loss since its inception. When ERISA was enacted in 1974, the premium was initially set at $1.00 per participant. After two years of operation, the PBGC had a deficit of over $40 million. In 1977, Congress raised the premium to $2.60. By 1982, the PBGC's liability had risen to $150 million and it became apparent that a substantial premium increase was needed. In 1985, as part of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, the premium was increased to $8.50. Despite the increase, the financial liability of the PBGC rose to approximately $1 billion due to the termination of several seriously underfunded pension plans in late 1985. Congress was again forced to raise the PBGC premium to $16 and impose an additional variable premium upon certain underfunded pension plans as part of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

Since 1987, the PBGC's liability has continued to skyrocket, rising to nearly $4 billion. (The PBGC has contested $2 billion of its liability, which represents the pension obligation resulting from the termination of the LTV Corporation pension plans. The PBGC lost at both the district and appellate court levels. It is unlikely that the PBGC will be relieved of this liability.) The exorbitant liability of the PBGC poses a serious threat to the financial solvency of the PBGC, and thus to the federal government.

Both Congress and the Administration have long been concerned that significant pension plan overfunding or underfunding may jeopardize workers' retirement benefits and the defined benefit pension system. The Budget Reconciliation Acts of 1985 and 1987 contained legislative reforms, in addition to the PBGC premium increases, which addressed problems posed by underfunded plans.

The Committee remains concerned over the effects of the termination of overfunded pension plans and believes that reform is needed in this area. To the extent that under current law employers have an incentive to terminate well-funded pension plans, the Committee believes legislative reforms are necessary. The substantive reforms adopted by the Committee will reduce the incentive to terminate and thus, will stabilize the pool of employers maintaining defined benefit pension plans and financing pension insurance through the PBGC. The Committee's substantive reforms include legislative recommendations to reduce the incentive to terminate by allocating a share of "excess" pension assets to workers and retirees and by permitting, in limited circumstances, the transfer of "excess" pension assets to retiree health benefit accounts.

Therefore, the Committee amendments relating to pension plans contain a number of interrelated provisions: 1) S. 685, the Employee Pension Protection Act of 1989, as amended; 2) amendments to title I of ERISA to permit certain qualified transfers of "excess" pension plan assets to retiree health benefit accounts; and 3) changes in civil penalties assessed against violators of the labor and pension laws. The Committee expects that these recommendations will reduce the federal deficit in fiscal year 1990 and in following years.

CHAPTER 1—FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITIES RELATING TO PLAN TERMINATIONS

This chapter contains the provisions of S. 685, the Employee Pension Protection Act, as amended.

Longstanding trust law doctrine, from which much of pension plan law and ERISA derive, requires those persons empowered to control pension plan assets to act exclusively for the benefit of the individuals covered by the plan. Many individuals and pension law experts have long felt that this principle should prohibit any recovery of pension assets by an employer.

The Act clarifies ERISA's general requirement that a pension plan fiduciary must hold plan assets for the exclusive purposes of providing benefits to participants and their beneficiaries and must discharge his or her duties solely in the interests of participants and beneficiaries with respect to the plan assets of terminated plans. An exception to this rule is created to permit fiduciaries to distribute pension plan assets to the sponsor of a plan (i.e., the employer) provided that the requirements of this Act are met.

Under current law, an employer is required to fund a defined benefit pension plan so that it will provide benefits in the future. An employer may terminate a pension plan at any time, provided 60 days notice has been provided to participants and the PBGC, and the plan contains sufficient assets to meet its benefit liabilities up to the date of plan termination. A significant disparity can exist between the funding needs of an ongoing pension plan and the liabilities owed by the plan if prematurely terminated. It is this disparity that enables an employer to arrange for the termination of a pension plan at a time when the plan contains an artificial "surplus". In the overwhelming majority of these terminations, the employer reestablishes another pension plan immediately, but the new plan is stripped of the funds needed to provide future benefits. In addition, an employer may terminate an overfunded plan and recapture assests, even though the employer maintains other underfunded plans for which the PBGC is liable. Clearly, an employer should not be able to benefit while the federal government is at risk.

The Act seeks to define more properly the funding needs of a pension plan in order to reduce the incentive to terminate solely to recapture an artificial surplus. The Act retains the provisions of current law which permit an employer to terminate its pension plan at any time and which require the satisfaction of benefit liabilities under the plan. In those situations where an employer is using the termination to recover pension assets, the Act amends title I of ERISA, to add requirements that the named pension plan fiduciary assure that a qualified replacement plan is in existence and that all of the employer's pension plans are sufficiently funded before any assets that are truly surplus may be distributed to the employer.

Therefore, under the Act, an employer may receive a distribution of plan assets remaining in the final distribution of assets in accordance with the terms of the plan if: (1) such distribution occurs after the satisfaction of all benefit liabilities and employee contributions, (2) there is an established replacement plan, and (3) each defined benefit plan maintained by the employer or a member of the employer's controlled group has assets sufficient to pay all liabilities under the plan.

In determining what comprises a qualified replacement plan, the Committee looked toward the type of plan that best protects the expectations of the participants in the terminated plan and the funding needs of that replacement plan. In the most preferable situation, the employer establishes a defined benefit plan identical to the terminated plan (defined by the Act as a complete replacement plan). The Act requires that a complete replacement plan contain sufficient assets to meet the future funding needs of the plan. In addition, the Act requires a one-time retroactive cost of living adjustment to retirees and certain terminated vested participants in the plan. This requirement reflects the reality that cost of living adjustments are generally provided out of the gains earned by a plan. Such gains no longer exist if the employer is permitted to strip them out of the plan.

Under the Act, a complete replacement plan is defined as a single-employer defined benefit plan which meets the following requirements:

(1) the current value of the assets of the plan is at least 125% of the projected benefit liabilities of the terminated plan (projected benefit liability is the actuarial present value of benefit liabilities under ERISA including an assumption for increases in future compensation levels at a rate equal to 5% a year);

(2) participants and beneficiaries under the terminated plan retain the same status as participants or beneficiaries; (3)(A) each participant's benefits are equivalent in amount and form to his or her benefits under the terminated plan and (B) the benefits of retired and terminated vested participants are increased by the excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index over the percentage increase in such benefits under the terminated plan (a terminated vested participant is a participant who has a nonforfeitable right to benefits under the terminated plan and who terminated during the period beginning 3 years before the plan termination);

(4) the rate of benefit accrual is equal to or greater than the rate of accrual under the terminated plan;

(5) participants are credited with amounts of past service credit at least equal to the amount credited under the terminated plan; and

(6) all benefits remain nonforfeitable.

In the less preferable, but accepted situation, the employer uses the termination of the pension plan as an opportunity to reduce the benefits or pension protections provided under a replacement plan. In order to assure that such a replacement plan (termed a substantial replacement plan) is not a sham, the Act sets minimum standards to provide some protection to participants. In addition, because of the less protective structure of such a plan, the Act requires a larger cushion in a substantial replacement than in a complete replacement plan. The larger cushion is intended to compensate for the greater benefit loss incurred by participants and to encourage employers to establish a complete replacement plan.

The Act defines a substantial replacement plan as a single employer plan, either defined benefit or defined contribution which meets the following requirements:

(1) the current value of the assets of the plan or in the individual accounts of each participant is at least 135% of the projected benefit liabilities of the terminated plan;

(2) all participants and beneficiaries under the terminated plan retain the same status as participants or beneficiaries;

(3) participants are each credited with an amount of past service at least equal to the amount credited under the terminated plan;

(4) the benefits of participants remain nonforfeitable;

(5) the rate of benefit accrual is at least (A) for defined benefit plans, 2% times the participant's number of years of service during the period of consecutive years, up to 5, of the participant's greatest aggregate compensation, or (B) for defined contribution plans, 4% of each participant's annual compensation; and

(6) the benefits of all retired and terminated vested participants is increased by the excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index over the percentage increase in such benefits.

To prevent abuse, the requirements pertaining to a complete replacement plan or a substantial replacement plan must be maintained for 5 years subsequent to the final distribution of assets under the terminated plan. Each person who acts as a plan sponsor or as a fiduciary at any time on or after the termination shall be jointly and severally liable for violation of this section.

Finally, the Act prohibits a named pension plan fiduciary from distributing pension assets to an employer if the employer fails to establish a new pension plan. In this situation, the greatest loss is experienced by pension plan participants. Public policy should not permit employers to contribute funds tax-free for the purpose of providing pension benefits and then recover those funds if the employer decides to abandon its pension plan. The funds set aside for future benefits should be used to protect the retirement needs of workers and retirees.

Therefore, under the Act, if a complete or substantial replacement plan is not established upon the termination of a defined benefit pension plan, before the distribution of assets from the terminated plan, a named plan fiduciary shall allocate plan assets as follows:

(1) to all participants, an amount equal to 135% of the projected benefit liabilities of the plan for such participant;

(2) to retired participants and terminated vested participants, an amount equal to the excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index since the date of termination over the actual percentage increase in benefits since such date; and

(3) the remainder to all participants in category (1) on a pro rata basis.

Assets shall be allocated within each category in the order listed and on a pro rata basis. The funds allocated to participants who are not yet retired must be transferred to another qualified retirement arrangement. A named fiduciary shall take such actions as are necessary to ensure that any distribution to a participant under this Act is in the form of a direct transfer to an individual retirement plan.

Chapter 2—Transfer of Pension Assets to Retiree Health Accounts

Currently, both ERISA and the Internal Revenue Code prohibit the use of pension plan assets for any purpose other than to provide retirement income to plan participants. To the extent that the Internal Revenue Code is amended to permit limited transfers of pension assets to certain retiree health benefit accounts, the Committee proposes to amend ERISA provided three requirements are met. First, the pension plan must be adequately protected. No transfer of assets may be allowed to jeopardize the funding of the pension plan or the pension benefits promised to participants. Second, certain minimum standards must be applied to the retiree health benefit plan to assure that participants are adequately protected. There currently are no standards for the provision of these benefits. Third, amendments to permit employer access to pension assets from ongoing pension plans must also protect workers and retirees upon plan termination. The Committee believes that amendments to ERISA must comprehensively address the needs of both workers and employers with respect to the use of pension plan assets.

The Act amends title I of ERISA to permit the qualified transfer of excess pension assets to a retiree health benefits account established and maintained under section 401(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. Assets transferred may be used only to provide benefits to participants and beneficiaries in the pension plan. Excess pension assets are those assets in excess of 150% of the benefit liabilities of the plan at the time of the transfer. The amount transferred may not exceed the present value of the retiree health benefits that are currently accrued. In order for a transfer to be qualified, (1) the pension plan participants must be vested; (2) any assets transferred may be used only to provide retiree health benefits (any excess must be returned to the pension plan); (3) the retiree health plan may not be significantly reduced to increase the cost of health benefits to retirees; and (4) the health benefits may not be provided on a basis which discriminates in favor of highly compensated employees. The pension plan administrator must provide 60 days notice of the transfer to the Secretary of Labor and to each participant and beneficiary. The notice must state the amount of excess pension assets in the plan, the amount to be transferred, and the amount of retiree health benefit liabilities to be funded with the pension assets.

Additional review of these issues is imperative. Accordingly, the Secretary of Labor is directed to conduct a study of the need for additional standards relating to ongoing transfers of pension plan assets and of the use of pension plan assets to protect the needs of workers and retirees.

Chapter 3—Civil Penalties

This chapter is an integral element of the Committee's budget reconciliation package, both from a policy standpoint as well as from a budget standpoint. The policy justifications for the changes in civil penalties are discussed in detail below. As a budgetary matter, the Committee on Joint Taxation has indicated that Chapter 1 of the Committee's budget reconciliation recommendation will result in reduced revenues to the federal treasury in fiscal year 1990 and thereafter. According to Congressional Budget Office estimates, however, the increased civil penalties in this chapter more than offset any reduced revenues from Chapter 1. In addition, the civil penalties amended in this chapter are solely within the jurisdiction of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and do not affect the jurisdiction of any other committee.

MSHA Penalties

The Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 820(a)) provides for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 against an operator for each violation of a mandatory health or safety standard or other violation of the Act. According to the Department of Labor, civil penalties were first assessed by the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) under the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. The Department has indicated that there has been no increase in the $10,000 maximum civil penalty since 1969.

While the statutory maximum has remained unchanged for two decades, the cost of living (as measured by the consumer price index) has increased by over 300 per cent. Inflation has decimated the deterrent effect of this penalty. In real terms, the current mine safety civil penalty ceiling is now less than $3,100. Therefore, to restore the civil penalty ceiling to its original level, the Committee has agreed to triple the maximum penalty from $10,000 to $30,000.

OSHA Penalties

The Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (29 U.S.C. 666) authorizes a number of civil penalties: fines up to $10,000 for each willful or repeated violation of the Act; fines up to $1,000 for each serious or other-than-serious violation; fines up to $1,000 for each violation of the posting requirements; and fines up to $1,000 per day beyond a stated abatement date for failure to correct a violation. The maximum civil penalties under the OSH Act have never been increased. Like the civil penalties for mine safety violations, OSH Act civil penalties, in real dollar terms, have been reduced dramatically by inflation. A tripling of the OSH Act maximum civil penalties is necessary just to keep pace with inflation.

Merely returning OSH Act civil penalties to their original 1970-level, however, will not correct the woefully inadequate enforcement history of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA). Last year, this Committee held extensive oversight hearings of OSHA. One major conclusion from those hearings is that OSHA has not lived up to its stated purpose: to "assure so far as possible every working man and woman in the Nation safe and healthful working conditions." The penalties assessed simply are not large enough to force employers to comply with the law. For example, in fiscal year 1988, the average fine for construction accidents involving one or more fatalities and one or more serious or willful violations was less than $1,500.

Therefore, to provide for civil penalties with "real teeth", the Committee has increased the existing maximum penalty levels by five times. Under the Committee's approach, the maximum allowable penalties will be: $50,000 for each willful or repeated violation; $5,000 for each serious or other-than-serious violation; $5,000 for each violation of the posting requirements; and $5,000 per each day beyond a stated abatement date for failure to correct a violation.

These amounts are discretionary ceilings. In practice, most fines imposed are a mere fraction of the maximum penalty. For example, in the Film Recovery case decided several years ago, workplace conditions were so egregious that a corporate executive was convicted of murder in the death of a worker, but the civil penalty imposed by OSHA was a mere $2,400. In order to ensure that violators are in fact fined at an effective level, the Committee has adopted mandatory minimum penalties for certain OSH Act violations. Mandatory minimum penalties are relatively common in federal law. The President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency, in a 1988 study of federal civil money penalties, listed several dozen statutory provisions containing mandatory minimum penalties. For exampe, the civil penalty for smuggling merchandise by airplane in violation of the customs laws, is twice the value of the merchandise, "but not less than $10,000." 19 U.S.C. 1590(c).

The new mandatory OSH Act minimum penalties are scaled to reflect the nature of the violation—higher penalties for more egregious offenses. The mandatory minimums are: $5,000 for a willful violation; $1,000 for a repeated violation; $500 for a serious violation and $100 for an other-than-serious violation. These mandatory minimum penalties are penalty floors and they are not intended to become penalty ceilings. The Committee expects OSHA to issue fines well above these mandatory minimum levels when the violation warrants such a penalty.

ERISA Penalties

Under ERISA, the Secretary of Labor has discretionary authority to assess civil penalties in cases where ERISA has been violated through either: (1) a plan administrator's failure or refusal to file an annual report; or (2) a transaction prohibited by ERISA engaged in by a party in interest (see ERISA sections 502(c)(2) and 502(i)). Such penalties have rarely been assessed. Recent regulations proposed by the Department of Labor concerning violations of section 502(c)(2) indicate that in the future the Secretary of Labor intends to take a more aggressive role in the issuance of its civil penalty authority.

Since the enactment of ERISA, there has been continual criticism of the Department's ability to protect the pension and welfare benefits promised to workers and guaranteed under ERISA. The Department has broad authority to monitor employee benefit plans and deter violations of the law. The Department's primary source of information about employee benefit plans derives from the annual report required to be filed by plans under ERISA. According to the Department, almost 25% of the annual reports expected to be filed are either not filed or deficient in some respect. Proper filing of these annual reports is crucial to the Department's enforcement ability.

In fact, the most recent report of the Department of Labor's Inspector General was especially critical of the information provided by these reports. The Inspector General concluded that the inadequacy of the information collected and lack of resources seriously hampered the Department's ability to protect pension plan participants. Although the Department oversees approximately 5.5 million employee benefit plans, the Department only has the resources to audit less than 3000 reports each year. Fiduciary violations are found in one-fourth of the plans audited. Employee benefit plans currently contain $2 trillion in assets. Without the ability to audit these plans properly, enforcement to assure the benefits promised to workers is nearly impossible. For these, reasons, it has become apparent that the Department must use its enforcement powers more vigorously to make the protections of ERISA meaningful.

The provisions adopted by the Committee strengthen the Department's ability to enforce and deter violations of ERISA through changes in the assessment of civil penalties for violations of the law. First, any failure or refusal to file an annual report will be assessed a mandatory $200 civil penalty. If the violation is not remedied within 90 days, the Secretary retains its current authority to assess a penalty of up to $1,000 a day for noncompliance. The Secretary may waive or reduce the penalty if the violation is found to have been the result of an action or omission taken in good faith. Second, in those cases where the Department has found a violation of ERISA which has resulted in a loss of assets to the plan, a mandatory civil penalty of 20% of the assets restored to the plan is imposed. Such violations include embezzlement of plan funds, self-dealing, conflicts of interest, failure to act for the exclusive benefit of plan participants, failure to diversify investments, and failure to comply with plan documents. Under current law, the Secretary has the authority to assess a civil penalty based upon the total amount of the transaction involved in the violation. The change adopted by the Committee limits the amount of the penalty to a percentage of the amount of the assets restored to the plan. This change will assure that the penalty reflects the loss to the participants of the plan. More effective use of the Secretary's civil penalty authority will strengthen the benefits provided under private pension system and reduce the risk to the federal government due to plan asset abuse.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 8001. Short title.

Entitles this Act the Employee Pension Protection Act of 1989.

Section 8002. Clarification of general rules governing fiduciary standards applicable to plan assets of terminated plans.

Clarifies that, except as provided in this Act, a pension plan fiduciary must hold plan assets for the exclusive purposes of providing benefits to participants and their beneficiaries and must discharge his or her duties solely in the interests of participants and beneficiaries with respect to the plan assets of terminated plans.

Section 8003. Fiduciary standards of title I relating to employer reversions.

Redesignates section 414 of ERISA as section 415 and creates a new section 414 entitled "Employer Reversions Upon Plan Termination".

Under section 414(a), an employer may receive a distribution of plan assets remaining in the final distribution of assets in accordance with the terms of the plan if:

(1) such distribution occurs after the satisfaction of all benefit liabilities and employee contributions,

(2) there is established and maintained a complete replacement plan or a substantial replacement plan, and

(3) each defined benefit plan maintained by the employer or a member of the employer's controlled group has assets sufficient to pay all liabilities under the plan.

Under section 414(b), a complete replacement plan is defined as a single-employer defined benefit plan which meets the following requirements:

(1) the current value of the assets of the plan is at least 125% of the projected benefit liabilities of the terminated plan;

(2) participants and beneficiaries under the terminated plan retain the same status as participants or beneficiaries;

(3)(A) each participant's benefits are equivalent in amount and form to his or her benefits under the terminated plan and (B) the benefits of pay status and terminated vested participants are increased by the excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index over the percentage increase in such benefits under the terminated plan;

(4) the rate of benefit accrual is equal to or greater than the rate of accrual under the terminated plan;

(5) participants are credited with amounts of past service credit at least equal to the amount credited under the terminated plan; and

(6) all benefits remain unforfeitable.

Under section 414(c), a substantial replacement plan is defined as a single employer plan, either defined benefit or defined contribution, which meets the following requirements:

(1) the current value of the assets of the plan or in the individual accounts of each participant is at least 135% of the projected benefit liabilities of the terminated plan;

(2) all participants and beneficiaries under the terminated plan retain the same status as participants or beneficiaries;

(3) participants are each credited with an amount of past service at least equal to the amount credited under the terminated plan;

(4) the benefits of participants remain nonforfeitable;

(5) the rate of benefit accrual is at least (A) for defined benefit plans, 2% times the participant's number of years of service during the period of consecutive years, up to 5, of the participant's greatest aggregate compensation, or (B) for defined contribution plans, 3% of each participant's compensation; and

(6) the benefits of all pay status and terminated vested participants is increased by the excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index over the percentage increase in such benefits.

Under section 414(d), the requirements pertaining to a complete replacement plan or a substantial replacement plan must be maintained for 5 years subsequent to the final distribution of assets under the terminated plan. Each person who acts as a plan sponsor or as a fiduciary at any time on or after the termination shall be jointly and severally liable for violation of this section.

Under section 414(e), the Secretary of Labor shall issue regulations under which the requirements of section 414(b) or (c) are met by the establishment of two or more plans if each participant under the terminated plan receives identical treatment to that which they would have received under a single complete or substantial replacement plan.

Under section 414(f), the provisions of this section are applicable to the extent in compliance with sections 401(a)(4) and 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Under section 414(g), certain terms are defined:

(1) projected benefit liabilities is the actuarial present value of benefit liabilities under title IV of ERISA including an assumption for increases in future compensation levels at a rate equal to 5% a year.

(2) a terminated vested participant is a participant who has a nonforfeitable right to benefits under the terminated plan and who terminated during the period beginning 3 years before the termination.

Section 8004. Fiduciary duties relating to allocation and distribution of plan assets to participants and beneficiaries upon plan termination in the absence of a complete or substantial replacement plan.

If a complete or substantial replacement plan is not established upon the termination of a defined benefit pension plan, before the distribution of assets from the terminated plan, a named plan fiduciary shall allocate plan assets as follows:

(1) to all participants an amount equal to 135% of the projected benefit liabilities of the plan to such participant;

(2) to pay status participants and terminated vested participants an amount equal to the excess of the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index since the date of termination over the actual percentage increase in benefits since such date; and

(3) to all participants in category (1) on a pro rata basis.

Assets shall be allocated within each category in the order listed and on a pro rata basis. The provisions of this section are applicable to the extent in compliance with sections 404(a)(4) and 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Section 8005. Fiduciary duties relating to direct trustee-to-trustee transfer of plan assets to individual retirement accounts or annuities upon plan termination.

A named fiduciary shall take such actions as are necessary to ensure that any distribution to a participant under this Act is in the form of a direct transfer to an individual retirement plan.

Section 8006. Study by Comptroller General of Small Employer Plan Terminations.

The Comptroller General shall study the extent to which employers with less than 25 employees terminate defined benefit pension plans with surplus assets and the effect of the Act on small employers.

Section 8007. Qualifying Employer Security to Include Interest in Publicly Traded Partnership.

Section 407(d) of ERISA is amended to include certain publicly traded partnerships (defined in section 7704(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) in the definition of a qualifying employer security.

Section 8008. Effective date.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply in the case of any termination under title IV of ERISA if the date of the final distribution of assets is on or after January 1, 1989.

Section 8011. Transfer of Excess Pension Assets to Retiree Health Accounts.

Section 403 of ERISA is amended to permit certain "qualified transfers" of excess pension assets to a retiree health benefits account established and maintained under section 401(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

A qualified transfer means any transfer of excess pension assets where (1) any assets transferred shall only be used to pay for retiree health benefits, (2) benefits may not be significantly reduced after the transfer, (3) all participants in the plan immediately before the transfer have a nonforfeitable right to retirement benefits after the transfer, and (4) benefits are not provided on a basis which is discriminatory in favor of highly compensated employees. Excess pension assets means the value of the plan's assets in excess of over 150% of the benefit liabilities of the plan.

Not later than 60 days before a qualified transfer, the administrator of the plan shall notify the Secretary of Labor and each participant and beneficiary in the pension plan of the transfer. The notice shall include information with respect to the amount of excess pension assets, the portion to be transferred, and the amount of health benefit liabilities to be funded with the assets transferred.

The Secretary of Labor shall study the need for additional standards relating to transfers of excess pension assets to health accounts.

The amendments made by this section shall generally apply 6 months after the date of the issuance of regulations necessary to carry out the requirements of this section.

Section 8021. Occupational Safety and Health.

Section 17 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 is amended as follows:

(1) in subsection (a), by striking "$10,000 for each violation" and inserting "$50,000 for each violation, but not less than $5,000 for each willful violation and not less than $1,000 for each repeated violation";

(2) in subsection (b), by striking "$1,000 for each such violation" and inserting "$5,000 for each such violation, but not less than $500 for each such violation";

(3) in subsection (c), by striking "$1,000 for each such violation" and inserting "$5,000 for each such violation, but not less than $100 for each such violation";

(4) in subsections (d) and (i), strike "$1,000" and insert "$5,000."

Section 8022. Employee Retirement Income Security.

Section 502(c)(2) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act is amended by striking "may" and inserting "$200".

Section 502(i) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting a mandatory civil penalty of 20 percent of the amount recovered by the Secretary.

Section 4006(a)(3)(A)(i) is amended by striking "$16" and inserting "$18.

Section 8023. Mine Safety and Health.

Section 110(a) of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act is amended by striking "$10,000" and inserting "$30,000".

CHAPTER 4—PENSION PORTABILITY

Under current law, pension plan asset accumulations are increasingly being distributed at job termination and "cashed-out" in the form of lump sum distributions of an employee's entire pension plan account. This is especially so in the case of defined contribution plans, although even defined benefit plans are increasingly taking on the form of cash accumulation accounts to be distributed upon termination of employment.

In spite of the fact that under certain circumstances such cash distributions are subject to an additional 10 percent income tax, the means under current law to encourage such sums to be saved and invested for retirement purposes has proved inadequate. Studies demonstrate that the vast majority of pension plan lump sum distributions are used for current consumption and that few reinvest such amounts for retirement in individual retirement accounts or annuities. Additionally, current law prohibits a substantial percentage of the distributions made each year by private and governmental pension plans from being transferred, or "rolled-over," into retirement savings arrangements—namely, that portion of a distribution representing the return of an employee's own plan contributions made on an after-tax basis.

Currently, pension plan sponsors wishing to facilitate pension portability do not have a direct pension portability vehicle to which they can transfer employee pension accumulations. Pension plans cannot directly transfer amounts to individual retirement arrangements, nor can employee contributions, upon distribution, be reinvested in a tax-free retirement arrangement. These restrictions severely frustrate the ability of mobile employees, among them teachers and engineers, to take advantage of so-called buy-back provisions under which pension plans permit the repurchase of prior service. In addition, many companies have not established pension plans for their workers, often because costs and complexity of pension plan administration.

Generally, the Pension Portability amendment is designed to improve long-term retirement income security and address issues of competitiveness and worker mobility by enhancing pension portability, pension coverage, national savings, and captial formation.

The amendment amends ERISA to: (1) permit salary reduction contributions to simplified employee pensions (SEP's). Any size employer who does not currently have a pension plan can contribute to a SEP on behalf of the employees and each employee can match the amount of the employer's contribution on a salary reduction basis. (2) allow a separate-line-of-business test for SEP's. Employers and employees may contribute to a SEP on a separate-line-of-business basis to the extent that employees under all other lines of business are also covered under a pension plan. (3) Clarifying and simplifying ERISA for pension plans using IRAs as a funding vehicle. The ERISA funding rules would be made inapplicable to SEP's and other IRA pension plans, and to eliminate the inconsistency of SEP rules under current law, ERISA would be conformed to vesting, participation, and distribution rules applicable to SEP's under the Internal Revenue Code.

Portability, national savings and capital formation would be enhanced because: (1) IRAs would serve as the portability vehicle for benefit transfers from qualified plans. Such benefit transfers could consist of both taxable and non-taxable benefits subject to appropriate reporting requirements. Separate accounting under an IRA of such amounts (including earnings thereon) would make such amounts eligible to be transferred back to a qualified plan. (2) Such IRA portability vehicles would be subject to the REA spousal protection rules as though they were defined contributions plans, not subject to the sec. 412 minimum funding rules (i.e., as if they were profit-sharing plans). By treating such a vehicle as a transferee plan under section 401(a)(11), the spouse or nonspouse beneficiary designation under a qualified plan would continue to be effective with respect to benefits so transferred. (3) Such IRA portability vehicles would have to make available at least the following core distribution forms (lump sum, joint and survivor and single life or quasi-annuity form, ten year installment period).

Transfer of nondeductible employee contributions to IRAs would permit all or a portion of an employee's benefit under a qualified plan (including the employee's investment in the contract) to be transferred directly upon the employee's separation from service (without current tax) from the plan to an IRA.

Qualified plans that allow for single sum distributions would have to provide employees who are eligible for a distribution under the plan with an option to transfer their benefits to an IRA in a direct trustee to trustee transfer. A plan would be allowed to provide this portability transfer option as the only option or as one of other distribution forms (including the Joint and Survivor form as under current law) and, if the plan provides, to permit employees to elect out of the portability transfer option and receive their benefits in cash. A plan must provide an explanation of the tax consequences of taking cash versus the tax-free portability transfer.

Portability of pensions in any amount would be encouraged by allowing plans, without obtaining employee or spousal consent, to transfer the pensions of terminating employees to portable pension plans. This is allowed, and the current $3,500 restriction would be eliminated, because the receiving IRA would be treated as a transferee plan that protects any spouse and provides a "core" set of distribution options.

Direct trustee-to-trustee transfers would always be allowable among IRAs, and as under current law, previous "rollovers" or transfers from qualified plans to IRAs, which are separately accounted for, may be transferred back to such qualified plans.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 8031. Short title.

Entitles this Act the Pension Portability Act of 1989.

Section 8032. Findings and declaration of policy.

Summarizes the findings of Congress that employees' pension monies are increasingly being cashed out and used for consumption purposes and that it is desirable to create and encourage the portable pension accounts for the purpose of reversing this trend by preserving use of pension monies for retirement purposes.

Section 8033. Definition of simplified employee pension plan for purposes of title I of ERISA.

Defines a simplified employee pension plan as a pension plan consisting of one or more employee pension plans within the meaning of Section 408(k)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Section 8034. Application of reporting and disclosure requirements to simplified employee pension plans.

Amends section 110 of ERISA to require the Secretary of Labor to issue regulations pertaining to simplified employee pension plans.

Section 8035. Application of participation and vesting requirements to simplified employee pension plans.

Amends section 202(a)(1)(B) of ERISA, redesignating clause (i) as clause (iii) and inserting a new clause (ii). This provides minimum participation requirements for simplified employee pension plans. No plan can condition participation by requiring that an employee have attained any age greater than 21 or have performed more than three years of service of the immediately preceding 5 years.

Section 203(a)(1) is also amended to state that a simplified employee pension plan meets minimum vesting standards, if an employer's rights in his accrued benefit derived from the employer's contributions are nonforfeitable.

Section 8036. Distribution requirements for simplified employee pension plans.

ERISA, part 2, subtitle B of title I is amended by redesignating 211 as 212, and by inserting a new section 211, entitled "Distributions of Accrued Benefit Under Simplified Employee Pension Plans".

Under section 211, each simplified employee pension plan or portable pension plan shall provide that:

(1) the distribution of the accrued benefit with respect to each participant will be only in a permitted retirement income form in accordance with this section,

(2) no distribution may be made without the consent of the participant (or the beneficiary in the case of the participant's death), and

(3) upon timely written application by the participant or beneficiary, in the case of the participant's death, the accrued benefit with respect to the participant will be distributed in accordance with such application.

Under section 211(b) distribution of the accrued benefit under a simplified employee pension plan is made in a permitted retirement income form if it is made:

(1) as a qualified joint and survivor annuity (within the meaning of section 205(d) or

(2) as any other joint life annuity (including a cash refund annuity) or

(3) as a single life annuity (including a refund annuity) or

(4) as any series of substantial equal periodic payments described in the Internal Revenue Code section 72(t)(2)(A)(iv).

Under section 211(c), in any case in which a plan participant elects a form of distribution under section 211(b), spousal consent is required, and the request needs to be made in writing.

Under section 211(d) the administrator of a simplified employee pension plan shall, immediately before making a distribution pursuant to this section, provide to the individual who is to be a recipient of the distribution, a written explanation of whether the distribution may or may not be subject to an Internal Revenue Code penalty and/or income tax, as well as the condition of the applicable permitted retirement income forms and participant and spousal rights.

ERISA section 3, paragraph 8 is also amended so that in the case of a simplified employee pension plan, the term beneficiary means the spouse of any other person designated by the participant according to the terms of the plan. Requirements are also added so that the spouse must consent in writing if another beneficiary is named.

Section 8037. Inapplicability of funding requirements to simplified employee pension plan.

Amends ERISA section 301(a) so that ERISA's funding rules do not apply to simplified employee pensions.

Section 8038. Effective date.

The amendments shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1992.

Section 8039. Utilization of simplified employee pensions as portable pension plans.

Amends ERISA section 3 to define a portable pension plan as a pension plan consisting of one or more simplified employee pension plans, individual retirement accounts or individual retirement annuities. These plans must meet the requirements of section 408(k) of the Internal Revenue Code with respect to amounts contributed by employers on behalf of employees.

Section 8040. Safe harbor for portable pension plans under ERISA, Title I.

ERISA, part 4, subtitle (B) of title I is amended by redesignating section 414 as section 415 and inserting a new section 414. Section 414(a) clarifies that portable pension plans should be treated as pension plans under ERISA section 404(c).

Section 8041. Requirements relating to distribution from pension plans constituting transfers to portable pension plans.

ERISA section 203(e) is amended by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively and inserting a new paragraph (2) provides that direct transfer to a portable pension plan from any other pension plan of the entire nonforfeitable benefit of a participant under such other pension shall not be treated as a distribution in violation of paragraph (1), to the extent such transfer meets the requirements of section 208(b).

A new section 2(B) provides that for purposes of subparagraph (2)(A), a transfer of less than the entire nonforfeitable benefit shall be treated as a transfer of the entire nonforfeitable benefit if the excluded portion of the benefit consists solely of distributed employee contributions which are not includible in gross income for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 by reason of the distribution.

A new section 3(A) is added stating that any distribution of the entire nonforfeitable benefit of a participant, beneficiary, or alternate payee as would be subject to additional tax under section 72(t) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, if such benefit were distributed other than in a direct transfer to a portable pension plan, shall be treated as a distribution in violation of paragraph (1) unless it is made as such a direct transfer to a portable pension plan, irrespective of any consent to a distribution made in any other manner.

Section 3(B) states that in any case in which a portable pension plan does not accept deposits of less than the dollar amount specified in section 408(k)(2)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the entire nonforfeitable benefit of each participant under any other pension plan is directly transferred to such portable pension plan.

Section 8042. Effective date.

In general the amendments apply with respect to taxable years under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 beginning after December 31, 1992.

In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and one or more employers ratified before the date of the enactment of this Act, the amendments made by the third section of this subchapter shall not apply to employees covered by any such agreement in plan years beginning before the earlier of January 1, 1993 or the date on which the last of such collective bargaining agreements terminates (determined without regard to any extension thereof on or after the date of the enactment of this Act), or January 1, 1994.

SUBTITLE B—EDUCATION

Chapter 1—Higher Education

Stafford Student/Medical Residents.—Most student borrowers in the Stafford Student Loan program (formerly the Guaranteed Student Loan Program or GSL) must begin to repay their loans six months after they leave school. One exception to this rule is for medical residents. In addition to the six months grace period that all borrowers are given, medical residents receive an additional deferment for the first two years of residency. During this period the interest on the loans is paid by the Treasury.

Medical students often borrow large sums of money to finance their education. For those graduating from medical school in 1988, the average indebtedness was almost $40,000. High debt levels can create repayment burdens for medical graduates—especially while they are in residency and receive modest stipends. In response, medical schools have begun to classify their residents as students for purpose of a student loan deferment. This practice now costs the taxpayers $10 million a year.

The Labor Committee proposes to close this loophole by including S. 1258, "The Medical Residents' Student Loan Amendments of 1989", in its reconciliation package. Under this provision, residents will no longer be permitted to receive deferments as "students". Residents will continue to receive the two year internship deferment and the six month grace period. The reconciliation package takes steps to ensure that medical residents will have access to forbearance. This means that no loan payments will be made, but the interest will be added on to the outstanding principle. More importantly, the provision requires that medical and dental residents receive forbearance upon demand. It further provides that they receive forbearance without being charged a fee and that the receipt of forbearance not be reported to credit bureaus. Taken together, the provisions included in the Labor Committee legislation will save the Treasury $10 million and will ensure that medical and dental residents with high debt levels will have access to forbearance.

The provision included here was designed with the assistance of the higher education associations. The Department of Education provided technical assistance in drafting this provision.

Emergency Power to Terminate Schools and Lenders in the Stafford Loan Program.—The Labor Committee's reconciliation proposals include a new section that would codify the Secretary of Education's authority to prevent fraud and abuse which threaten the integrity and viability of the student aid programs, by taking short-term emergency actions against participating institutions and lenders. These provisions explicitly authorize the Secretary to withhold funds from a postsecondary education institution or a lender, to withdraw the institution's authority to obligate federal student aid funds, and to stop the issuance of guarantee commitments on loans made by a lender for up to 60 days. The Secretary would have this authority in situations where he receives reliable information that an institution is violating program requirements and determines that immediate action is warranted to prevent misuse of federal funds and that the likelihood of the loss of federal funds outweighs the importance of following limitation, suspension, or termination procedures. This emergency action would terminate after 60 days unless limitation, suspension or termination procedures are initiated against the institution prior to the 30th day. In that event, the emergency action would last until the conclusion of those proceedings. This inherent authority to protect federal funds has been used by the Secretary many times over the years pursuant to regulations. However, a United States District Court recently ruled that the emergency action regulations are not authorized by the current statute. This amendment, by codifying this authority, will remove any doubt as to the Secretary's authority to take short-term emergency actions.

The Committee is particularly concerned, however, that affected institutions be provided due process in connection with these emergency actions. Therefore, the Committee has expressly provided that any institution subject to an emergency action shall have the opportunity, if the institution requests it, to show cause that the action is unwarranted as is the case under the current regulatory authority.

Supplemental Loans for Students.—The Committee is concerned about reports that borrowing under the SLS program by students in private career schools has increased sharply is the last two years. However, the Committee notes that there is little evidence to document the extent and nature of this problem. As a result, the Committee is reluctant to take precipitous action. We have have included a provision that will delay the disbursement of proceeds from a SLS loan for 30 days. The Committee intends to look more closely at borrowing patterns under the SLS program and will identify and, if necessary, recommend additional steps to address this issue.

DISCRETIONARY INFORMATION FEE PROHIBITED

The Committee firmly believes that in the vast majority of cases, information supplied by students in the Pell Grant Needs Analysis, Section 411, and the Congressional Methodology, Title IV part F, is sufficient to determine eligibility for federal student aid. In some cases, however, there may be extenuating or unique circumstances that would qualify an otherwise ineligible student. This is the reason for Section 479A, Discretion of Student Financial Aid Administrators, in the Higher Education Act 1965 as amended.

The Committee is of the mind that financial aid administrator discretion should be exercised on a case-by-case basis, and should not provide the possibility of a blanket exception to the provisions of either the Pell Grant Needs Analysis or the Congressional Methodology. It is very difficult for the Committee to understand why a school or a multiple data entry processor would have to collect general information for financial aid administrator discretion. It is equally concerned that any general exception to either Section 411 or Title IV Part F that might be made because the collection of such information would undermine current law.

Further, in no circumstances does the Committee believe that a student should be levied a fee for providing any information required to meet the provisions of financial aid administrator discretion as provided in Section 479A, Section 411F(12), and Section 480(d).

CHAPTER 2—BILINGUAL EDUCATION AWARDS

The Department of Education awarded bilingual education grants to the Franklin-Northwest Supervisory Union of Vermont in fiscal years 1984, 1985 and 1986. Although these grants were reviewed, approved and renewed by the Department, it has since sought repayment of the grants. The Department claims that, although the funds were spent on the instruction of children, they were not spent in accordance with the Bilingual Education Act. At no time has the Department suggested that there has been bad faith on the part of the supervisory union.

Franklin-Northwest Supervisory Union is located in a poor, rural area of the State of Vermont. The Committee believes that since there is no issue of bad faith and since the supervisory union is incapable of repaying the funds in dispute in any event, the interests of the Department and the children of the supervisory union will be best served by deeming the grants to have been spent in accordance with the provisions of the Bilingual Education Act.

SUBTITLE C—LOW INCOME TREATMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Low Income AIDS/HIV Treatment Assistance Program

Introduction—The "Low Income AIDS/HIV Treatment Assistance Program of 1989" provides a three year authorization for federal grants to the states to assist low income individuals with AIDS or HIV disease receive treatments which prolong life and prevent serious deterioration of health. The legislation is intended to stabilize the current federal program for AIDS/HIV treatment assistance (previously authorized for 12 months and 6 months) and requires States to match federal contributions to the program.

Background and Need—As of mid-1989, over 100,000 Americans have been diagnosed with AIDS and between 1 million and 1.5 million are estimated to be infected with HIV, the AIDS virus.

As a result of the nation's strong commitment to biomedical research in AIDS, there have been significant recent advances in the treatment of HIV infection itself as well as therapies to treat and prevent AIDS-associated infections and neoplasmas. Such advances, paired with progress in the medical diagnosis and clinical management of HIV disease, mean that AIDS is increasingly being viewed as a chronic, treatable illness.

The Committee believes that the availability of effective treatments for HIV and related illnesses is an essential component of the nation's urgent public health campaign to bring the AIDS epidemic under control. The most compelling incentive that society can provide for individuals to step forward for HIV testing and counseling in the availability of proven medical interventions which can extend life and reduce suffering.

In the committee's view, the overriding reason for providing federal assistance AIDS/HIV treatment is the transmissible nature of the illness. By providing incentives for infected individuals to seek medical treatment as early as possible, care providers and public health officials gain the opportunity to deliver education and counseling that has been demonstrated to dramatically reduce rates of transmission.

From a public health perspective, AIDS represent a unique threat to our citizens and to future generations. This illness was effectively nonexistent in our nation a decade ago and today directly jeopardizes over a million Americans. The committee believes that rationing access to treatment for AIDS and HIV disease based on the individual's inability to pay would ultimately result in more American unknowingly becoming infected with HIV, thus increasing the total cost of the epidemic.

The committee has also concluded that continuing access to AIDS/HIV treatments for low income persons will permit many HIV infected individuals to continue working and earning, thus eliminating their need to turn to public assistance programs for life saving assistance. In addition, access to early treatment can help reduce utilization of hospitals. Currently, the added demand for services created by the HIV epidemic is taxing many inner city health systems to the point of breakdown.

This program will provide life sustaining therapeutics to individuals who face both poverty and otherwise certain death. It is a compassionate and cost-effective measure designed to assist those persons in severe economic distress who are also combatting HIV.

Explanation of Legislation.—The program is to be administered by the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) and provides grants to the States based on the relative number of diagnosed AIDS cases in a State compared to all U.S. cases (as reported by the Centers for Disease Control.) No funds will be distributed to a State until it has expended any funds provided to it by HRSA under previous federal grants to fund treatments for AIDS and HIV disease.

The legislation requires that States which elect to participate in the program contribute one dollar of state funds for every federal dollar contributed to the program. (In States which elect not to participate, localities may apply to participate in the program.) The program is established for a period of three years; not less than $30,000,000 shall be provided in fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

It is the committee's intention that the States make every effort to ensure that persons served under the program are low income individuals who otherwise would have no means of obtaining life prolonging treatment. Each State must take reasonable steps to determine that individuals seeking treatment under the program are not eligible for reimbursement of treatment expenses by any other third party payor or benefits program.

In acting to provide continuity of funding for AIDS and HIV treatment assistance, the committee intends that the Secretary, acting thru HRSA, shall take steps to obtain complete information on future utilization of the program. In particular, the Committee expects to receive detailed information on the number of individuals served by the program, procedures for targeting assistance to low income persons, and economic and health characteristics of the individuals enrolled. HRSA shall also conduct an evaluation of the program's effectiveness in meeting the overall need for AIDS/HIV treatments in each participating State or locality. This evaluation should include measures of cost effectiveness and patient outcomes.

The Committee intends that the National Commission on AIDS shall review the information and evaluations prepared by HRSA and develop recommendations for an integrated and comprehensive program for delivery of essential treatment to people with AIDS and HIV disease.

SUBTITLE D: MCKINNEY TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

The technical amendment made to Section 739 of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act (42 USC 11449) will allow grant recipients to maintain and expend their funds in the fiscal year in which they are awarded and the two succeeding fiscal years. Under the current law, funds must be expended in the year awarded and the one succeeding fiscal year. This charge has bipartisan support on the Labor Committee and is supported by the Department of Labor and the Office of Management and Budget. This provision has no cost according to the Congressional Budget Office.

SUBTITLE E—HEALTH SERVICES RESEARCH

Summary of the Subtitle. As reported by the Committee, this Subtitle authorizes a new title IX of the Public Health Service (PHS) Act to establish a new Agency for Health Services Research to replace the National Center for Health Services Research (NCHSR) and the council on Health Care Technology currently authorized under sections 305 and 307 of the Act respectively. The purposes of the new Agency will be to enhance the quality, appropriateness, and effectiveness of health care services. The Agency will also enhance access to such services through the promotion of improvements in clinical practice and in the organization, financing, and delivering of health care services.

The Agency will be headed by an Administrator, who will conduct and support research, training, demonstration projects, evaluations, and the dissemination of information on health care services and the delivery of such services.

The Administrator will promote the development and application of appropriate health care technology assessments. The subtitle provides for the establishment of a clearinghouse for information on health care technologies and their assessment at the National Library of Medicine.

The Subtitle directs the Administrator to conduct and support research on the outcomes of health care services and procedures in order to identify the manner in which diseases and disorders can most effectively and appropriately be prevented, diagnosed, and treated.

The Subtitle authorizes the establishment of an Office for Quality and Effectiveness in Health Care. The Office will develop, monitor, and update practice guidelines that may be used to determine the most effective and appropriate prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of diseases and disorders; and standards of quality, performance measures, and medical review criteria for assessing or reviewing the provision of health care and assuring the quality of care.

The Subtitle authorizes the establishment of an Advisory Council for Health Services Research, Evaluation, and Policy to advise on activities to carry out the purpose of the Agency, and make recommendations on priorities for a national agenda and strategy for research, demonstrations, and evaluations with respect to health care; the development and applications of health care technology assessments.

The Subtitle authorizes appropriations of $75 million for FY 1990, $100 million for FY 1991, and $150 million for 1992 for the Agency for Health Services Research.

The Subtitle repeals existing authorities under section 305 and 309 of the PHS Act authorizing the NCHSR and the Council on Health Care Technology, respectively.

Section-by-section analysis—Section 8401 of the bill provides that the act may be cited as the "Health Services Research and Policy Act of 1989."

Section 8402 amends the PHS Act by Authorizing a new Title IX—AGENCY FOR HEALTH SERVICES RESEARCH and establishes the following subsections under this new title:

Section 901 of the PHS Act as established by this section defines the following terms as used in this new title; Administrator, Agency, Assistant Secretary, and Council.

Section 908 of the Act describes provisions with respect to development, collection, and dissemination of data described in section 902(b), the Administrator shall, to assure the utility of such data, establish guidelines for uniform methods of developing and collecting such data. Such guidelines shall include specifications for the development and collection of data concerning the outcomes of health care services and procedures.

Section 909 of the Act provides additional provisions with respect to grants and contracts. Section 909(a) prohibits the administrator and the Assistant Secretary from providing any financial assistance grants, cooperative agreements, assurances, and information. Section 909(b) authorizes the Administrator or the Assistant Secretary, on the request of an applicant for assistance under this title, to provide supplies, equipment, and services in lieu of funds with a corresponding reduction in the amount of financial assistance provided. Of the amounts appropriated, at least 7 percent of the amount appropriated under the preceding sentence for any fiscal year or $5,000,000 whichever is less, shall be made available each year for activities directly undertaken through the Agency, and not less than $1 million each year for the liaison program referred in section 904(a)(4). Section 922(b) provides that, in addition to amounts made available under subsection (a) to conduct and support evaluations under this title, the Secretary shall, from amounts made available under section 2313, make available an additional amount equal to 7.5 percent of the amount available under section 2313 to conduct and support such evaluations.

The remaining sections of the Subtitle include general provisions. Section 8441(a) repeals section 305 of the PHS authorizing the National Center for Health Services Research and Health Care Technology Assessment. Section 8441(b) repeals section 309 of the PHS authorizing the Council on Health Care Technology.

Section 8442 of the Subtitle contains technical and conforming amendments to remove references to NCHSR and related authorities in the PHS Act. Subsection (a) amends section 304 of the Act to remove references to NCHSR and its duties and, in some cases, to change references to NCHSR to the new Agency for Health Services Research. Subsection (b) amends section 306 of the Act to provide funding for NCHS. Section 8442(c) amends section 307 of the Act to remove references to section 304, 305, and 309, and add reference to the new title X of the Act.

Section 8442(d) amends section 308 of the Act to change the section heading from "General Provisions Respecting Sections 304, 305, 306, 207, and 309, to "General Provisions Respecting Sections Effectiveness, Efficiency, and Quality of Health Services." Section 308(a) is amended to remove reference to sections 305 and 309 and to change a reference from NCHSR to the new Agency. Section 308(b)(1) is amended to remove references to sections 305 and 309. Subsection (b)(2) providing for peer review of grants or contracts under NCHSR exceeding $50,000 is amended to remove references to NCHSR and to provide for such peer review of grants or contracts under NCHS only. Subsections (c) and (d) of section 308 are amended to remove references to section 305 and 309. In addition paragraph (2) of subsection (d) is removed. Subsections (e) and (f) are amended to remove references to sections 305 and 309. Subsection (g)(1)(A) of section 308 is amended to change a requirement for publishing of results of research, demonstrations, and evaluations under sections 304 and 305 to section 306. Subsection (g)(1)(C) is stricken. Subsection (g)(2) is amended to remove references to sections 305 and 309. Subsection (h)(1) of section 308 is amended to strike "section 304, 305, 306, and 309" the first time it appears and insert in its place, "section 306"; and to strike the phrase the second time it appears and insert "any of such sections." Subsection (i) of section 308, authorizing appropriations for NCHSR, is stricken.

Section 8443 of the Subtitle includes transitional and savings provisions. Subsection (a) provides for the transfer of personnel and assets, property, contracts, liabilities, records, unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds connected with the functions vested in the Administrator for the Agency for Health Services under this Act for appropriate allocation. Unexpended funds transferred thus shall be used only for the purposes for which they were originally authorized and appropriated. Subsection (b) provides for the continuation in effect of all orders, rules, regulations, grants, contracts, certificates, licenses, privileges, and other determinations, actions, or official documents that have been issued, made, granted, or allowed to become effective in the performances of functions vested in the Administrator of the Agency under this Act.

Section 8444 provides that this Subtitle and the amendments made by it shall take effect on October 1, 1989, or on the date of enactment, whichever occurs first.

Committee Views—This subtitle repeals sections 305 and 309 of the PHS Act, and establishes a new title IX of the Act, which effectively replaces the National Center for Health Services Research and Health Care Technology Assessment with new agency, the Agency for Health Services Research. This agency maintains many of the functions of the former NCHSR, but also includes a broadening of the scope of the agency's research activities. The subtitle also requires the Assistant Secretary for Health to establish an office for the development of practice guidelines and sets up a national Advisory Council on Health Services Research, Evaluation, and Policy.

The Committee supports continued research, evaluation, and training into the organization, financing, utilization, and quality of health services. The Committee believes, however, that the overall impact of health services research on national health policy and medical practice has been limited by the lack of prominence and visibility given to those government entities that are engaged in such research. The establishment of a new Agency for Health Services Research will evaluate health services research to a position of stature equal to the other agency activities in the PHS.

The establishment of practice guidelines is an important component of the government's efforts to improve the quality of health care that we purchase as individuals and as a society. The committee believes that the manner in which these guidelines are established is of particular concern. The Committee believes that it is important that such guidelines be developed by outside individuals who are expert in their field, using the best available information and judgement, with the government facilitating the process. Also, it is placed within the Public Health Service, although in an office separate from health services research activities.

To guarantee that health services research will continue to provide critical information about our health care system, it is necessary to provide training opportunities in health services research at the pre- and post-doctoral levels. It is the Committee's intent that such training opportunities be provided throughout the authorization period through the individual and institutional National Research Service Award (NRSA) grants. The committee notes that dramatic changes have occurred in the organization, financing, and delivery of dental care as well as in population demographic, and dental disease rates. Because understanding these changes and their impact on health care is vital to maintaining high quality care while improving the cost-effectiveness and accessibility to our nation's oral health care delivery system, the Committee directs that at least one institutional NRSA award have a dental focus.

SUBTITLE F—MENTAL HEALTH PLANNING GRANTS

This provision extends section 1924 of the Public Health Act, which provides for grants to States to assist in development of the state comprehensive mental health service plans required under Section 1925. Section 1925 requires states to plan and implement a comprehensive system of community-based care for the chronically mentally ill or suffer a financial penalty in the form of loss of some block grant funds. Such a system of community-based care for the mentally ill is long overdue; the failure to develop such a system in most states and communities has contributed to homelessness, excessive rates of institutionalization, inhumane living conditions and hopelessness among the mentally ill, and heartbreak for their families.

While the requirement to establish such a system of care continues whether or not grants are made under section 1924, it is clear that the grant money dispensed so far has been extremely important in helping states to develop good plans. With the plans now entering the crucial implementation phase, it would be foolish to fail to provide modest extra resources to help states revise and implement their programs.

U.S. CONGRESS,

Authorization Total:
Authorization Level	145	105	150
Estimated Outlays	97	80	117	85	19

[1] Less than $500,000.

The spending effects of this bill fall in Functions 500, 550, 600, and 800.

Basis of Direct Spending Estimates:

Stafford Student Loan Program. This bill would explicitly prohibit medical schools from classifying medical residents as students. As a result, any medical resident who had been classified as a student would no longer be eligible for in-school interest subsidies, although such resident still would be eligible for interest subsidies under a maximum two-year deferment provision. It is not known how many medical residents this would affect, but based on discussions with several people knowledgeable about the loans of medical residents, classifying residents as students has been a recent and growing phenomenon. CBO assumes that approximately 5,000 residents would be affected. Because the average residency is 3.6 years and the current deferment is for a maximum of two years, federal interest subsidy outlays would decline by an estimated $10 million in 1990 and $20 million in 1994.

This bill would provide that cash disbursements of loans to first-year first-time undergraduate students in the Supplemental Loans to Students program be made 30 days after the beginning of classes. This change is assumed to be effective October 1, 1989 and is estimated to have negligible impact on federal costs in 1990 and lower costs by $3 million in 1994.

This bill includes a provision to allow the Secretary of Education to take emergency actions to limit, suspend, or terminate any school from the Stafford Student Loan Program (SSLP) when information is obtained that such an organization is in violation of the SSLP law and regulations. We cannot estimate any reductions of program costs as a result of this new authority because we do not know when and how the Secretary of Education would use this authority.

PBGC Premium Increase. Section 8022 in chapter 3 of this bill would increase the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation (PBGC) premium by $2 in fiscal year 1990. The premium rate would be raised from $16 per participant in a plan plus any additional premiums paid by underfunded plans to $18 per participant plus any additional premiums paid by underfunded plans.

In addition, in fiscal year 1990 the $2 PBGC premium increase would be credited to the general fund of the Treasury. At the same time, an amount equal to the additional premiums collected by the Treasury would be authorized to be appropriated to the PBGC fund. After fiscal year 1990, the $2 premium increase would automatically go to the PBGC fund.

Forgiveness of Certain Repayments. The bill would forgive $788,138 of disallowed Bilingual Education Act expenses owed to the Department of Education by the Franklin-Northwest Supervisory Union in Vermont.

Basis of Revenue Estimates: Employee Pension Protection Act. Chapter 1 of Subtitle A places additional restrictions on employer terminations of pension plans when those terminations would result in a reversion of excess plan assets to the employer. These restrictions, effective January 1, 1990, are expected to reduce the value of assets reverting to employers. A reduction in asset reversions will reduce revenue because reversions are subject to a 15 percent excise tax and to corporate income taxes. The projection of revenue losses was estimated by the Joint Committee on Taxation. The Congressional Budget Office concurs in that estimate.

Chapter 2 of Subtitle A would allow employers to transfer excess pension assets from pension plans to accounts that pay for retiree health benefits. Because the 15 percent excise tax on such transfers remains in place, no employers are expected to make such transfers. Therefore, the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Congressional Budget Office estimate that this provision would have no revenue effect.

ERISA Filing Penalty. Section 8022 in chapter 3 of this bill would require any pension plan that either fails to file or files a deficient annual report (5500 form) to pay an automatic $200 civil penalty. The Department of Labor estimates that 10% of the one million 5500 forms it receives are significantly late or deficient and would result in a penalty.

Title I ERISA Violations. This bill would impose a mandatory civil penalty for any violation of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) of 20% of the assets involved. Such violations include the failure to act solely in the interest of plan participants, conflicts of interest, failure to diversify investments, and failure to comply with plan documents. The Department of Labor has recovered over $100 million a year from ERISA violations in past years and expects recoveries to grow over the projection periods.

OSHA Civil Penalty. Section 8021 in chapter 3 of this bill increases the maximum allowable amounts and enacts mandatory minimum amounts for civil penalties levied by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA). Specifically, the bill (1) increases the allowable maximums of all current law civil penalties by a factor of five, and (2) enacts mandatory minimums of $5,000 for "willful" violations, $1,000 for "repeated" violations, $500 for "serious" violations, and $100 for "not serious" violations. This estimate is based on data on OSHA penalties assessed and collected and information from the OSHA staff and others. Assuming an effective date of October 1, 1989, CBO estimates the resulting revenue gains from this provision to be $65 million in fiscal year 1990, $165 million in fiscal year 1991, and $300 million by 1994.

MSHA Civil Penalty. Section 8023 in chapter 3 of this bill increases the maximum allowable civil penalties levied by the Mining Safety and Health Administration ((MSHA) by a factor of three. This provision is assumed to take effect on October 1, 1989. CBO estimates revenues will increase by $30 million per year in fiscal years 1990 through 1994. This estimate is based on historical data on MSHA penalties collected. This estimate should be viewed as the maximum potential revenue gain. If penalties are tripled, some violations may be deterred, and therefore, penalties collected might be somewhat lower. Because no information on the likely response to higher penalties is available, we are unable to quantify that effect in this estimate.

Basis of Authorization Estimates: This estimate assumes that all authorizations are fully appropriated at the beginning of each fiscal year. Outlays are estimated using spendout rates computed by CBO on the basis of recent program data. Authorization levels not specified in the bill were estimated by CBO.

PBGC Funding. This bill authorizes an amount equal to the $2 increase in the PBGC premium collected by the Treasury to go to the PBGC fund in fiscal year 1990.

Study of Indebtedness. The Department of Education is directed to conduct a study of the level of student loan indebtedness among graduate and professional students. The study is to be completed within a year and is estimated to have negligible budget costs.

Agency for Health Services Research and Policy. The bill would establish an Agency for Health Services Research and Policy. The main purpose of the agency would be to conduct and support research and to disseminate the resulting information on such issues as: the quality and effectiveness of health care services, outcomes of health care services, health care technologies, health care costs and productivity, and health care promotion. Authorization levels for all of the provisions are stated in the bill for fiscal years 1990–1992. Outlays are estimated using spendout rates computed by the CBO based on similar public health service program data.

State Comprehensive Mental Health Services Plan. This bill would authorize funds for development grants under the State Comprehensive Mental Health Service Plan. Authorization levels are stated for fiscal year 1990 and 1991.

Low Income AIDS/HIV Treatment Assistance Program. This bill would allocate $30 million in fiscal year 1990 and such sums as necessary in fiscal years 1991 and 1992 from the Public Health Emergency Fund to states for the treatment of low-income individuals suffering from Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS) or Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV). This bill allows monies in the Public Health Emergency Fund to be used for the AIDS/HIV treatment program; the legislation does not authorize any additional appropriations to the Fund. Therefore, this provision would not affect overall federal costs.

5. Estimated cost to State and local government: Only the Low-Income AIDS/HIV Treatment Assistance program would affect the budgets of state and local governments. The Secretary of Health and Human Services would require states receiving AIDS/HIV grants to contribute $1 of non-federal funds for every $1 of federal funds in each fiscal year. Currently, there are no funds in the Public Health Emergency Fund although the Fund is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary each year to maintain a balance of $30 million.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, July 24, 1989.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman,
Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Ranking Minority Member,
Committee on the Budget,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM AND PETE: Pursuant to section 5(b)(8) of the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1990 (H. Con. Res. 106), and the unanimous action of the Committee at a July 13 1989, meeting, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs is submitting to the Budget Committee the enclosed legislative and report language recommending budget savings. The reconciliation instructions contained in section 5(b)(8) of the budget resolution require this Committee to report changes in laws within this Committee's jurisdiction sufficient to reduce both budget authority and outlays for veterans' programs by $496 million in budget authority and $666 million in outlays in fiscal year 1990.

In order to satisfy these requirements, our Committee unanimously voted to recommend the enclosed legislation, which would (a) extend for one year, through fiscal year 1990, the current one-percent fee payable for Department of Veterans' Affairs (VA)-guaranteed and VA vendee loans and 0.5-percent fee on assumptions of VA-guaranteed loans, and (b) postpone for one year, through fiscal year 1990, the effective date of restrictions in current law that otherwise will preclude VA from selling vendee loans without recourse.

We believe that these recommendations provide the most reasonable means for the Committee to satisfy our reconciliation instructions consistent with our commitment to reducing the national deficit while continuing to ensure fair and equitable treatment to our Nation's veterans.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman.

Ranking Minority Member.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 17, 1989.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for the provisions reducing spending in programs within the jurisdiction of the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, as ordered transmitted to the Senate Committee on the Budget by the Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs, July 13, 1989.

The estimates included in the attached report represent the 1990–1994 effects on the federal budget and on the budget resolution baseline of the Committee's legislative proposals. CBO understands that the staff of the Committee on the Budget will be responsible for interpreting how the savings contained in these legislative proposals measure against the budget resolution reconciliation instructions.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

Attachment.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

1. Bill title: Provisions reducing spending in programs within the jurisdiction of the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

2. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, July 13, 1989.

3. Bill purpose: To reduce expenditures authorized by the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs in response to budgetary requirements established for that committee by the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for fiscal year 1990.

4. Estimated cost to the Federal Government:

[By fiscal years, in millions of dollars]

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1984
Budget Authority	−665	−92	−57	−45	−36
Outlays	−665	−92	−57	−45	−36

The impact of this bill would fall in budget function 700.

Basis of Estimates: Section 9001(a). This subsection would extend through September 30, 1990, the authority of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to charge a fee of one percent of the mortgage principal on home loans to veterans that are guaranteed by the VA.

[By fiscal years, in millions of dollars]

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1984

This estimate was prepared from a model that interrelates the various obligation and collection activities of the veterans' home loan guaranty program. The model is based on historical relationships and projects these relationships using past trends and expectations of future economic activity.

The estimate assumes that fees would be paid on 227,100 guaranteed loans in 1990, with an average principal value of $78,400. Additional fees would be paid on direct loans made to purchasers of VA-owned real property that was acquired by the agency from foreclosures of guaranteed loans. Agency-financed sales of such property are estimated at $809 million in 1990.

Section 9001(b). This subsection would extend through September 30, 1990, the authority of the VA to sell loans without recourse to the government in the event of default.

[by fiscal years in millions of dollars]

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Budget Authority	−496	−82	−57	−45	−36
Outlays	−496	−82	−57	−45	−36

The savings from this subsection result from the fact that proceeds from the sale of loans without recourse presently are credited to the revolving fund as offsetting collections, while proceeds of recourse loan sales come into the revolving fund as an increase in the unobligated balance of the fund. Offsetting collections directly offset outlays and reduce the need for appropriations to finance fund deficiencies. An increase in the unobligated balance, on the other hand, will also reduce the fund's appropriation requirements, but it will have no effect on outlays. Further, budget authority in the form of borrowing authority is generated by recourse sales, because they are considered to be the equivalent of borrowing. Because of these accounting differences, the budget authority and outlays of the revolving fund would be reduced by the continuation of non-recourse loan sales, even though the net long-term return from non-recourse sales is less than the comparable return from recourse sales.

This estimate assumes that the VA would employ the same senior/subordinate sales structure in 1990 that has been used for the non-recourse sales in 1988 and 1989. The estimate further assumes that the return on the 1990 sales would be similar to the return experienced with the 1988 and 1989 sales. The outyear savings represent the income from the subordinate certificates that are retained by the VA as a portion of the proceeds from the senior/subordinate sales structure.

5. Estimated cost to State and local government: The Congressional Budget Office has determined that the budgets of state and local governments would not be significantly affected by the enactment of this bill.

6. Estimate comparison: None.

7. Previous CBO estimate: None.

8. Estimate prepared by: K.W. Shepherd.

9. Estimate approved by: C. G. Nuckols for James L. Blum, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

TITLE IX. VETERANS PROGRAMS

SEC. 9001. HOME LOAN GUARANTY PROGRAM.

(a) ONE-YEAR EXTENSION OF LOAN FEE.—Section 1829(c) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "September 30, 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1990".

(b) ONE-YEAR POSTPONEMENT OF RESTRICTIONS ON WITHOUT-RECOURSE VENDEE LOAN SALES.—Section 1833(a)(3) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "October 1, 1989" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1990".

TITLE IX—BUDGET RECONCILIATION RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Introduction

Section 5(b)(8) of the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1990 (H. Con. Res. 106) requires the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs to submit to the Senate Committee on the Budget recommendations for changes in laws within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs that in FY 1990 would reduce budget authority by $496 million and outlays by $666 million.

On July 13, 1989, the Committee met in open session and unanimously agreed to recommend legislative provisions that would (a) extend for one year, through FY 1990, the current one-percent fee for VA-guaranteed and vendee home loans and the current 0.5-percent fee on assumptions of VA-guaranteed loans and (b) postpone for one year, through FY 1990, the effective date of restrictions in current law that will otherwise preclude VA from selling vendee loans without recourse.

Discussion

Loan Fees

The fee for home loans guaranteed or made by VA was originally enacted as a 0.5-percent fee in section 406 of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1982 (Public Law 97-253) for the 3-year period ending September 30, 1985. Public Law 98-369 increased the fee to one percent, made the fee applicable to vendee loans, and extended the fee to September 30, 1987; Public Law 100-136 extended the fee through November 15, 1987; and Public Law 100-198 established a 0.5-percent fee on assumptions of VA-guaranteed loans and extended the fees through September 30, 1989.

The Committee historically has opposed unreasonably high fees on VA-guaranteed home loans. Unfortunately, falling real estate and financial markets have created significant financial problems for the loan program over the past few years. Extending current loan fees, while allowing veterans to finance the fees with the loan principal, has proven a modest and reasonable way to help keep the program solvent and continue this important benefit program for veterans.

Extending current loan fees through September 30, 1990, would save $169 million in both budget authority and outlays in FY 1990.

Vendee Loan Sales

The reconciliation legislation also would postpone for one year, through FY 1990, the effective date of the restriction in current law that otherwise will preclude VA from selling vendee loans without recourse beginning October 1, 1989.

Public Law 100-203, which codified the December 1987 Economic Summit agreement, previously postponed these without-recourse restrictions through September 30, 1989.

A vendee loan represents credit extended by VA to finance the sale of a home VA acquired as the result of a foreclosure on a VA-guaranteed loan. A sale of vendee loans "with recourse" means that VA agrees to take back the loan if the loan goes into default. A sale "without recourse" is a sale without this commitment.

Under a scorekeeping convention adopted by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) in 1987, and later by the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), the proceeds of vendee loan sales with recourse are not counted as receipts for budget scorekeeping purposes but the proceeds of without-recourse sales are counted as receipts. This scorekeeping result occurs even though, as noted in the July 17, 1989, CBO cost estimate for this provision, "the net long-term return from non-recourse sales is less than the comparable return from recourse sales."

Effective October 1, 1989, section 1833(a)(3)(C)(ii) of title 38 will prohibit VA from selling vendee loans without recourse unless the amount it receives is at least equal to the unpaid balance of the loan. That restriction effectively will preclude any without-recourse sales. If Congress postpones the effective date of this restriction through FY 1990, CBO assumes that VA—in accordance with OMB directions—will continue in FY 1990 to make all its vendee-loan sales without recourse. The projected proceeds of those sales constitute the expected savings of $496 million in both budget authority and outlays.

Cost Estimate

The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the following cost estimate for the Committee-recommended provisions.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I am prepared to yield now to the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] is recognized and he yields himself time on the bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I have heard someplace that one grows wise by making mistakes and profiting from them. But I judge that the Senate has not profited much from past mistakes because we are about to make our 10th annual mistake on the reconciliation bill.

Each year this process has gone a little further over the rails. I think it was the English author, Samuel Johnson, who said something to the effect that people who have great expectations are often disappointed, and that in fact the result is either a moral sentence or peevish expectation.

I do not have any anticipation that the result of considering this bill is going to be any moral sentence, but we are already hearing plenty of peevish expectations, and we scarcely started, and justifiably so. This bill, this 1,300 page bill, this bill which weighs 12 pounds 15 ounces, this bill which is a perversion of the legislative process which is, as one newspaper described it, "garbage," this bill, which the chairman of the committee has correctly and apparently described as "larded with provisions" that are by any reasonable standard unrelated to the reconciliation process, this bill which trashes the legislative process, corrupts the budget process, comes before us at the very last minute.

Here we are confronted with a 1,300 page bill. As far as I know, the first copy seen by the eyes of man was at about 11 o'clock this morning—at least that is when I first saw a copy of it. It comes before us and Senators are supposed to pretend they can legislate responsibly on this kind of legislation. In my view, Mr. President, that is impossible. I remind my colleagues of section 89 of the catastrophic health care bill, and how in the middle of the night we doubled Social Security, and many other similar legislative faux pas.

We are about to do the same thing again. I know quite a bit about what is in this bill. I do not know everything. I do not think there is a single Senator who has more than a general idea of what is contained in this legislation.

That is one reason—not the only one—we ought to go cautiously, we ought to trim this bill back, not to 300 or 400 or 500 pages, but to actually what is needed to meet reconciliation—not the letter of reconciliation, Mr. President, but the spirit of reconciliation, a tightly drawn package of legislative proposals designed to curtail spending, or if it be the will of the body, to raise taxes.

That is not my preference, but that certainly would be within the spirit and letter of reconciliation, in order to bring the Senate, the Congress, within the guidelines of the Gramm-Rudman target. I am not one of those who has a great horror of the sequester. I am inclined to think that probably sequestering is better than where we are going, unless we can markedly improve this bill.

Mr. President, I want to, at the outset, express my profound dismay and concern at the way this bill has been handled and about what is in the bill, about the parliamentary situation we find ourselves in, and really, about what it portends, not only for the 1990 budget, but what it says about the Senate, about where we are and where we are going.

Mr. President, I have already made the point that I think it is impossible as a practical matter for any Senator, let alone anybody else, to really know what is in this legislation in any detail—certainly not in sufficient detail to legislate thoughtfully and wisely. More than that, we have a parliamentary situation which is, at best, somewhat murky. I am going to talk about that in detail a little later.

I want to put it in this context: When you have the bill the contents of which are difficult, almost impossible for Senators to fully comprehend, being debated under very short time limits, with limitations on amendments and with points of order which have yet to be heard, and about which the outcome is not readily predicted, you get a situation in which nobody actually knows what is going on, in which the general public cannot tell what is going on, in which, as a practical matter, nobody is responsible, because it is not clear what the effect of any particular provision will be.

We have been there before, and I mentioned earlier some of the unwise and ultimately unpopular legislation that resulted. I hope, even at this later hour, even after a week or more of frustration, that our leaders are going to be able to hammer out some kind of an agreement under which we may drastically reduce the size and breathtaking scope of this piece of legislation.

The bill we have before us, I guess, at least is not as bad as the House bill which contained almost 2,000 pages of text, but we do have a 13-pound bill, over a thousand pages; and I guess I said earlier it was the 10th time. I believe it is only the ninth time we have considered the reconciliation bill. The first was taken up in 1977, after Congress approved a major expansion in the Farm Crop Support Program. The Senate Budget Committee, under the leadership of Chairman Muskie, added to the second budget resolution a reconciliation bill to trim crop support $700 million below the levels which were set in that farm bill. That was a rifle shot. It was a specific bill aimed at cutting a specific spending provision. It failed. The Senate rejected it.

We had reconciliation again in 1980, 1981, and twice in 1982, and again in 1984, and each time under both Democratic and Republican leadership, Congress broadened the reconciliation process. They were called omnibus bills and with the passage of time the bill has become not only an omnibus reconciliation bill, it is gradually becoming an omnibus legislative vehicle, because it is where you put everything that did not get passed that you are interested in during the year.

It is going to get worse and worse. I do not think this is the worst it is ever going to be, because if we do not do something now by amendment or point of order in some way, we are going to encourage this irresponsible process, and next year's bill, instead of being 1,000 pages, will be 1,500 pages, and instead of 13 pounds, it will be 20 pounds, going further and further out of control.

The issue, some will recall, came to a head during the Senate's consideration of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, following adoption of a major textile import provision which was said to promote economic recovery in the U.S. textile and apparel industry and its workers and to reduce unemployment.

Senator BYRD offered an amendment on October 24, 1985, to deal with what he correctly termed "Pandora's box," which has been opened to the abuses of the reconciliation process. That amendment was adopted on a unanimous vote of 96 Senators. At the time, the majority leader said, "That process was never meant to be used as it is being used. There are 122 items in the reconciliation bill that are extraneous."

Senator BYRD went on to say this:

> So if the budget reform is going to be preserved, and more importantly, if we are going to preserve the deliberative process of this U.S. Senate, which is the outstanding, unique element with respect to the U.S. Senate, action must be taken now to stop this abuse of the budget process.

My colleague, Senator BYRD, was right then. We are again at an intersection where we must intercede if we want to preserve this process. Many of us on both sides of the aisle believe this thing has gone so far off the rails, and we will be loath to vote for a reconciliation instruction in the budget which would call forth another reconciliation bill.

Senator BYRD was completely correct in complaining of 122 extraneous items in the bill of 1985. I call to your attention the fact that the bill we are now considering contains far more, perhaps upward of 300 extraneous provisions. This bill is crammed with extraneous provisions. The unfortunate fact, however, is that as our leaders and as Senators and staffers have conferred over the last several days, we have not been able to completely agree as to what is extraneous and what is not.

In the 1985 debate, Mr. BYRD went on to say that "Extraneous"—and I am quoting now—"is determined by whether or not the language contributes to reducing the deficit and balancing the budget. Otherwise, it is extraneous."

Mr. President, we adopted the Byrd rule and, subsequently on December 19, 1985, the Senate adopted Senate Resolution 286 regarding extraneous material in the House reconciliation bill. The problem, as we all know, is that a 20-hour time constraint exists on reconciliation. So we just do not have the time nor the opportunity to deal with a bill of vast legislative scope.

We do not have the time to deal with pension reform, environmental cleanup, the value of a new independent Social Security Administration, and a multitude of new agricultural marketing orders, to name just a few of the hundreds of extraneous items that are in this bill.

What about deficit reduction which supposedly is the main purpose of a reconciliation bill anyway? After all, that is our stated goal: To bring us somehow within the guidelines of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget target so as to head off sequester. We are not going to do that, Mr. President. We are not going to head off sequester. I am sure, as we are sitting here, there is no way this piece of legislation in any form will be signed into law in time to head off sequester. A sequester will in fact occur. That does not suggest the passage of this bill in vain, but it does tell us something about how far out of kilter the process is because we are doing now what we should have done weeks, if not months, ago.

Before I give the Senate a laundry list of some extraneous issues, I would like to take a moment to review sort of big numbers. We have heard this bill contains a total of $42 billion in deficit reduction over a 5-year period through 1994. How do we get there?

In the first place, this bill contains a 5-year total of spending cuts of just $8 billion. This bill also contains tax increases of $43 billion, that is right. Under this bill, taxes go up by $43 billion.

Let me cite a few issues which, in my view, should not be handled in a reconciliation bill. Yet each of them is in here—pension reforms, $2.6 billion; a subsidy for REA; a regulatory program for CFC; new agricultural marketing orders for crops from Vidalia onions to kiwi; independent Social Security Administration; financing services from the airport airways trust fund, added Medicare programs; creation of new agencies on health and services research; the cleanup of Lake Onondaga, NY.

Some of these may be meritorious. In fact, I happen to know of a number of extraneous provisions in this bill which in fact are meritorious. Some of them in fact are the substance and text of legislation which I have myself introduced, bills that I believe in, bills that on proper occasion I would be prepared to speak for, fight for, and vote for but which do not belong, in my view, in a reconciliation bill.

When we left last Saturday afternoon, many of us said a word of encouragement to our leaders who met late on Saturday and again on Sunday and I believe this week as well to try to somehow find an agreement as to how we could strip this bill down.

Mr. President, I am advised as of this moment that effort has not been successful. I believe that there are three lists floating around here. There is a list which is agreed I think by everybody to be extraneous items. There is a second group of provisions in this bill which seems to many of us to be clearly extraneous but which have not yet been agreed upon; perhaps they will be agreed upon.

Then there is another group of items and including some of the most offensive or maybe I should say most abusive provisions which probably are not technically extraneous which do not technically violate the Byrd rule though they may violate some other rules but which in fact constitute the perversion of the process which we have talked about earlier.

It appears to me that even at this late date we ought to focus attention on all three categories of items and get them all out of there. The mere fact that something may be technically within the scope of the reconciliation rule if it veers far afield, if it creates a new program, if it creates new spending, it seems to me that it should not be in this bill and we ought to have a broad enough gauge approach to this to reach an agreement to strip all such provisions, those that are offensive as well as those that we love, out of this legislation, that if we are really going to do this, perhaps this is one of those rare moments in the Senate when we just all agree to lay aside our pet project including, may I say to my friend from Tennessee, capital gains, IRA's, child care, physician payment reform, Social Security, and whatever, and just lay them all aside and say they are not reconciliation. Let us deal with reconciliation and then subsequently take up each and every one of these subjects on their own merit in an appropriate legislative vehicle.

Mr. President, some people, including I think my colleague from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, is concerned because capital gains has arisen as an issue. Capital gains is not in this bill. A motion to add it as a provision in the Finance Committee portion of the reconciliation bill was defeated on a tie vote. There is in the House version of the bill, a capital gains provision that was adopted.

But I want to say a word about this and I want to caution my colleagues that capital gains should not be the lightning rod for the consideration of the reconciliation bill. In my opinion, capital gain is a worthy and important issue and deserves to be debated and if we are going to have a lot of dogs and cats in this bill, we have a lot of provisions. While they may be technically nonextraneous but are extraneous in a commonsense understanding of that word, then we ought to take up capital gains and in fact capital gains probably is not technically violative of the rules. At least at some point we think it would be in order to take it up and, if we have not agreed to some way to strip the bill down to its bare essentials, then we will take it up and should under those circumstances. But the better practice it seems to me is to really cut this thing down to a narrowly drawn package of deficit reduction measures and leave everything out, everything out that is a pet project of someone else that does not fit that prescription.

I know that some people blame the President for the problems we are having because he has been fighting for capital gains and I think the budget summit conference was mentioned earlier by my colleague from Tennessee, and I want to add a word to that. I do not think one believes that a specific capital gains provision was agreed to as a part of the budget summit, but I do think the record is very, very clear that it was contemplated. Let me quote from the summit document talking about what would result from the summit conference agreement.

This is a quote from that document:

> The specific measures composing the governmental receipts figure will be determined through the regular legislative and constitutional process. Agreements reached between the administration and the congressional tax-writing committees on revenue legislation reconciled pursuant to this agreement will be advanced legislatively when supported by the President of the United States.

The fact of the matter is the President always had this in mind, always said it and had it in mind. He had it in mind when it went through the House of Representatives when it adopted a capital gains provision. He still has it in mind.

I do not know of any reason in my mind that the President of the United States ought to roll over and play dead and fail to advocate what he believes in. I say that at the same time emphasizing I personally believe in the agreement to take everything out of this bill we ought to take capital gains out, too, and put it someplace else. If we are going to leave in some people's pet items or worthy project, I do not know why the President should be treated any worse than anyone else.

The President has participated in the process. He believes in the capital gains provision. I believe in the capital gains provision. It is evident to me that a majority of Senators believe in a capital gains reduction. It may be that as many as 60 Senators believe in a capital gains reduction, and we may have to find that out, although at some time or another on this bill or another bill we are going to vote on it at a time when only 50 Senators would have to be for it to pass it. It is my belief from my interpretation of the rules that that could happen on this particular piece of legislation.

But I cannot agree with my colleague from Tennessee that somehow the President is out of line or off base fighting for what he believes in for a very popular and worthy tax change.

Mr. President, I also do not agree with the notion that somehow this is extraneous because somebody thinks it might increase the deficit. There is a healthy intellectual dispute as to whether or not reducing the capital gains would actually increase or reduce Federal revenues. I do not want to go into that at this point, but it is a well-known fact that on at least two occasions in the Nation's history, when we cut capital gains tax rates, the result has been an increase in resulting tax revenues.

Mr. President, I want to close by referring as I did at the outset to the parliamentary situation we find ourselves in. I guess it is the commonly held belief we are not going to be able to reach an agreement on what is extraneous and what is not. We are either going to have to vote on it or a point of order will be made or in some other way resolve it short of having an agreement between our two leaders. I hope that is not true.

I hope our leaders will take one more run at it and perhaps we can agree. If we do not, we are going to find ourselves in a situation in which some items will be stricken, but I worry many others which ought to be stricken will not be. If that happens, my guess is that there will be many of us who will just be constrained to vote against the bill even though some of the provisions left in may be things that we are interested in.

Maybe this is just an impractical idea, maybe it is too idealistic to think that this body at this time understanding the pressure we serve under, each of us could agree to set aside some of our pet projects, that we could agree that the process is more important than gaining a particular advantage on a particular bill. But I do not think so. In fact I have forgotten who it was who said this, but I earnestly believe it to be true that every noble idea is first seen to be impossible.

And so, if somebody wants to say either here or in the cloakrooms that it is impossible for us to reach such an agreement, then perhaps they are right. But I am not that cynical. I think it is possible for us to reach an agreement. I am prepared to support it and make some sacrifices, but I am also prepared to yell pretty loud if something comes up purporting to be stripping all of these extraneous provisions if in fact it is not.

With that word of explanation, I know there are others on the floor who have strong feelings about this bill. I am eager to hear the debate. I look forward to at least the possibility that we may be able to greatly improve this bill during the course of our consideration of it.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee such time as he may consume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

AMENDMENT NO. 992

(Purpose: To make certain modifications in the bill)

Mr. BENTSEN. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee.

Mr. President, one of the toughest problems we have is trying to keep our hospitals across the country solvent. And yet one of the responsibilities we were charged with in the Finance Committee was to see what reductions we could make in Medicare.

One of the proposals we adopted was to pay the hospitals in smaller cities by starting with the market basket, inflation for hospitals and increase the amount of money paid under Medicare to these hospitals by that market basket minus 2 percent.

The administration had proposals that would also cut back on the rapid increases we are seeing in Medicare.

I am about to propose an amendment, and I assure you it is not an extraneous amendment. It gets to the heart of much of what we have done in reconciliation in the way of hospital payments under Medicare. The amendment I am proposing is one that is cosponsored by my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, who is one of the outstanding authorities on the concerns of Medicare and Medicaid and hospitals; by the minority leader, the distinguished Senator from Kansas; by Senator ROCKEFELLER, who is a member of the Finance Committee, who heads the Subcommittee on Medicare and long-term care and is a Senator from West Virginia; and by Senator BAUCUS, from Montana, who has concerned himself with hospital payment issues for many years.

The amendment that I send to the desk revises three provisions that were agreed to by the Committee on Finance which affect Medicare payments to hospitals. First, the amendment would increase the update factor under the prospective payment system for hospitals in smaller urban areas; that is, urban areas of less than a million in population. The committee provision includes an update of those rates by the market basket increase minus 2 percent. This amendment would change the update to market basket minus 1.75 percent.

Now, if someone said, "A quarter of 1 percent, of what significance is that?" I would say when you are operating on the thin margins that many of the hospitals in our country are operating on today, that is significant. This will be a substantial help because, under that amendment, about 1,500 hospitals will receive a total of $40 million in additional Medicare payments in fiscal year 1990.

Now that the CBO estimates that we have received indicates that additional relief is possible, I believe this change is important because it helps hospitals in the smaller urban areas which receive the smallest payment increase under the committee's recommendations. With this amendment, the reconciliation bill will include differential payment increases for hospitals in large urban and small urban areas consistent with the differentials recommended by the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission.

Next, the amendment would reduce the cut in medicare payments to hospitals for inpatient and outpatient capital costs for fiscal year 1990.

Restoring the capital cut is especially important to rural hospitals. I would say to the distinguished President pro tempore that in his State of West Virginia rural hospitals are affected; and I would say the same to the manager for the Republicans of this bill, the distinguished Senator from Colorado, to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, and to my friend from Minnesota, and I would say the same as chairman of the Finance Committee, because in Texas we have had a great many rural hospitals close. So this helps in that regard.

The committee included a 20-percent reduction in capital payments for both inpatient and outpatient services. This amendment would lower this reduction to 18 percent, which is 7 percent lower than the 25 percent level recommended by the President.

I would have preferred to have been able to lower it to 15 percent. That would have been 10 percent less than the President's recommendation. I am hoping that we will be able to work something like that out in conference. I am advised by the Budget Committee that the changes included in this amendment are possible within the savings achieved by the Committee on Finance and the committee's title is still in full compliance with the reconciliation instructions.

Mr. President, I know that many of the Nation's hospitals are carefully assessing the effect of the Senate's reconciliation action on Medicare payments for fiscal year 1990. I am hoping that this amendment can be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], for himself, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. DOLE, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. KERRY, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. BOREN, and Mr. CHAFEE, proposes an amendment numbered 992.

On page 385, line 18, strike "2" and insert "1.75".

On page 387, line 14, strike "20" and insert "18".

On page 533, line 16, strike "20" and insert "18".

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that throughout the day other Members may sign on as cosponsors of this particular amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time on the amendment?

The controller of time is the mover of the amendment and the manager of the bill unless the manager agrees with the amendment, in which case the minority leader or his designee will control time.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, it is a bipartisan amendment. I ask unanimous consent that time be equally divided between both sides, Mr. President.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I will be glad to yield time to the Senator from Minnesota. I yield to the Senator as much time as he may need.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] is recognized for as much time as he may consume out of the time off his side on the amendment.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise in support of and as a cosponsor of the amemdment by my colleague from Texas, the chairman of the Finance Committee. I believe that the chairman of the Finance Committee has accurately stated the effect of the amendment, which is to provide for a payment of capital to all of the hospitals in this country under the Medicare payment system at 82 percent of the cost of their capital as opposed to current law which is 85 percent of their capital costs or the original language which had been in the reconciliation language coming from the Senate Finance Committee, which was 80 percent.

Mr. President, I do feel fairly strong about these capital reimbursement issues. They are not the largest part of what we pay in Medicare payments to America's doctors and hospitals. But they have been a contentious part of that payment system over some period of time.

The original proposal on the DRG system was to fold capital costs into the regular operating costs. We have never been able to find a comfortable way to do that and, as a result, the system has grown over the last several years of directly compensating for actual costs.

In the last 2 years, we have reduced from 100 percent to a lesser amount the total capital cost reimbursement.

The reason I sponsor this amendment, which will have the effect of changing the amount of payment from an 80-percent payment to an 82-percent payment, Mr. President, is because I really do hope my colleague, the chairman of the Finance Committee, who will certainly be the chairman at least of our side, if not of the reconciliation conference committee, will fight not just to hold the Senate language but will fight to hold the House language, if possible, in a conference with the House.

That does not seem to be the most appropriate suggestion to make to the chairman of the Finance Committee, who has come with the language we are amending, but we have had a great deal of discussion in the last week or so about the most appropriate way in which the payments for cost of capital might be appropriated as between rural hospitals and small urban hospitals and what we call disproportionate-share hospitals.

So my personal preference, Mr. President, is we not make any of these distinctions. We have the distinctions already on the direct reimbursement side for operating expenses and they cause us nothing but confusion. They are discriminatory. They were originally out there for some very good reasons, most of which either we have long since forgotten or they have been in one way or another lobbied against, as contrary to the best interests of some of the hospitals and the community involved.

The Senator from Texas has taken the lead in this session, along with our colleague, the Republican leader from Kansas, on getting rid of these so-called urban-rural distinctions in hospital reimbursement. And by the year 1996, I think, according to the proposal of the Senator, which is also contained in reconciliation, we hope to eliminate most of these artificial distinctions between urban and rural hospitals.

So it is for that reason I rise to state my concern for this amendment and my hope, when we get the conference, the Senate might be able to bend even more in the direction of the House because I do not think it is a good time to start drawing distinctions between different kinds of hospitals on the capital issue.

We both recognize the problems of the so-called disproportion share hospital: high Medicare patients; high populations of indigent persons; in many cases, at least, high severity index.

But using the capital reimbursement area as a way to help those kinds of hospitals, at least this Senator thinks, is inappropriate. We already make adequate provision for them in indirect teaching reimbursement. We make provision for them in the disproportionate share reimbursement. I, for one, am very chary about starting down the line of making special provisions in the area of capital.

So I strongly recommend to my colleagues they join as cosponsors of this amendment which I understand, and I trust, will be accepted by the managers on both sides.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in offering this amendment today with the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and other committee members.

This amendment addresses a very serious shortcoming with the Medicare provisions approved by the Finance Committee last week.

Let me say that for the most part, I am extremely satisfied with our Medicare provisions. We made great improvements for Medicare's treatment of rural hospitals.

However, we did fall short on two matters that are also very important to hospitals. One is Medicare payments to hospitals for capital expenses. The other is the inflation increase for small urban hospitals, of which there are four in my State.

This amendment addresses both of those issues. In my view our amendment does not go far enough to improve Medicare payments for the hospitals that will feel the effect of budget cuts. But we have made a good-faith effort to restore as much of the cuts as we can, consistent with responsible fiscal policy.

In the Finance Committee deliberations on Medicare hospital payments, I told the distinguished chairman of my serious concern about the effect of the cuts. I thank Senator BENTSEN for his support on this amendment.

I urge my colleagues to support our amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I do not know if anyone on this side is asking for further time. If the other side is prepared to yield back, I am prepared to yield back.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am ready to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time is yielded back. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment (No. 992) was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield such time to the Senator from Illinois as he may consume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] is recognized.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I want to speak in general on this process we are going through and what we are doing. But I want to take just a moment to commend the senior Senator from Texas and our colleague from Minnesota for their leadership on this hospital amendment.

Texas has lost 81 hospitals. Illinois has lost 32 hospitals in the last 9 years. It has been grim for a lot of communities.

I do not know about the situation in Texas, but in Illinois, the communities generally, that have lost hospitals are the communities that need them the most. I appreciate the leadership that both my colleagues are giving in this area.

Mr. President, I want to talk about where we are in this budget process and where I think we have to go. If we were to ask people in the State of Illinois or West Virginia or Colorado or Utah or Tennessee what is the fastest growing item in the budget, I think most people would say defense. The reality is the fastest growing item in this budget, by far, is interest. And what are we getting for it? Not one thing.

On of the little things we do now, when we list interest in the budget, it is "net interest" rather than "gross interest."

What is the difference? Well, we subtract the interest earned by the trust funds, particularly the Social Security trust fund, before we list interest. The real figure is the gross interest figure.

The gross interest figure for fiscal year 1980 was approximately $74.8 billion. The fiscal year that we have just come out of, we do not know the final figure yet, but the gross interest expenditure will be approximately $234 billion.

For this next fiscal year we accept the optimistic forecasts of OMB in this budget resolution. We assume we can sell bonds at an average of 5.5 percent this fiscal year.

I see my colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois, on the floor, the former State Treasurer of Illinois. He has a pretty good idea, as all of us do, whether we can sell bonds for 5.5 percent. We are living in a dream world if we think that. But that is the premise of this.

But even if we sell bonds at 5.5 percent, this fiscal year we will spend $263 billion on interest and the next fiscal year—the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is presiding here—next year unless something happens that I do not foresee, for the first time in the Nation's history, the No. 1 expenditure of the Federal Government will be interest.

We just cannot go on like this indefinitely. There are those who say, well, things seem to be going along fine. It is like us getting out on a lake where there is thick ice at one point and some water out there somewhere, and we are getting out on that ice and it is getting thinner and thinner. I cannot tell my colleagues where it is going to break, but I know it is going to break.

The reality is if the Simon family spends more money than we take in, and I go to the banker in Carbondale. IL, and I say I would like to borrow some money because we want to spend more money than we are taking in, and I have a good asset sheet, the banker may lend me that money. And he may do that a second year and a third year. But at some point a prudent banker is going to say to me: You better get your house in order and get things accommodated.

The international bankers at some point are going to say the same thing to us. I cannot tell when it is going to happen, but it is going to happen. When I attend town meetings in Illinois, one of the things that I am occasionally asked is why do we not get tougher on the Japanese; because they sense the competiton with Japan, the economic competition.

One of the reasons we do not get tougher is a very simple one, and it is not talked about much. But the reality is, Japan is our banker. It is pretty dificult to get tough on your banker. We have to get a hold of our financial situation, and we are fooling ourselves. At this point, there is a surplus of about $68 billion in Social Security funds. But that is a surplus in theory.

At some point, many of us in this Hall will want to retire. We would like to get a little Social Security income. At the turn of the century, those Social Security expenditures are going to go up. We ought to take the Social Security trust funds off the budget. It was a great mistake ever to put them on. And when I say "we," I mean the President, I mean Members of both parties. I think what we are doing is taking the easy way out, and we are basically ducking on this whole deficit problem. We just cannot continue it indefinitely. Even if we could, does it make sense to spend a higher and higher percentage of our tax dollar on interest rather than on goods and services? One may be a conservative; one may be a liberal; one may be a Republican or a Democrat; I think it does not make sense at all.

I just noted that my friend, the senior Senator from New York, walked onto the floor. He had a very interesting study made. It was one of the most significant studies. It ties in directly with what we are talking about. The question was asked: What if we took the Social Security trust funds off separately and then balanced the budget; what would happen in the next 5 to 10 years to interest rates in this country? As far as interest rates go right now, the prime rate is 10.5 percent. Do you know what the projection is? Interest rates in this country would drop down to a prime of approximately 3 percent. Can you imagine what that would do for housing construction, industrial expansion, and all kinds of things, if we did not continue just to duck this problem indefinitely? It is one of the most significant studies I have seen in my years in Congress, and I want to commend my colleague from New York for that study.

There is another reason we ought to get ahold of this. I generally vote with my friends in labor on things because philosophically I have a sense of kinship there, but it is something they have not paid attention to. They have opposed a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. The question is, Mr. President, who pays the taxes and who receives the taxes?

As I said, the fiscal year we are in right now, at a minimum, the gross interest expenditure for the Federal Government will be $263 billion. Who pays that? By and large, it is people of limited income. It is the people who are watching us in session right now. Who receives that income? By and large, it is those who are more fortunate among us, and not more fortunate just among us; increasingly those who are more fortunate in other countries. It is Robin Hood in reverse: Taking from people of limited income; giving to those who are more fortunate. The biggest welfare program in this Nation is not food stamps, it is not AFDC; it is interest payments. And that welfare program is one that takes from people of limited income and gives to the more fortunate.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will the Senator from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. SIMON. I always yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Would he be aware—I think he especially would be—that it now takes the taxes of every man and woman living west of the Mississippi River to pay the interest on the debt?

Mr. SIMON. The Senator from New York comes up with these little bits of information that I am not aware of. I was not aware of that. Again, it is a dramatic way of saying what is happening. Most people do not realize that a higher and higher percentage of their tax dollar is going for interest, and for those of us who favor meeting some of these national needs, we face a choice: Are we going to spend an increasing percentage of our tax dollars on interest, or do we get those interest payments down and start paying attention to education needs?

In the last 10 years, if you exclude the inflationary factor, the cost for people going to college in this country has risen 40 percent, and student aid has risen 3 percent. We just cannot keep that up indefinitely without hurting ourselves.

We know that when we have intensified preschool programs in disadvantaged areas, there is a dramatic change in the dropout rate, teenage pregnancy rate, and crime rate. It is not theory; we know it, but we are not doing anything about it because we say we do not have the resources to do anything about it.

What if we really got ahold of things, which we are not in this reconciliation package, and sent a message to the financial community, "We are going to get ahold of things," and interest rates started to drop? When you have a $2.8-trillion indebtedness, each 1 percent you reduce interest rates, you save $28 billion a year. So 1 percent would save more money than the Federal Government spends in total on education. If we exclude school lunches, we spend about $21 billion on education. We have massive health care needs that we ought to be paying attention to, and we are not. When I go to a town meeting or when I come across people like the woman who recently came with her son, and his arm was in a sling—he caught his arm in a cornpicker—they face $80,000 worth of hospital and medical bills. He had his arm sewn back on. That family is devastated. Can we as a nation do something about it? Of course, we can. We have the resources. What we lack is the courage and the will to do something about this deficit.

If we got ahold of it and reduced interest rates, that would be a tremendous help, also, just to the average citizen. The average young couple today who wants to buy a house just cannot do it. I was interviewed this afternoon on television and asked about the homeless in our country. Part of the answer is we are not building public housing as we once were. But another part of the answer is we have interest rates so high in terms of home mortgages that the average young couple today cannot afford to buy a new house so we do not expand the housing construction in this country, and, as population expands and housing construction does not, who gets the housing? Those of us who can afford it. Who gets squeezed out? Those who cannot afford it. They are the homeless on the streets of the wealthiest nation on the face of the Earth.

The prime rate in the United States today is 10.5 percent. The prime rate in West Germany and Japan today is roughly 3.5 percent. Can we do better? Of course, we can do better.

Finally, Mr. President, I think we need a different kind of a summit, and I know my colleague from Tennessee may differ with me on this because he has been abused some because of summits, and the President pro tempore, one of the most distinguished Senators ever to serve in this body, has been through his share of summits. We just had a summit meeting on education where the President met with the Governors. I think it would be appropriate, incidentally, if the President really wants to be the education President, for him to meet with the leaders in the House and the Senate who are interested in education for a different kind of a summit to get something done at the Federal level.

But what we really need is for the President of the United States to say we have to face this deficit problem as he, frankly, has not. And we need Members of the House and Senate who are courageous enough and willing enough to say we are going to risk some votes and popularity out there and face this problem and have a summit meeting, like we had on Social Security about 8 or 10 years ago, and really face this problem.

We can continue to duck and duck and duck, but we do it at the peril of our children and our grandchildren.

When I was first elected to the State legislature, Mr. President, I received a letter from a man in a small community called South Roxana, IL. He had 13 points to his letter. The first 12 were increased services he wanted from government and the 13th point was cut taxes.

We have adopted his program, and we just cannot continue.

Mr. President, if I may be immodest, I am going to become a grandfather for the first time in February, and I am looking forward to that. But I want to see that that grandchild has a bright future in this county, brighter than mine and brighter that yours, and that can be. But if we continue down this road of bigger and bigger deficits indefinitely, it will not be.

I just read an article today, the first sentence of which was, "The United States is the greatest economic power on the face of the Earth." Unless we change our habits, that sentence will change, and in the future at some point it will read, "The United States was the greatest economic power on the face of the Earth."

That decision is up to us. We need to show courage on both sides of the aisle. The President has to show courage. We have to be willing to risk popularity. I think it is great that the President has a 70-percent popularity rating, but you just cannot constantly run for reelection. You also have to lead. That is true for the President. It is true for us. I hope at some point we show the courage to really lead.

I yield my time to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. May I have some time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I yield such time as he may require to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] is recognized for such time as he may require.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Chair and I thank my distinguished colleague from Colorado.

Mr. President, I understand the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of our Budget Committee, would like to proceed and that he will shortly be making a motion, but before that occurs I would like to ask the distinguished Budget Committee chairman some questions just so we can understand some of the ramifications of what is going on, and then afterward I would like to propound some questions to the Chair if I could.

First of all, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee: The original deadline for all committees to report their pieces of reconciliation was really mid-July, is that correct?

Mr. SASSER. I would say to my friend from Utah, it is my understanding that the deadline was August 3, but he is within the ball park.

Mr. HATCH. But that was after extensions from the mid-July period?

Mr. SASSER. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. In other words, it is true that there were two extensions from that particular time?

Mr. SASSER. There was at least one extension.

Mr. HATCH. I believe there were two. And is it true that if there were two or one, whichever the case may be, such extension or extensions were granted by unanimous consent of the Senate?

Mr. SASSER. That is correct; they were granted by unanimous consent.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Tennessee, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, I know has a sincere interest in protecting the integrity of this budget process.

MR. SASSER. I do, indeed, I say to my friend from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I believe that. Let me ask what he understands the consequences to have been if the original deadline had not been extended? Does he agree with the answer given to a question put by the distinguished minority leader that committees may submit legislation for inclusion in the reconciliation bill irrespective of this deadline?

Mr. SASSER. I was distracted momentarily. Will the distinguished Senator repeat his question, please.

Mr. HATCH. I would just like to ask the Budget Committee chairman, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, what the consequences are if the original deadline had not been extended. And then I ask, does he agree with the answer given to a question put by the distinguished minority leader that committees may submit legislation for inclusion in the reconciliation bill irrespective of the deadline?

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from Utah that committees that do not submit their information pursuant to the reconciliation instructions on or before the deadline act at their peril. Those committees that file late do so at their risk. And the Budget Committee at its option, may vote out a reconciliation bill without the tardy committee's reconciliation list being included; go to the floor; and on a motion to recommit, any Senator may write the reconciliation results for the tardy committee that did not adhere to the deadline.

So my point is that committees that are tardy and do not subscribe to the deadline do so at their risk.

Mr. HATCH. If they submit their report or their materials after the deadline, then the Senator seems to be saying that any Senator can amend those submissions?

Mr. SASSER. What I am saying is that if the Budget Committee goes forward and reports out a reconciliation bill absent a committee meeting its specific reconciliation requirements—for example, if the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, on which the distinguished Senator from Utah has served so ably for so many years, did not comply with the deadline to meet the reconciliation instructions and if the Budget Committee chose to go ahead and report out a reconciliation bill, then in that case on a motion to recommit any Senator would be in a position of being able to, in essence, write the Committee on Labor and Human Resources reconciliation results for it, subject to the will of the committee.

In other words, what I am saying to my friend from Utah is that the tardy committee to some extent throws itself on the mercy of the Budget Committee and on the mercy of the entire body.

Mr. HATCH. This is a frustrating approach, it seems to me. As the distinguished Senator from Tennessee knows, the Labor Committee has failed to meet the deadlines that have been set even though it has submitted its own report in spite of the deadlines. Now we have experienced some rather sudden changes in the Senate rules in the space of just a few days.

For instance, when I learned that the Committee on Labor and Human Resources planned to remark up the reconciliation package we had acted on last August, we inquired of the Senate Parliamentarian if the committee could submit language after the August 4 deadline without unanimous consent. The answer was no.

Mr. SASSER. If I could say to my friend from Utah, the Labor Committee filed a reconciliation report with the Senate Budget Committee prior to August 3, which was the extended deadline. Subsequent thereto, the Labor Committee filed a modified reconciliation report with the Senate Budget Committee. The committee, acting on advice of counsel, took the position that since any Senator can modify his or her amendment prior to the Senate taking action on it, any committee has the right to modify or may modify their reconciliation report prior to the Budget Committee taking action on it.

Mr. HATCH. In other words, once the deadline is met, if the committee meets it, then the committee can amend its reconciliation work any time thereafter until the Budget Committee acts?

Mr. SASSER. Until the Budget Committee acts. That is my understanding.

Mr. HATCH. That has not been my understanding. After we inquired of the Senate Parliamentarian if the committees could submit after the August 4 deadline without unanimous consent, the Parliamentarian said no.

Only a few days later the minority leader put the same question to the Chair and after some deliberation the response was given that yes, committees could submit material for inclusion in the budget reconciliation bill. This whole sequence of events suggests there may be some selective interpretation of the rules that is going on right now.

I am gravely disappointed by this, Mr. President. The rules of the Senate are it seems to me, revered by every Member of this body and we depend upon them for order and equity.

When they can be seemingly changed overnight to suit some specific political need it shakes the whole foundation of our institution. What is the understanding of the Senator from Tennessee as to the purpose or purposes of the deadline set by the Budget Committee?

Mr. SASSER. The purpose of the deadline I think is self-explanatory. It simply is saying to the committees that you must report by the deadline. If the committee chooses to ignore that deadline, then they do so at their peril. If the Budget Committee chooses to go ahead and report a reconciliation bill absent the reconciliation report from the tardy committee, then the tardy committee may find the U.S. Senate as a whole or the Budget Committee itself actually writing the reconciliation report for the tardy committee and directing how that committee shall make the necessary savings. This, in essence deprives that committee of a substantial portion of its jurisdiction as a result of its failure to act. But I say to my friend from Utah that result only comes if the Budget Committee chooses to go forward and report.

Mr. HATCH. From what the distinguished Senator has said, it would seem to me there would be no real incentives other than the one he mentioned, that the Budget Committee might act ahead of them. They might be foreclosed. There would be no incentive for the committees to report on time. So the idea of the deadline is to permit the Budget Committee to accept the various components of the Budget Reconciliation Act, file a report, to have the legislation ready for timely consideration by the Senate so as to prevent the mandatory sequester order on October 15.

Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Tennessee for his answers. It seems to me, however, that this entire 1989 budget reconciliation process has become an unmitigated farce if this is the way the rule is going to be followed.

You can do just about anything you want to do in these committees regardless of the deadline as long as the Budget Committee does not act, which it usually does not, and it will not do. It would be crazy to do that. So deadlines mean nothing, budgetary deadlines mean nothing, Budget Committee deadlines mean nothing, and Senate deadlines and reconciliation deadlines mean nothing unless the Budget Committee acts. Anybody can do what they want to do. That is exactly what the Committee on Labor and Human Resources has done.

The deadlines were established to ensure expeditious consideration of the bill. To me, they have been completely violated in this particular instance.

And by the way, adding things to this reconciliation bill have a tendency to hold it up, have a tendency to cause a lot of discontent, and is clearly legislating on this bill, and have no relationship as far as I can see to budgetary matters other than certain special interests in this country which want those measures. To me that is not the way to run a budget process.

I am not blaming the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, who I believe believe in the integrity of the process and would like to keep it that way. But I am saying to my colleagues around here that the process is being abused. It certainly is being abused with regard to the submissions by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, the committee upon which I am the ranking minority member.

If that is what we are going to use the reconciliation process for, then it is not a process with integrity. It means that any time the majority wants to do whatever they want to do they can do it regardless of integrity, regardless of the rules with very minor exceptions. We are just 1 week away from a mandatory sequester trying to do the impossible, and we put up with this kind of rulemaking.

What is even more alarming is the fact that Senators are actually going to vote for a stack of papers that I am informed is taller than Dr. Ruth. The bill was just filed this morning. Our committee staff is poring over it like you cannot believe, and there is no way they can do it. Are we going to run the country on this type of an approach?

We do not have the slightest idea of what is buried in this reconciliation bill. The whole country has to be bound down by this system. The reason we have not acted promptly is because everybody is legislating on this bill, contrary to what reconciliation was supposed to be all about.

No report has been filed by the committee, at least as far as I know. Maybe it has been by now. If it has, it certainly has not been filed by today. The committee only reported the bill this morning. The bill has not even been printed. I admit we are in a bind for time. I am not blaming the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for it. But I am pointing out what a lousy process it is, and especially if we allow committees like the Labor and Human Resources Committee which always has hotly contested issues to slip those hotly contested nonrelated issues into this bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HATCH. I will.

It is shocking.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have listened with interest and growing admiration to the statement of the Senator from Utah. I would like to ask if he is aware there is sort of in the corners of the Chamber, in the Cloakrooms, and in the committee rooms a sort of floating caucus that is trying to stimulate interest in the idea of stripping out everything from this bill that does not really address itself directly to curtailing the deficit, that in fact there are two or three points of view. One is we ought to strip out those things which are technically in violation of the rules, but that there is a broader sort of bipartisan good government movement which we are trying to pump up a little, the effect of which would be to strip out maybe as much as 80 or 90 or maybe 95 percent of this bill, even good provisions, worthy provisions some of them, even as I have previously confessed provisions which I myself have sponsored, authored and support, but just to take all of that out on the theory that rather than abuse the process we ought to deal only with spending reductions, or if it be the pleasure of the body tax increases to meet our Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets and then take up each of these provisions on their own or in packages to be agreed upon later but not under reconciliation.

It sounds to me from the statement of the Senator from Utah that he probably would be a candidate to join that movement, and I invite him to do so.

Mr. HATCH. I am joining that movement. I can only speak from our side of the floor that is true, but I believe it is true that many on the other side agree. I cannot believe they are going to try to slip by on the American public and on businesses and labor all over America rules and statutory enactments that have no relationship to this just because the AFL-CIO wants it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the Senator will yield one more moment, I would like to advise him of one pitfall. I think there is a general sense on both sides of the aisle that this bill has readily become grossly overweight.

Mr. HATCH. I have had colleagues on the other side of the aisle tell me that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think that is right. In fact this issue first surfaced publicly by the distinguished majority leader. It is not a partisan issue but here is a concern I nonetheless feel. If the standard by which this bill is stripped is nothing but a strict interpretation of the so-called Byrd rule, the result will be to drop a lot of provisions out of the bill. But it will be also to leave in the bill many, many provisions which though they may be in technical compliance with the rule, or may in the opinion of some Members be in technical compliance, will not be in compliance with the spirit of reconciliation which is to forbid using this legislative vehicle under limited debate and so on for general legislative purposes.

I just mention this because we really need to air this issue with our colleagues, appeal to their conscience, and hope that we can get a large number to encourage those who are working on this matter at this very moment to bring back something that everybody could get behind enthusiastically.

Mr. HATCH. I think that the distinguished Senator from Colorado speaks very articulately on this issue, and I agree with him. If we are going to have integrity in this process and have colleagues working on both sides of the aisle—and I know there is sincerity on both sides of the aisle—I think we have to have a process that works and one that has integrity and one where one side or the other is not trying to take advantage of the other side. I think what is happening is atrocious here. Hopefully, we can come to that conclusion.

This is not a budget reconciliation package. This is a legislative pack mule carrying all sorts of baggage that has little or nothing to do with reconciliation.

I assure my colleagues that not all the extraneous provisions have been or have even been suggested to be dropped by this agreement. In fact, several major changes that I have mentioned in the labor and employment law have been left in the reconciliation bill. They are arguing that they should be left in the reconciliation bill even if we strip off extraneous matters. Yet, these changes are obviously extraneous to reconciliation. Yet, they are not at all insignificant to the employers and employees who have to adapt to them.

Some of the provisions in this bill have not even been subject to committee hearings. So it is clearly at attempt to take advantage of a reconciliation process that is limited in time and in procedure at a time when everybody is pressured to get out of here and to get this session of Congress closed.

I have to object to that procedure. I happen to know that the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, a friend of longstanding, is trying to maintain some semblance of order in the reconciliation process, and I believe he deserves the support of us here on the floor.

So I am going to raise objection to proceeding. But I have to raise these issues, because if this is the way we are going to do it, it is unfair. If this is the way we are going to do it, it is not right. If this is the way we are going to do it, "Katie bar the door." To me, it is the wrong way to do it.

I hope the chairman will help to bring some order to this, and our ranking member as well, so that we will be fair about this. I can tell you that on the Labor Committee, one reason we have a very difficult time passing labor legislation one way or the other is because both sides are afraid that the delicate balance between management and labor is going to be upset.

Here we have been taking advantage of an almost readymade, tailored system to get around the rules and to not have debate and not even have committee processes and hearings, to pass legislation that is hotly contested and very much disliked by people on both sides of the aisle, because of the procedural advantage. That is not right.

Let me, if I can, propound a few questions to the Chair, because I would like to know where we are. I think these are basically simple questions. I am not trying to do anything other than to establish where we are, at the outset. I am concerned about this.

Mr. SASSER. Before my distinguished friend from Utah and the ranking member of the Labor Committee propounds those questions to the Chair, if I could just respond to some very valid points that he raised, just briefly.

First, let me say to my friend from Utah, subcommittees ought to report on time. There is no doubt about that, that committees ought to report their reconciliation reports in a timely manner.

The remedy of the Budget Committee, I might say, is very limited, and if a committee is tardy in reporting, we simply have the extraordinary remedy, really, of coming to the floor and seeking to write that committee's reconciliation report for them on the floor, which is very untidy process and one that could be very chaotic.

I could not agree more that committees ought to report on time, and just the pressure of colleagues here in the Senate, I think, would have a lot to do with committees being more timely in reporting pursuant to reconciliation instructions.

Yes, I agree, this bill is loaded down with the extraneous matters—1,376 pages, this reconciliation bill is. If this reconciliation bill were stripped of extraneous matters, I am advised by staff that it would amount to about 100 pages. There is no doubt that we have too many extraneous matters in this bill; even as we speak, the staff of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, and the senior staff majority staff of the Budget Committee are working to develop a bipartisan effort to strip this bill down and cast off many of these extraneous matters.

I say, though, to my friend from Utah, that we ought to be very careful.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SASSER. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Senator ought to exclude all the extraneous matters if you are going to do that, not just many of them.

Mr. SASSER. Let me say to my friend from Utah, he and I have no philosophical difference there, but we need to be very careful not going beyond the provisions here of the Byrd rule.

Now, my friend from Utah made a very powerful and persuasive case that we need to abide by the rules of the Senate, and the rules should not be tailored for either the majority or the minority or for any particular Senator's interest.

Now, as presently before us, it is the Byrd rule that defines what is extraneous. Beyond that, I think——

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will yield. If the Byrd rule applies, the Byrd rule ought to be applied fairly and equitably.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I may join this free-for-all——

Mr. SASSER. If I might be allowed to finish, that is the reason we are attempting to move on this in a bipartisan fashion, so that there can be agreement on both sides of the aisle as to what the Byrd rule is applicable to, what is extraneous. And let us get those out now if our colleagues then have a disagreement with this agreement. They are free to come to the floor and raise their own points of order and move on from there.

Now, the frustration of my distinguished friend from Utah as to what has occurred on this reconciliation bill sounds very similar to an anguished speech I heard the then minority leader, now the President pro tempore of the Senate, ROBERT BYRD, make in 1981 when we were confronted with the first reconciliation bill to come before this body that was loaded with extraneous material: changes in well-established law without the first moment of a hearing.

This reconciliation bill had been constructed in consultation with the then Director of Office of Management and Budget, David Stockman. That is what established the precedent for this bill here that we find so objectionable. I think it is incumbent upon the majority and the minority here today to try to rectify that error that was perpetrated on this body in 1981. We are reaping the whirlwind of it today.

Mr. HATCH. That is when the Byrd rule came up and really came into force.

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from Utah, if memory serves me correctly, the Byrd rule did not come into being until 1983 or 1985.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, if I may make the point——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the Senator will yield to me, two points: First the so-called Byrd rule was a great reform, but the Byrd rule is not the sine qua non of fairness. We can adhere strictly to the Byrd rule and still have a process which is horrendously abusive.

If what I am hearing my friend from Tennessee say, that we are not going beyond the Byrd rule in stripping this bill down, I say to my friend we are going to holler on this side and make the point that it is not fair and an abuse of the legislative process.

Let me challenge the Senator to do this: Rather than wait until some hour later in the evening to let us know what is going to be in his motion, how about letting us look at the list now. I am aware of at least three lists floating around.

One is a list which everybody agrees on its face is a technical violation of the Byrd rule. I assume that would be included in his motion.

The second is a list of matters about which the two staffs have conferred and which I am advised there remains some dispute, though it seems clear to us at least violate the Byrd rule.

Third is a list of things that probably are not technical violations of the Byrd rule but which nonetheless abuse the process. They are exactly the kind of provisions that the Senator from Tennessee mentioned, things that make unnecessary changes in existing programs, unnecessary in the sense that they are not the cause and effect of the budget deficit, that they are changes that could and should be considered separately.

So I would just ask the Senator to please go beyond a narrow interpretation of the Byrd rule. It may be that by insisting that only going that far that the Senator can gain advantage either for his party or some provision in which he is interested, and it is absolutely a fact if you do what I say it is going to be somewhat to my disadvantage because it kicks out of this bill some provisions I love.

I appeal to the Senator for the sake of the process, for the integrity of the process, to look at it in a more expansive way so that we make this fair, not just technically comply with the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if I could regain the floor a moment, I know there will be a lot of discussion on this. I also know the distinguished Senator from Texas would like to have the floor. I would like to ask the basic questions because in the context of considering the budget reconciliation bill what I am seeking here is to reaffirm my understanding of several important procedures. So I would like the Chair to respond to the following questions:

No. 1, am I correct that the 20-hour limitation relative to a budget reconciliation bill, inclusive of sublimits, applies to debate and does not constitute an overall cap on consideration, for instance, in contrast to the cloture rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Would the Senator restate the question? The chair is having difficulty in hearing.

Mr. HATCH. I will. Am I correct that the 20-hour time limitation relative to this budget reconciliation bill, inclusive of sublimits, applies to debate and does not constitute an overall cap on consideration in contrast to the cloture rule itself?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It applies to debate. It is inclusive of amendments, motions, points of order, appeals, and quorum calls when such quorum calls occur immediately prior to a vote and it is also inclusive of the time consumed—it is not inclusive of the time consumed.

Mr. HATCH. It does not constitute an overall cap on the consideration.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I could not quite hear the Chair's observation. I heard the Chair to say it is not inclusive and the rest of the Chair's declaration was garbled. Would the Chair restate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not inclusive of the time consumed on a rollcall vote. It is not inclusive of the time consumed by quorum calls when such quorum calls occur immediately prior to a rollcall vote.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. Let me go further. Everything that happens on this matter except for what the distinguished President has stated is inclusive within the 20 hours. It does end the debate. I agree with that. But it is not an overall cap on consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an overall cap.

Mr. HATCH. That is not my understanding. Let me ask the second question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let me read the Senator the rule.

Mr. HATCH. Perhaps I can clarify with the second question and then I will have the Senator read the rule if that is the case. Am I correct that the time consumed in reading an amendment is not charged against time available for debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time consumed in reading an amendment is not charged.

Mr. HATCH. That is what I understand.

Number three, am I correct that upon the expiration of the time for debate, amendments may still be offered, be read and be voted upon without debate, and that such amendments need not have been already pending when the time for debate elapsed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HATCH. That is what I meant by consideration. I thought that would clarify it. I appreciate the indulgence of the Chair.

Am I correct that no point of order will lie against an amendment until after the amendment has been read and that, absent cloture, the reading of an amendment may be waived only by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Number 5, am I correct that the Chair has no power to enforce rules relating to germaneness of amendments and extraneous subject matter unless a point of order is first raised from the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is again correct.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Chair, because those rules are as I view them and as I understood them, and the Chair I think has succinctly answered as I understood them. So I thank the Chair and I thank my colleagues, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, in response to the questions or the statements made by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, let me say that perhaps he is unaware that the distinguishsed Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] and myself had discussed prior to his urgent return to New Mexico following the death of his father-in-law that we would attempt to compile a list of extraneous amendments that we could agree upon that we would then seek to have declared extraneous and stripped from this bill.

What I seek to do is await the arrival of the distinguished ranking member and then carry out that commitment by going over this list with him, selecting those on which we can agree are extraneous, and then moving on them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I am aware of that. But the point I want to make and which I urgently request him to consider, and I believe that the Senator from New Mexico will not see it any different than I do, though of course he will speak for himself when he arrives, is that technical compliance with the rule is not a standard of justice in this case, that we need to go beyond that.

The reason is very simple. As the Senator knows full well, there are many provisions which really violate the spirit of the rule while being technically in compliance. How does that happen? It happens, for example, if you start a new spending program, even a costly new program, even a new legislative initiative that cost money over a period of years, but folded into a provision which is in overall compliance, that is, if the whole title complies, then an offending individual provision within that title is in effect sheltered from the rule. I think that is an oversight in the way the rule is drawn.

At some time during this afternoon and this evening I will submit at least by example a number of typical programs like that, but let me mention a couple just to illustrate the point. We believe, for example—let me just say I believe—that modification to the therapeutic shoe demonstration program probably does not technically violate the rule in question, is probably not a technical violation, but it is not reconciliation legislation either; or expanded coverage for psychologists or the added coverage of clinical social work which, by the way, is a quarter of a billion dollar outlay item over the next 4 years and yet for the reason I just explained is in technical compliance; or the exclusion of accountable income from certain benefits for veterans that adds $160 million in outlays over the next 4 years, but we think it is in technical compliance because it is part of a title that complies; or the Oregon medicaid demonstration program which is a good program, by the way—it cost $33 million; it is sheltered from the rule, from an attack under the rule we believe because the whole title is in compliance; or the optional coverage of home visitor services which adds $4 billion in outlays.

In fact, Mr. President, I have a list here at some point we can get into, everything from mortality reduction for foreigners, deduction for more than first generation skipping transfer tax, IRA's, gifts of appreciated property, on and on which might not technically violate the rules but which certainly violate the spirit of the rules and which constitute the abuse of the process within the meaning of the discussion which the Senator from Tennessee opened and which the Senator from Utah has elaborated on.

So I want to renew my appeal for a broad-gauged look at this which is not too legalistic but which in fact attempts to get the spirit of reconciliation. If we want to change the process, if we want to have a process available to us as a viable vehicle next year, we have to do what is right and not just in a technical sense this year.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I have an basic disagreement with my friend from Colorado, but the facts are that technical enforcement is the only neutral means that we have of choosing among competing arguments here. Many of these definitions, when we get beyond the technical aspects or the technical decisions are highly subjective, and I suspect that my friend and I might agree on many of these.

But I think the task before us is first to look at those that are out of technical compliance. Let us remove those. And that is what I think the Senator from New Mexico and I are trying to do together in a bipartisan fashion. Then we address the others and see which one of those we feel in consultation with various and sundry of our colleagues ought to be extraneous. We do this in consultation with the Parliamentarian. If we feel they are extraneous, then we will move to strip them. If there is any Member of this body who feels that we have overlooked any item that does not rightfully have a place in this reconciliation bill, then they may move to strike it on the grounds that it is out of compliance with the Byrd rule and extraneous.

So the door is open for every Member to enforce their rights as to what they perceive to be extraneous to this reconciliation bill. And I would say to my friend from Colorado and others who share his interest, as I do, be my guest because I frankly would like to reduce this reconciliation bill down to purely and simply a highly refined reconciliation bill. My point is let us be careful before we overrun these technical safeguards that have been set up by the Byrd rule. They are more than technical safeguards; they are the rules of the U.S. Senate, and it is those rules that protect the minority which may be in the majority one of these days.

So that is my view, Mr. President. I think if we will all work together here, I think we can reach the result that we all wish to reach.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I am not trying to have the last word. In fact, I do not even entertain the notion that what we are saying at this moment will be the last word.

But if I could have the attention of my colleague from Tennessee, I want to see if I could just bridge the gap a little further. He and I do not have any disagreement about strictly and absolutely enforcing the letter of the rule. All I want to say to him is that that is not enough. If all we do is enforce the rule, we have failed and the process is being abused.

The result of that may or may not be the passage of a bill that I am going to like. It may or may not be the passage of a bill at all. It could result in a bill which would not gain a majority within this Chamber. It might result in the passage of a bill which would be vetoed by the President.

But if that is all we do, whatever the outcome with respect to this bill, it is a certainty that the process has been seriously jeopardized.

There are a lot of us who, frankly, will never vote for a reconciliation instruction again if all we do is just enforce the letter of the rules, because the letter of the rules will not eliminate the abuse. The rules simply are not drawn tightly enough. That is not to criticize those who wrote the rules.

In 1985, let us remember what happened within the rules. One of our most distinguished members brought to the floor a proposal, a legislative proposal to reduce the number of Commissioners on the Federal Communications Commission, a very controversial matter. He got it through within the rules. We all looked at it and said, Well, you got away with that, but that should not be permitted. It is just not good practice.

I do not say it to criticize him. In fact, I have laughed with him about it. He made the rules work for him. But that does not make it right anymore than if we strip out a half or two-thirds or 75 percent of the abusive provisions under technical compliance with the rules. If we leave a half or a third or 25 percent of the abusive provisions, we have not done our job. We have done the process a disservice and set the stage, I think, for chaos in the future. And we are very close to chaos now, as is evident.

But how can anybody in good conscience vote for a reconciliation instruction if you can hide an offending provision and wrap it in a provision which is protective of a point of order; in other words, if you can put in here something which on its own violates the so-called Byrd rule, but wrap it in something else to prevent the Byrd rule from reaching it.

That is all I am saying to the Senator from Tennessee. I am not trying to impede the process in assuring compliance. I am saying that does not go far enough.

Unless the Senator from Tennessee wants to say something, I was going to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SASSER. If I may yield myself a very short amount of time.

Mr. President, let me say to my friend from Colorado, for whom I have the greatest respect, I think we are treading on dangerous ground indeed when we take the position here that the rule may not be adequate, so let us go beyond the rule on this particular occasion because we think the offense here is so egregious. Those circumstances can change from day to day.

It is my view that we ought to abide by these rules—abide by the Byrd rule. Then, if my friend from Colorado or any other Senator is dissatisfied with the remainder that may be in this reconciliation report, a motion to strike is in order and would be entertained, I am sure, by the Chair. And if the Senator from Colorado or any other Senator, including the Senator from Tennessee, can persuade 51 Members of the body that the motion to strike is well taken, then it will prevail. So there is adequate remedy here first by the application of the Byrd rule, and then by the ordinary rules of the Senate, to get this reconciliation down to a point where it is at least agreeable to the majority in this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I judge that we are going to return to the discussion of this issue in due course. I thank my friend from Tennessee for the interesting discussion.

Now I would like to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished Senator from Texas, a silver-tongued orator and a hardnosed budget balancer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] is recognized for such time as he may require.

Mr. GRAMM. I thank my dear colleague from Colorado.

Mr. President, I listened to this discussion about what is technically within the rules and what is not. It seems to me that we have forgotten what we are here to do.

On Monday, there will be an announcement that we have missed the deficit reduction targets of a law that we adopted in the Senate by some 70 votes. The Office of Management and Budget, as charged under that law, will find that the deficit is about $117 billion. We have a deficit target of $100 billion. And so they will issue a finding to the President and, based on that finding, the President will be required to impose an across-the-board cut in budget authority to reduce spending by $17 billion. That will be divided equally between defense and nondefense, and every program, project, and activity except for the handful that have some degree of protection will be affected.

Mr. President, let me first note that if anybody needs a clear indictment of the U.S. Congress, that indictment is going to be sealed and delivered on Monday. I found some interesting quotes the other day. I was going to bring them down here and read them, and then I thought it is basically unfair to read back to people things they have said on the floor of the Senate.

But there were some 25 or 30 Members of the Senate on the day we adopted this budget compromise—let me make it clear Mr. President, that it was not my compromise. I had nothing to do with negotiating it—but there were 20 or 30 Members who got up and said we are not doing enough; that what is called for in this budget is too trivial, so unimportant that we are not meeting the challenge.

Well, Mr. President, maybe we were and maybe we were not. But we adopted that budget. That budget was agreed to by the bipartisan leadership of both Houses of Congress and by the President.

In fact, even though many said it was not a great agreement, it was hailed as being a bipartisan compromise, something that we had not had in the Reagan era. Well, Mr. President, here we are only a handful of days before an automatic cut goes into effect because we have not enforced that agreement.

I think it is also important, and maybe I am a little sensitive about it because of the name of the law in question, the Gramm-Rudman law, but I have heard in the last several days a lot of people trying to pin this failure on that law we adopted in 1985.

Quite frankly, Mr. President, it reminds me of a drunk who tries to blame the wrench for his inability to fix the leaking faucet. I submit that is the reason that we have this huge bill before us with matters such as "The Congress finds that domestically produced limes are grown by many individual producers;" and "The Congress finds that mushrooms are important food that is a valuable part of the human diet"; and "The Congress finds that pecans are a native American nut that is an important food and is a valuable part of the human diet."

Mr. President, we cannot blame the Gramm-Rudman law for this. In fact, I raised a question in the Budget Committee this morning. Everybody was ranting and raving about this bill, and I wondered: Did God send this bill down? Where did this bill come from? How did it magically appear on every desk in the Chamber? Everybody is against it. But the plain truth is, this bill was adopted overwhelmingly in the committees of the U.S. Senate, and we make up those committees.

So, the first point I make, Mr. President, is we cannot blame the process. The plain truth is the reconciliation bill before us is a misuse of a process that, in the past, has been abused from time to time but has also been used very, very effectively.

What we have seen here is really a combination of things. No. 1, an effort to see a train coming along and add something in the back so that train might pull it. I think also, Mr. President, we are seeing an effort to kill the process. I think many of the people who would love nothing better than to suspend the only fiscal restraint that we have in place in the country are really using the perversion of this process as a way to try to kill that fiscal restraint.

We really have before us a massive document that consists of, really, three kinds of things. A very, very small amount of this document is made up of legitimate, clear-cut savings that modestly meet the requirement necessary to avoid that automatic cut from going into effect.

I submit in probably 20 pages we could write out, in its simplest and most basic form, what those items were. And I submit, Mr. President, those are the items we ought to be debating here.

The second set of items are things that will be dealt with by the Byrd rule. Let me make it clear, Mr. President, I am glad we have the Byrd rule as part of the process. I think it is vitally important that that rule be extended. The problem is, again, it is simply one more wrench of a different size to do a different job. But it is only as good as those who are using that wrench.

If we apply the Byrd rule, I assume that all of the provisions related to agriculture will be stricken out. I do not mean to be picking on agriculture, but the bill is so thick I had not had time to read past agriculture. But I assume that all of these provisions relating to pecans, mushrooms, limes, potatoes, honey, kiwis, papayas, and Vidalia onions will be stricken out.

We have here—in this bill that is meant to avoid across-the-board cuts of Medicare, and cuts that will affect the veterans' hospitals—the definition of a Vidalia onion.

I submit, Mr. President, the Byrd rule in all probability will knock these provisions out. If anybody moves to waive the Byrd rule, I am going to oppose them, and I am going to vote against them, and I look forward to that rule being used.

But I submit, Mr. President, that rule is not powerful enough to deal with the real problem we face because, even after we have employed the Byrd rule and have stricken the definition of Vidalia onions and all these other things, we are still going to have a lot of provisions in this bill that really do not belong here.

Let me just pick the worst provision of the House bill so nobody takes it personally that I am talking about their provision in this bill. Even if we do our work, even if we get down to these 20 pages I am talking about, we still have to go to conference with the House with a bill that is two or three times this thick. Our problems there are provisions such as a provision of Medicaid that actually raises spending by $12 billion at the Federal level and imposes $10 billion of costs on the States.

Mr. President, as I understand it—at least in terms of our experts who have looked at it, and clearly the Parliamentarian will rule as to what the Byrd rule really means—this Medicaid provision will not be stripped. If we had a conference report come back that had a $12 billion expansion in Medicaid as a cost to the Federal Government and a $10 billion expansion in Medicaid costs to the States, the Byrd rule would not lie against that provision.

But is there anybody here who really believes, in the name of saving $5.3 billion, we ought to be adopting a provision that raises the deficit by $12 billion and requires the States to spend an additional $10 billion? I submit, Mr. President, nobody here really believes that ought to be in this bill.

If our objective here is not to simply engage in sparring, some of which is partisan, some of which is everybody trying to protect his turf, but if our objective is really to try to deal with the deficit problem to avoid the across-the-board cut, then what we need to do is to sit down and go through these items. On items that clearly do not save money—that in fact cost money even though they technically are not going to be stripped by the Byrd rule—what we need, Mr. President, is an agreement that we go through and strip all of those items out.

I submit if we do not do that, we are going to go through whatever amount of time we have here, have lots of speeches and we will probably have some people who are so outraged by some of these provisions that they will send another one of these stacks down. One of our poor clerks will have to read them, which is cruel and unusual punishment and banned under the eighth amendment to the Constitution. And then we will end up, probably, not getting 51 votes. We probably will not adopt it.

Then, if we do adopt it, does anybody really believe that the President is going to sign a bill that makes the ABC child care bill the law of the land as part of an effort to save $5.3 billion? Is there anybody here who believes that the President would sign a bill that raised the deficit by $12 billion and imposed a $10 billion cost on the States, in the name of saving $5.3 billion?

Not the President I know and love. We know a lot of time has been spent on this, and I congratulate the leadership of the Senate that stayed over the weekend, that worked on Sunday, that tried to come up with an agreement. But the plain truth is we are wasting our time here.

Some people would say we are wasting our time because I am speaking. But I think we are wasting our time because, unless we work out an agreement to take these items out, (a) the bill is probably not going to be adopted, or (b) the bill is certainly going to be vetoed. And all this time these automatic cuts are going to be in place. And I know everybody feels at the moment that that is far away and we can blame somebody else for those across-the-board cuts. We can blame Gramm-Rudman or we can blame the other party or we can blame the President.

But my guess is that in the final analysis, the American people are wise and, because of their wisdom, this system works. They are going to blame us. So I submit that the quickest way to get the job done, the job we came here to do, is to reduce the deficit and to avoid the automatic cuts. I am confident we are eventually going to do it. I am just saying why not save ourselves a whole bunch of time, wear and tear, save the American people a lot of anxieties about these cuts, save all the costs about letting them go into effect and then having to come back and reverse them, by simply sitting down with a few of our leaders and going through this package with the strictest definition: Does it save money? Is it really what reconciliation is about? Take all this stuff out, come down here with a 20-page bill that everybody can sit down and read in 45 minutes and then offer it, pass it, hopefully on an overwhelming vote, maybe a unanimous vote, and then go to conference with the House. Then we can say to the House, if you have different savings, let us negotiate them." But do not come in here with a child care bill; do not come in here with a flea prevention act for canines. Let us just focus on what we are trying to do here in terms of saving money.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the Senator yield? If the Senator does not want the flea prevention act, how does he feel about the empty seat rule? Has he heard of that?

Mr. GRAMM. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I inform the Senator, contained deep down inside this bill is a provision that affects the so-called empty seat rule. Does the Senator think the question of how a taxpayer treats the empty seats on a charter aircraft is a reconciliation measure, or does he think it is more like the flea prevention act he mentioned?

Mr. GRAMM. Let me say this: I think when payments under Medicare are cut by 2 percent because we are debating the definition of the Vidalia onion, or because we are debating the empty seat rule, I know there will be people who will say, God did it; it is God's fault or it was the President's fault or it was Gramm-Rudman's fault. But I really believe that the American people are going to see through that and they are going to see that it is our fault, and I think they are not going to be very happy.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I can engage the Senator for a moment more. The Senator from Texas has given us an insightful analysis of some provisions in this bill, particularly those in agriculture. I turned to the section on finance because I happen to be a member of the Finance Committee, and there are the same kind of provisions in the finance section of this bill as he mentioned in the agriculture portion of the bill. For example, there is a safe harbor leasing provision for rural electric co-ops. There is a change in the taxation of alien students who receive Fulbright scholarship equivalent funds; that is, those who come to this country and receive scholarships, should we tax them or not? Should we have a reciprocal arrangement with other countries? There is a new section on 401(k) plans. There is a change in the diesel fuel tax. They are endless. I am talking about dozens of provisions of that kind, some of which are changes that are needed. Some of them are desired; some are not.

The point I want to emphasize is that in the finance section of the bill, in the commerce section of the bill, in every section of the bill, it is just like the agriculture part; not that these provisions are all wrong but that they do not belong in this bill because we cannot debate them; we do not have the time to focus on them; we do not have a committee report. They are not subject to amendment in the same way they would be otherwise. They are not before us under the traditional rules of debate.

The Senator said he thinks the American people are going to see through this if we do not fix this up. Is the Senator not aware what is going to happen when we get down to the last hour of debate; that Senator after Senator is going to come down and say I am against this, it is terrible, it is drastic, it is awful, but we have no choice? Does the Senator realize that is what is going to be said? And how does the American public know they are going to be bamboozled?

Mr. GRAMM. I am going to tell them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thank the Senator and appreciate his willingness to spare with me a little. We are really heading way off the track.

If the Senator would address one more issue. I tried to make some of the arguments earlier that the Senator has so eloquently presented. One of the issues which came up was this response: That we should only enforce the rules; we should only enforce the so-called Byrd rule and if we go beyond that, if we try to formulate an agreement of some kind to drop out provisions which violate the spirit but not the letter of the so-called Byrd rule, that somehow we would be chartering into dangerous territory; that somehow we would be creating a precedent that would be unusual for the Senate. What does the Senator say to an argument like that?

Mr. GRAMM. Let me say, I think it depends on what you are trying to do. I understood we were here trying to reduce the deficit. If that is our objective, I think it is clear that under the rules of the Senate, under the precedents of the Senate, that we can engage in all kinds of activities. Any Member of the Senate could send down a 1,000-page amendment and require that it be read. That would be perfectly within their rights. It would not, as I understand with the answer of the distinguished President pro tempore; count toward the time on this bill. So technically they could do that. We know that technically under the rules you can use this bill to raise the deficit by twice as much as we are trying to save. The question is not whether you can do it; the question is whether you want to do it.

I submit that the people here who are serious about trying to deal with the deficit problem should be willing to address the issues, not on the basis of how we can narrowly define the procedure to protect people who are trying to destroy the process, but how we can function as the greatest deliberative body in the world in trying to make the process work.

Let me finally say, and I will yield the floor because our distinguished Senator from South Carolina is here, but let me make a final point related to all these items in this bill. One of the reasons that I ran for the Senate was because in the House of Representatives you have such binding rules. You never really get to debate the legitimate agenda of the American Nation. The great thing about the Senate is if somebody wants to deal with an empty seat provision that the distinguished Senator from Colorado talked about, all they have to do is to raise that as an amendment on any bill. If somebody wants to define Vidalia onions, all they have to do is raise an amendment on any bill and they can require the Senate to debate and vote on it.

Quite frankly, I think it is a legitimate thing to do and I probably would be inclined to look with favor on doing it. Obviously, you can try to do it in this bill, but the point is why not do it another day on another bill rather than when we are dealing with a very important process here in trying to achieve deficit reduction.

Mr. President, a final point and then I will conclude. We have a mechanism that is a pretty good wrench, going back to my analogy. If we apply it with some skill, we can fix this leaky faucet; we can reduce the deficit; we can strengthen a recovery that has created 21 million new jobs; we can try to keep that recovery going, a recovery that is now the longest peacetime economic expansion in American history.

But to do that we have to decide that is what we are here to do; that we are not here to do all these other things; we are not here to engage in political sparring; we are here to use the wrench to fix the leaky faucet.

So I submit that what we ought to do is get about that task, and the only way we are going to do that is to sit down on a bipartisan basis and throw all the extraneous matters out of this bill. My guess is, Mr. President, that half of these provisions in this bill, that are really extraneous to what we are doing here, are things I favor. If somebody will offer them tomorrow as an amendment, I will vote for half of them because I think they are good ideas. But today is not the day to be doing that. Today is the day to be reducing the budget deficit. But to those who do not want to do that, I hope they will remember it is not our effort to balance the budget that is failing, it is the Senate and the Members who make it up.

I yield the floor.

Mr. THURMOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I yield as much time as he shall require to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] is recognized.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague.

Mr. President, I wish to proceed as if in the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP TO SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I was deeply dismayed to read a newspaper story from South Carolina this morning in which President Bush was subjected to sharp criticism for his recent visit to our State to view the damage from Hurricane Hugo. This kind of partisan rhetoric, I believe, does a disservice to the many fine people of South Carolina who now are rebuilding their homes, their churches and schools, and their lives.

Several days after Hurricane Hugo devastated South Carolina and caused an estimated $5 billion in damages, I asked President Bush to come to our State. It was my hope that a personal visit by the President would not only help ensure maximum Federal aid in the rebuilding process, but also would show our shell-shocked residents that our Nation, and indeed the world, is deeply concerned about their plight. President Bush gladly responded and came to South Carolina. He toured both rural and urban areas and he met with residents and local officials. The President also assured our State that any and everything that could be done would be done. For this, I was both proud and thankful.

In the days following the President's trip to South Carolina, I heard from many, many residents of our State. All with whom I spoke said the President's trip lifted their sagging spirits and gave them hope that the Federal Government would assist in helping them put their lives back together. Our able Governor Carroll Campbell, whose round-the-clock efforts yielded extraordinary results in the days leading up to and following the hurricane, said the President's trip was vital in illustrating to the Nation the problems our State is now facing.

Because the devastation was so great, at my request the President approved $1.1 billion in emergency aid for victims of the hurricane. After returning to Washington, President Bush did not forget South Carolina. At the urging of Governor Campbell, the President announced that the Federal Government will pay 100 percent of the cost of repair and cleanup after the State pays $8.5 millon. Had President Bush not taken this action, our State's financial future would have been seriously weakened.

These are just two of the many actions the Federal Government and the President have taken to help our beleaguered residents. For coming to South Carolina and the billion-dollar-plus aid the President has approved for hurricane victims, I want to say publicly, from the bottom of my heart, thank you, Mr. President.

In conclusion, I also want to apologize to the President for the criticism that was made concerning his visit to our State. It will be decades before the nightmarish Hurricane Hugo fades from the memory of South Carolinians. President Bush, by visiting our State and marshalling Federal aid, has helped us begin that process. Thank you, again, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FOWLER). The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me say to my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from South Carolina, that the hearts of the Nation go out to the people of South Carolina for the tragedy they have suffered in the past few weeks following the ravages of Hurricane Hugo.

South Carolina has a special place in the heart of the Senator from Tennessee. I had the privilege and honor to reside for a number of months at a place called Parris Island, SC, the Marine Corps recruit depot, some years ago, and my family and I have traditionally vacationed at Pawleys Island, SC, over the past 22 years, a beautiful, scenic part of this country which suffered savage damage at the hands of Hurricane Hugo.

When the distinguished junior Senator from South Carolina, Senator HOLLINGS, in concert with his senior colleague, Senator THURMOND, came to the Budget Committee to discuss privately with myself and the chairman of the Appropriations, Committee, Senator BYRD, the needs of the people of South Carolina, we were pleased to respond to the pleas of our friends, the Senators from South Carolina, Senator THURMOND and Senator HOLLINGS. We fervently hope that this Federal largess is being put to good use. We trust it is. I want to say to my friend, the senior Senator from South Carolina, that we understand the sadness of many of the people he represents, and we are indeed sympathetic with the tragedy they have suffered through this terrible act of God that took place just a few weeks ago.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to thank the able Senator from Tennessee for his remarks and for his fine cooperation in this matter.

After my first trip to visit the devastated area in my State, I came back and requested the administration to submit a request for the $1.1 billion, and I am very pleased they did that. The Budget Committee and the Appropriations Committee cooperated well, including Senator HOLLINGS and others, and we are very grateful this money was obtained. Again, I thank the administration and the President for requesting that money and thank the Congress for passing the appropriations.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon, we adopted an amendment by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER]. I ask unanimous consent that Senator SIMPSON be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I also ask that I be added as a cosponsor to the amendment of the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I have just received from the Joint Committee on Taxation a revised estimate of the revenue effect of items reported pursuant to budget reconciliation instructions. I ask unanimous consent that these revised estimates be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I see no Senator wishing to speak at the moment. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent it be charged equally against both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call at roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Washington such time as he may require.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS], is recognized for such time as he may require.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I thank the manager of the bill for granting me this period of time. I also want to give him both my congratulations and my commiserations on being the chairman of the Budget Committee.

In terms of the budget, process has shaped policy. Surely, by now, we all realize that the most brilliantly conceived strategy will go nowhere if we do not have the appropriate process to implement it.

In the budget process, Congress starts with what is, in theory at least, the ultimate tool; control over the Federal purse. This constitutional concept, however, has not always been translated into practical power. Prior to 1974, for example, it was the executive branch of Government which was the guiding force behind fiscal policy. They took the lead because they had the tools: The economists, the data, the analysts, and everything else.

The President took data from the departments and agencies, shaped it at OMB, and submitted a fiscal year budget plan which was used as a markup document. The assumptions about data and the projections of economic activity were simply accepted and the appropriations system acted on marginal parts of line items.

I was, and am, convinced that the Congress had both a right and an obligation to develop a mechanism which would allow it to participate in the budget making process as, at least, an equal partner with the executive. To achieve that goal, the legislative branch created a budget process which allowed the Congress to develop a strategic planning document that provided a realistic alternative to the executive budget.

The Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 provided the necessary power to control revenue, spending, and debt limit legislation through a process which coordinated the work of the authorization and appropriation committees. In order to provide the Congress with the independent information needed to make decisions in these areas, the act also established a House and Senate Budget Committee as well as a Congressional Budget Office.

Now, however, it appears that the process I helped to design just doesn't work anymore. Changes in the nature of the Congress, changes in our economic status, changes in our political philosophies—all of these factors, and more, have made the original budget process less effective, less meaningful, and more time consuming than it used to be. We saw signs of this collapse in 1981, when the executive branch developed an elaborate plan to assure the passage of their legislative agenda. That plan jammed the original budget process and then forced a year end grouping of appropriation bills into one giant reconciliation bill. The net result was a package which few people understood and which everyone has lived to regret.

We have been struggling to deal with the policy consequences of that disaster ever since. The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill was designed to be a process-oriented fix. It proved that two wrongs don't make a right. Rather than promoting rational decision making, this procedure—when combined with the basic budget morass—has created a philosophic and practical mess. Philosophically, we have adopted a strategy which, first of all, minimizes the value of making decisions about what priority we want to assign to specific programs; second, maximizes the advantages of refusing to reach compromises; and, assumes that only the threat of a disastrous sequester will be sufficient to compel the Government to take the problem of the deficit seriously. Practically, the current process has increased the emphasis placed on the technicalities of the budget process such as scorekeeping, crosswalks, snapshots, midterm reports, points of order, and 302(b) allocations; created a set of rules which frustrate the Congress' ability to work its will; and served to make it more difficult to meet the statutory deadlines for consideration of the budget resolution.

Mr. President, I was the first chairman of the Budget Committee in the House of Representatives when this was being created. I, frankly, have been appalled by what has occurred since 1981 with this process. I think that the present budget chairman and ranking member have inherited the wind. This is a tragedy in many ways for the processes of the U.S. Senate, the Congress, and the people of the United States.

As I said, in terms of the budget, its process has shaped policy and it was never created to do that.

I would like to recall a moment of history. In 1972, 1973, and 1974, when the problem was the Congress was appropriating money in the regular fashion, there were problems of entitlement programs that were growing without individual appropriations. And then President Nixon was impounding money; in other words, not spending it, just as he saw fit. In other words, the budget process or system had broken down. And so a great compromise was achieved; Richard Bolling being one of those that had worked on it; ROBERT BYRD, of the Senate; many Members, including some that are no longer in the Senate or the House, worked on this matter at great length.

The compromise that was achieved was that there would be no more impoundment, that money that was appropriated would be spent unless the President specifically came to the Congress and asked for a rescission or another technical type of legislation that allowed a particular appropriation to be changed.

Another thing that has been forgotten is that the budget process was part of the rules of the House and of the Senate; it was not part of the regular legislative process. It was deliberately created that way so that a budget resolution was adopted in the spring by the House and the Senate, without a signature of the President, to guide the various committees in their work. All of the committees contributed to this. It was to occur in the spring of the year prior to the appropriations committees' meeting, prior to the authorizing committees' moving forward.

Then an orderly process moved through the Congress, known as the budget process, whereby the various committees of the Congress, authorizing and appropriating, would act in their turn, first the authorizing committees granting authorization where it was necessary, if it were a short authorization, or if authorizations were in place for a 2- or 3-year period, they were available, and then the House would move.

I well remember in 1974 going to each of the appropriations chairmen, after having gone to the authorizing chairmen, the budget chairmen, and saying, "This is the target, this is what must be met; each of you please give to us your share and then we will sit and talk," an informal process at that time to divide among all the committees the moneys that were to be available to the money-raising process. We had a very good money-raising process at that point in time.

I am going to refer in a moment to Mr. Stockman's book as to what would have happened if the Republicans had not come in in 1981 and changed it. That process was that as inflation or as the money changed in the economy, the income tax would follow it. And, therefore, we had each year a certain increase in the amount of money available. We were dealing in those years with a deficit in the budget of less than $30 billion.

If you will examine the budget resolution of 1976, which was the first complete budget resolution in schedule G, you will see set forth a complete program where every program that was indexed to inflation was kept, all others were kept at their same rate, no new programs were adopted, and the budget automatically balanced from 1980 at the time of the Presidential election. I remember that being created. It was created as part of an effort to show in the first budget process that the Congress itself had control over the purse strings.

As part of that first process, there were two budget resolutions; the first one in the spring to target and then the one that we are now working on in the fall, which was the result of all the appropriations bills being passed and the authorizations being in place. And I might state that every appropriation bill was passed in that year prior to the end of 1976 when we had our final drop-down date of October 15.

The reconciliation was never created to be a legislative vehicle for anything other than correction of the budget process to make it fit the original target. It was a good process and it was a process that worked up through 1980. It did not work as well as we might have wished because some new programs came into place. Without new programs, it would have come very close to balancing out in that year.

This is not just my speculation or the fact that I happened to be that first chairman. But I have read with great interest—and I recommend to my colleagues if they have not read it, not that I want to sell this book, but it is a book by David Stockman, entitled "The Triumph of Politics," in which he describes how this process was destroyed in 1981.

I want to read, to confirm what I have just said, on page 133. You will remember when they came in with their budget they had a proposal to increase spending on the defense side and reduce it on the domestic side. They had a scenario which we now call the budget numbers or projections for the future. This is what would have happened, and the President was going to say it. This is on page 133: "On a 5-year basis, our giant tax cut,"—and this is outside of the quote—which was in the continuing resolution and the reconciliation which the chairman actually defined as the Trojan horse and he called, in this one, the capital gains a Trojan horse.

> On a five-year basis, our giant tax cut and big defense buildup cost nearly $900 billion. Our domestic spending cuts, including the $44 billion magic asterisk, came to only about half that.
> So how could you worsen the budget by $900 billion, cut it by $450 billion, and still come out with a balanced budget? The answer was buried in Murray Weidenbaum's visceral computer. We were peering into the veil of the economic future. We were betting the fiscal house of the United States on our ability to predict the precise shape and composition of a $4 trillion economy all the way out to 1986.
> One single number that didn't appear in the white paper might have made a profound difference. It blared out a clear message: Murray, go slap it again. Your first answer doesn't compute.
> If you projected the inherited budget policy, Carter's mess, the one which had brought us to "a day of reckoning," as the President said that night, with our Rosy Scenario economic forecast, what did you get? That was the missing number: a $365 billion surplus over five years.

In other words, Stockman admits—and he does at several other points in his book—that if we had continued the budget policies of that time, we would not have the problem of a $100 billion deficit today. We would have had $365 billion extra to spend with no increase in the national debt. That is how bad the Carter budget was under their own figures.

But they went ahead anyway. It was going to work. There was the Laffer curve, there was the magic asterisk—and people have forgotten that—that was $44 billion in cuts that was going to appear someplace, somehow.

It has bothered me, Mr. President, as we have gone through these last few weeks, that we have tried hard to pass the appropriations bills and get to a point of completing the Congress' business before we arrived at this date. A lot of effort went into that. We almost made it. I regret the fact we did not just proceed and finish with our business, because we now find, for example, we have still appropriations bills out that cannot be handled until after this reconciliation is over.

What was the reason we had this very sophisticated process known as the budget process and the policies that we tried to develop, the Congressional Budget Office with OMB watching us? Its whole purpose was to move from simply using the President's budget, the President's figures, and the President's projections, to utilizing a congressional system that could stand and be either the loyal opposition or the loyal supporter to an executive branch order that came up in the form of the President's budget.

The President's budget is a political document. It is supposed to be. The congressional response is a political document. But when we finish with it, it is no longer a political document. After it has passed through the authorizing and appropriating process, it is a real document.

At that point I had always believed it was up to Congress to develop its own plan and compare it with what the President had proposed and to see what would actually happen. The budget process is in its original instance a strategic planning document, arrived at early on to tell us what will be debt, what will be revenue, what will be spending, coordinated with the authorizing and appropriating committees to create a final figure.

What happened is what we had designed just is not working anymore. I do not think we ought to do away with the budget process. But I support completely the budget chairman's proposal and the corrections that were attempted by the Byrd rule to bring the reconciliation process down to a point where it corrects and does not attempt to legislate, which would replace, completely, the authorizing and appropriating committees.

We saw the collapse of the budget process when it was blocked in 1981 and we had, instead, one big bill. It was so heavy that one of my former assistants stepped on the scale as he was carrying it back to the House of Representatives, and it weighed 21 pounds. We are dealing with the potential of that again.

Ever since 1981, we have been dealing with the consequences of trying to overcome that disaster. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was simply designed as a process fix, which proved that two wrongs cannot create a right.

Philosophically, we have arrived at a point where now we have once again an attempt to use one big bill to put through particular items that cannot be vetoed or would not be vetoed, and we are going to be in 2, 3, 4, maybe 5 days of debate trying to determine what to do with this process.

I see other Members are on the floor now to discuss it. I will, at a later time, discuss a different part of this budget process. But I wanted to express my deep concern and also to bring back some of the basic fundamentals on which this budget process was grounded. It was never intended to be the overall dominant document and process that drove the authorizing committees and the appropriating committees into the shadows. It was never intended that it should arrive at the end of the year with everyone in a panic of what to do at that point.

It provides an excuse for our not having done our work early and I am hopeful that we will correct it. But before correcting it on this day and on tomorrow and on the next day and on Monday, I hope we do not use it to pass legislation that should go through the regular process. Do not use it for that.

Use it for deficit reduction. Strip this reconciliation down to just what is necessary, pass it, confer with the House on the same basis and let us get out of this death trap. Then go back, next year, to dealing with the budget process as a strategic tool and as a system for making the Congress perform well and for stating to the administration: This is what we will do; no more, no less.

I thank the chairman for granting me this time and I wish him very well during this next 3 days. Hopefully it will only be 1 day, that he will be able to have a short version, quickly voted, that carries out the purpose of the Budget Act.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Maryland, such time as he may consume. But, before doing that, Mr. President, may I propound a question to my distinguished friend from Washington?

The distinguished Senator from Washington alluded to a book written by the former director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. David Stockman. I will ask my friend if he recalls, in 1981, when the effort was being made to drive the so-called Economic Recovery Act through both Houses of this Congress—what we knew here as the Kemp-Roth tax cut through this House—and if he recalls the passage wherein Mr. Stockman recounts a conversation in the parking lot with Mr. Darman, the now-director of the Office of Management and Budget? Mr. Stockman indicated that things were out of control, that they lost control of this legislation and that this tax cut was going to be so massive that it could destroy the revenue base of the U.S. Government.

Mr. Stockman looked at Mr. Darman and he said: What shall we do?

After a long period of meditation, Mr. Darman, according to Mr. Stockman's account, looked at Mr. Stockman and said: Now it is us against them. Let us win and we can fix it later.

I ask my friend from Washington if he recalls that passage in that volume?

Mr. ADAMS. I recall that passage very well. That is exactly what happened. They got to a point at the end of their process where they could not make it come out in any way. That is why I referred to the particular part of the magic asterisk, and the visceral, Murray Weidenbaum computer. Because that massive tax cut, they could not figure out any way that it would ever be offset or could do anything, other than drive us into a massive deficit.

Mr. SASSER. Precisely. And I say to my friend from Washington that is exactly what occurred. I alluded earlier to a document issued in January 1988 by the Office of Management and Budget; the Office of Management and Budget of then President Reagan, which indicated that this massive tax cut of 1981 deprived the U.S. Government from 1980 forward of $1.441 trillion. I say to my friend from Washington, there is your budget deficit, and there is what has doubled the national indebtedness of this Republic over the past 8 years.

That is why, referring to the conversation recounted in this book, the national debt stood at slightly over $900 billion, and that is why it stands at $2.8 trillion today. In other words, it took this country over 200 years to build up an indebtedness of a little over $900 billion. Since the passage of this so-called Economic Recovery Act in 1981, we have seen that indebtedness spiral to $2.8 trillion.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SASSER. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. First of all, I want to thank the very able Senator from Washington for his presentation and for bringing us back to David Stockman, his book and his plan.

The Senator from Tennessee is talking about our own internal debt and the deficit, but there is another dimension to what resulted from those policies, that is our international debt which flowed out of these same policies, just as sure as the sun rises in the east. We now are a debtor nation internationally.

I want to impose on my colleagues for just a minute here, and I will come back and use them again, but this is a chart that shows the U.S. net external asset position. It shows whether you are a creditor or debtor nation internationally.

In 1980, we were a creditor nation. We had a positive position, which then deteriorated because we ran these large trade deficits related to these budget deficits, the very thing the Senator from Washington has been talking about, and we went into a debtor position. It is getting worse year by year. These are the projections out as to what will happen by the year 2000. We will be a debtor nation internationally to the tune of almost $2 trillion.

What that means is the people abroad have more claims on us than we have on them, and we are paying money out to them in terms of interest and dividends because they have holdings. Not only are we moving into that situation, but the counterpart is this comparison in net asset positions.

Take a look at this chart. This shows the United States moving from being a creditor nation to being a debtor nation. This shows Japan and West Germany moving into the surplus positions.

One of the consequences of these policies, that the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Washington have been talking about, is this path that Stockman put us on. When you think of the United States as a world power and the United States international position, we see the United States moving from being in a positive position moving into a very deep debtor position while Japan and West Germany move into a very strong surplus position, this line is actual and this line is projected, but it shows a diminishing of America's strength and power internationally.

Mr. SASSER. May I propound a question to the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who is not only a very able Senator but is a distinguished economist in his own right? According to the chart exhibited here by the Senator from Maryland, it indicates that in 1980, the United States was a net creditor nation, and unless memory serves me incorrectly, at that point, or some time shortly after 1980, the United States was the world's largest net creditor nation; that is, the nations of the world owed the United States more than any other nation was owed up to about 1983.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right.

Mr. SASSER. Following that time, we have now reversed that situation and have become the world's largest net debtor nation, the fastest swing in economic history of a country being a large creditor nation to a large debtor nation. I ask my friend from Maryland if that is not correct?

Mr. SARBANES. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. SASSER. We heard much discussion on the floor of this body and in the Budget Committee this morning as to the danger of the national debt and the danger of the national indebtedness. But I will ask my friend from Maryland and call upon his expertise as an economist, given the danger of the national debt, is it even more dangerous that we have this very large debtor relationship with regard to the other nations of the world because with regard to the national indebtedness, a large percentage of that is Americans owed money by the American Government.

With regard to what my friend has alluded to a moment ago, moving this country into a net debtor situation, we have a situation where the United States owes other nations substantial amounts of money. Is that more dangerous in and of itself than even the national debt?

Mr. SARBANES. We are then in the hands of others, people abroad, and their claims on us. In effect, these claims come out of what otherwise could be our standard of living. We then have to work in order to pay these claims that are held by foreigners. If the debt is held internally, it is not desirable, but it is held by other Americans, and you get a redistribution. Some Americans are working to pay the Government debt that is held by other Americans. When you have this indebtedness held abroad, it, in effect, limits the American capability.

It is very interesting. When President Bush went to the economic summit in Paris back in July, again reflecting this weakened international economic position—let me just read a handful of the headlines: "Bush Heads to Europe With Economic Plans and Economic Limits"; "Bush Fixes U.S. Role as More Modest One"; "A Change: Ideas Not Made in U.S.A." "Bush Went Not Like a Conqueror, a Commander, But Like a Tourist."

Secretary Brady, after the summit, testified before the Joint Economic Committee, and the headline on that one is, "U.S. Cannot Fund Global Program, Hill Panel Told." It says: "Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said yesterday that he had a serious worry over the growing inability of the United States because of its huge budget deficit to provide much, if any, money for its own foreign initiatives, including global environmental controls, Third World debt and support for free market policies in Eastern Europe." That is an admission by our own Secretary of the Treasury.

He was asked by the chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, of which I am very privileged to serve as the vice chairman, whether America's foreign policy is constrained by our domestic fiscal predicament and whether other nations better able to finance international activities are picking up the baton of leadership. Secretary Brady admitted: "The fiscal pressures that we are under in this country certainly do circumscribe our ability to flesh out that leadership with the presentation of funds. In addition," he went on, "it is a source of some embarrassment in worldwide forums to not be able to come up with our prescribed and agreed to subscriptions to the World Bank and other multilateral activities."

You cannot ride into town standing tall in the saddle if you owe everybody that you see on every street corner as you move along. That is what is happening to us, and it is happening to us because of the policies that the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Washington have talked about, and the broader issues that are involved in this reconciliation.

This reconciliation is the effort to close out the budget process, but the budget process in its entirety, including the reconciliation, involves these large issues.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield briefly?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the distinguished Republican leader, and I now ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maryland be recognized to address the Senate for 40 minutes, following which the Senator from Rhode Island be recognized to address the Senate for 20 minutes; that upon the completion of the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island, the Senate stand in recess until 9:30 p.m. this evening with the time during the recess to be charged against the bill.

Mr. SARBANES. I would say to the majority leader and also to the Senator from Rhode Island, I may not take the full 40 minutes, so I might well move along quicker than that.

Mr. MITCHELL. In that event, the recess would simply commence earlier, but the time for recess would remain the same, and so the time charged against the bill would be the same. I so clarify my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time would be equally charged against both sides?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. That is correct.

Mr. DOLE. The Senator is talking about 2 hours?

Mr. MITCHELL. It would be slightly over 2 hours if it occurred now and they used the full 60 minutes. Otherwise, it would be a greater amount of time to the extent that either the Senator from Maryland or the Senator from Rhode Island did not use the full allotted time.

Mr. DOLE. Fine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES] is recognized for not to exceed 40 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I might, before the Senator resumes his discussion, say to the Members of the Senate, I understand the distinguished Senator from New Mexico will be returning during that period. He is expected to arrive some time prior to 9 o'clock, and that following the resumption of the consideration of the bill at 9:30, we anticipate that action will be taken with respect to amendments.

No amendments requiring a rollcall vote have yet been offered, although there has been a great deal of discussion and the time has been running against the bill. So that we anticipate, as of now at least, that there will be amendments offered this evening which may require rollcall votes. That is not yet certain, and we will await the arrival of the distinquished Senator from New Mexico and the ranking member and the opportunity for him to consult with the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator SASSER.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me to propound a question to the majority leader?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. I have been advised that the Senator from New Mexico would be willing, if the majority leader and the manager on the other side had an interest, to take additional time off the bill up until midnight and go out now and come back in the morning and then offer the amendment in the morning.

He is in Chicago now. He has not left Chicago. It is probably going to be about 9 o'clock before he is on the floor, between 8:30 and 9. If that were done, I do not know how many hours would remain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair inquires, Is the suggestion to the effect that the time until midnight, even though the Senate were not in session, would be charged equally against both sides?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator, to make it simpler, that we simply agree that 10 hours will have been charged against the bill, which would be approximately the amount of time that would be consumed by midnight and then return tomorrow morning understanding that we have 10 hours to go.

I personally, as I have indicated previously to the distinguished Republican leader, prefer to use up to 12 hours today, leaving 8 hours tomorrow so that, hopefully, we could complete action tomorrow.

I do not want to press that if there is any reluctance but that would be my preference, and I believe it would be of interest to most of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. In my view, I could probably do the 10 hours without further consultation with the ranking member, who has not been here because of a death in the family. If it moves along quickly tomorrow, as I think it will, we can always yield time back then.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me inquire of the Senators from Maryland and Rhode Island whether they would prefer to complete their remarks this evening or be recognized tomorrow when we resume to make the remarks?

Mr. SARBANES. I think I probably prefer to do it now since I am here.

Mr. CHAFEE. Likewise, Mr. President, I would prefer to do mine now.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, Mr. President, I will withdraw the unanimous-consent request previously made and propound instead a request that the Senator from Maryland be recognized to address the Senate for such time as he uses, and that upon the completion of his remarks, the Senator from Rhode Island be recognized to address the Senate for such time as he uses; that when the Senate stands in recess this evening, it do so until 9 a.m. tomorrow morning, at which time the Senate resume deliberation on the reconciliation bill, and that 10 hours have been charged against the bill at that time.

Mr. DOLE. Ten hours remaining?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct. There would then be 10 hours remaining under the Budget Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair inquires, Is it the intention of the majority leader that the Senate recess immediately upon the conclusion of the remarks by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE]?

Mr. MITCHELL. The answer is no. I had intended at that point to determine whether there was any need for a brief wrap-up with the distinguished Republican leader. The request was that when the Senate does recess tonight, it be until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning. But if this consent is granted, it would then be my intention to announce to Senators there will not be any rollcall votes this evening and we will have used up by agreement half the time on the bill, or 10 hours, and then we will resume tomorrow with a much better opportunity to complete action on the bill tomorrow.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I understand, the remaining 10 hours will be equally divided?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that the request?

Mr. MITCHELL. The time that remains to be equally divided.

Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Yes, Mr. President, that is agreeable.

Mr. DOLE. I have one, hopefully, temporary reservation. We are on the telephone now with a Member on this side.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought it was an offer that could not be refused.

Mr. DOLE. I hope it will not be refused.

Let me say in the interim, I know some of my colleagues came a long distance to be here today, but I hope they understand we did it in deference to Senator DOMENICI, who has been the chairman of this committee and the ranking Republican. There was some thought he might be back a bit earlier, but he is not going to be back until 8:30 or 9. It was something he could not avoid; his father-in-law passed away.

So I hope my colleagues who came back but who have not voted eight or nine times understand that. But I hope we could have approval of the request.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, might I say to all of my colleagues, including a number of Senators on our side who have spoken to me about returning today, that of course when the decision was made last Saturday to return today and to take up the reconciliation bill, none of us could have perceived the death of Senator DOMENICI's father-in-law or the timing and circumstance that would occur.

In any event, we will have succeeded in using up the 10 hours on the bill without the necessity for a lengthy session this evening.

Mr. President, I renew my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair inquires: Is it the intention of the majority leader upon the completion of the remarks by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] that there be no further discussion or action with respect to the reconciliation bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct. And make clear that the time remaining tomorrow, that is 10 hours, would then be equally divided between the two sides.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

The Senator from Maryland.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, and I thank him for his graciousness, I advise Senators that there will be no further rollcall votes this evening, and that the Senate will return to the consideration of this bill at 9 o'clock in the morning with half the time having been used, 10 hours remaining, and it is my hope and expectation that we will remain in session tomorrow to complete action on this bill, and then proceed immediately to the Nicaragua Election Assistance Act. If we can hopefully get more time charged against the bill tomorrow, perhaps less than the 10 hours needed on this bill, we may complete action on all of those matters tomorrow.

If we have success in doing that, Mr. President, and in an effort both to inform Senators so that they can make plans for this weekend, and as an inducement thereto, if we complete action by tomorrow night on both of those matters, then the Senate would be in session on Monday to commence debate on the constitutional amendment with respect to the flag burning, but there would be no votes on Monday.

So that if we can complete action tomorrow night, we can look forward to no Saturday session, no Sunday session, and although the Senate will be in session debating, no rollcall votes on Monday.

I thank the distinguished Republican leader. I thank my colleagues, and especially my colleague from Maryland for his graciousness. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Chair.

Mr. SASSER. If I may propound a question to the Senator from Maryland who just a moment ago was alluding to the fact—or responded to my question, would be a more accurate way of putting it—that the funds owed abroad or the net debtor position now of the United States was a greater danger to this country than the international debt.

I inquire of my friend from Maryland if he is aware of the fact that as a percentage of gross national product the Japanese run a larger national debt than the United States Government. That is, the Government of Japan has a larger internal debt, or a larger national debt, a larger deficit as a percentage of gross national product than does the United States Government.

The difference being that the Japanese Government finances their national indebtedness internally, borrowing from Japanese citizens, Japanese corporations, et cetera; whereas the United States, beginning in the decade of the 1980's, following the passage of this Economic Recovery Act, has begun financing a significant portion of its national indebtedness with funds borrowed from abroad.

I wonder if my friend from Maryland is aware of the fact that in 1986 when the national yearly deficit peeked at $220 billion the U.S. Government was at that time borrowing 20 cents out of every dollar that it spent. And of the 20 cents that it borrowed 10 cents came from abroad. In other words, we were borrowing 10 percent of the money to finance our indebtedness from abroad, and of that 10 percent we were borrowing from abroad, 5 percent was borrowed from the Japanese.

So in essence, I ask my friend from Maryland, are we not slowly but surely mortgaging the sovereignty of this country as well as the future of our children to the Japanese principally, and other foreign holders of United States Government indebtedness?

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator is absolutely correct. Let me show the Senator, because we are really getting into this problem when we owe it externally. We have to pay it. We are not paying it to ourselves where we may have a redistribution. We are paying it outside. It has to come out of our standard of living in order to meet the claims which others have on us.

I triggered all of this by reference to Stockman. This is the U.S. current account balance. It encompasses everything involved in trade, not only merchandise trades, goods, but also services. What happened is the U.S. went into a deficit situation on its current account balance in about 1982, and it has come straight down here. It came up a little bit, is now projected to proceed out on this path. So we are going to continue to run this deficit in our current account balance. As a trading nation, we are in a negative position.

We are projected to remain in a negative position. Every year we run a deficit in our current account balance adds that much more to our debtor status. We go that much deeper into debt because we are importing more than we are exporting. Now what has happened? So the reverse side of that or the corollary is that you get this deterioration in your net asset position, your external asset position. So every year that you run a deficit in current account, it gets reflected in this net external position.

Here is what has happened. Last year for the first time in 30 years the United States began to report deficits in trade in services particularly for investment earnings—you have trade in goods, trade in services. We have been running these deficits in trade of goods for a number of years.

In other words, Japan and others were exporting goods into the United States, we were not getting the same access into their markets, the dollar was overvalued, and our competitive position was effected. So we were bringing in more than we were sending out. Therefore, we were running a deficit. But that was offset somewhat by these holdings we had abroad compared to the holdings that others had here. So we would get a plus on the return on our investments earnings.

Last year the United States began to report for the first time in 30 years deficits in trade and services. This reflects rising payments to foreigners on their assets in this country. Those are payments which will continue to rise. This is money we are borrowing that gives them a claim on us, and we have to service that claim. We have to pay interest or dividends if it is an equity investment on that claim.

This has a tremendous potentially adverse impact on our national standard of living; these rising debt service payments.

Mr. SASSER. Let me ask the Senator from Maryland this question, if I may: Would the situation of the United States be analogous to the situation of the country of Mexico or the country of Brazil where the populations have been forced to undergo an actual reduction in their standard of living in order to service their external debt?

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the Senator we are on that path. We are not where they are because while our debt is larger, as he indicated earlier, we are the largest net debtor country. We have a stronger economy to service that debt than does Mexico or Brazil.

So we are not yet in the same posture in which they find themselves, but we are beginning to start on that path, and that is one source of concern. A second source of conern is, in my own view, is that you cannot for long be a debtor nation and also be the world's leader. It is just a basic inconsistency between those two things, and these newspaper headlines that I read earlier about the position in which President Bush found himself when he went, not like a conqueror or a commander, but like a tourist, to Europe.

Mr. SASSER. If I may interrupt the distinguished Senator there and just inquire if he agrees with this point. A case in point is the trip of the President of the United States to Poland. Here is a nation that is striving for democracy, that has labored for decades under the yoke of Communist tyranny, and the President of the United States offered, as I recall, $100 million to deal with a problem, a Polish economic problem, that totals, by conservative estimates, some $9.5 billion.

Is it not true, I ask my friend from Maryland, that the Poles and the Polish Government, rather than looking to the United States in their time of need when they are on the verge of, or have broken, it appears, out of the tightly held Soviet bloc, rather than looking to what we perceive to be the leader of the free world for aid and help, are looking to the countries of Western Europe and not to the United States.

I ask my friend from Maryland if that is not the case.

Mr. SARBANES. Well, the difficulty is the United States is not able to fully play a role. I think the countries of Western Europe should play a role as well, because I think they also have strong interests in what is happening in eastern Europe, and they now have strong economies.

The fact is that the United States, when it tries to put that all together and draw on these other Western European countries to make a significant contribution, is not able to come to the table itself with a significant enough package.

The President went, and he talked about $100 million. He has now tried to raise that in the face of the strong congressional effort to be more responsive to the Polish situation. We have a situation in Poland that may be a transforming event of the postwar period. We have gone through this entire postwar period; we have sought to contain communism; we have tried to find ways for countries that have fallen or have been caught behind that Iron Curtain to be able to come out from behind it, to develop open, pluralistic societies, move to democratic values, move to an open-market economy.

Now we have a nation that is desperately trying to do so. There is no guarantee that they will succeed. In fact, the odds are very long on that proposition. Here is the United States, the leader of the free world, finding itself in a position where it cannot respond.

It is difficult for a debtor to lead its creditors, and we need to exercise some leadership. That is why these questions become enormously important, this hearing with Secretary Brady, where he admitted a serious worry over the growing inability of the United States because of its huge budget deficits to provide much for its own foreign initiatives.

So that is the situation in which we find ourselves. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee, he was absolutely right a few moments ago to put his finger on the impact that this might have on our own standard of living. At the time when these latest figures came out that showed that we now were in a deficit in investment earnings, three commentators in the New York Times had this to say:

Pat Choate, the Vice President of TRW. I quote him:

> To anyone who can compute figures on a computer rather than on a napkin, it is an indication of our net debtor status. This means that more of our income in the future will go to service our debt, rather than to investment. It also means our standard of living will decline.

You see, if we have these external creditors that we have to pay interest and dividends to on their assets in this country, these capital outflows are claims on future U.S. output. They will take funds out of the U.S. economy which otherwise would have been available to us for investment purposes. We have to pay it out, instead of having it here to use.

Lester Thurow, the dean of the Sloan School of Management at MIT, said:

> What we have been doing is moving our real standard of living from the present period to a period in the future. In the future the standard of living will be lower than it would have been, had we not been living beyond our means.

Roger Altman, vice chairman of the Blackstone Group—these are all highly respected observers and commentators—said:

More and more of our Nation's gross national product will be diverted to service our debts. Long-term, if we do not reduce our deficit, American income will fall.

So that is the position we are now finding ourselves in. In other words, these become claims on the future standard of living of our people. We are passing on to the next generation a burden which should never have been passed on to the next generation.

Mr. SASSER. May I ask the Senator from Maryland this question: Some of my colleagues, one or two, particularly on the other side of the aisle, have raised the defense in times past that, well, the United States has been a debtor country in years past. The United States was a net debtor country up until about 1908, some time prior to the turn of the century.

Is not the answer to that question that I ask my friend from Maryland, the fact that the United States was a net debtor country before the turn of the century was because it was borrowing foreign capital, principally British and French capital, to build the great railroads and to build the industrial base that made this country the great power and the leading country of the world that it is today; and is it not a fact that we are presently borrowing money from abroad today simply to pay the interest on the national debt, getting nothing literally in return for; or a case can be made that we are borrowing money from the Japanese to finance the operations of the United States Navy in the Far East, to guard the Japanese home islands, to guard the long Japanese oil lifeline from the Middle East, borrowing the money from the Japanese to finance the operation of that Navy and paying interest on it to them at the same time, while we protect their oil lifeline?

Mr. SARBANES. The United States was a debtor country up until about World War I, much like developing countries anywhere in the world are.

In other words, you have countries that are seeking to develop. They do not have the capital, and they borrow from those countries that are in an advanced stage in their economic development, in order to develop. But most of that borrowing—and I do not have the charts with me on net investment—but most of those borrowings at that time were then put into productive investments in this country.

As the Senator pointed out, you built the railroads, you developed the mines, you constructed the factories; these were all productive enterprises, so you borrowed money in order to do it, but you were establishing a base with which to service those borrowings from your earnings out of the industrial and agricultural development that was taking place in this country.

Beginning about World War I, we moved into a critical status. We became the country that was supplying capital abroad for other countries to develop because our economy had reached that stage of development.

Now we have gone back into a debtor status, and, the borrowings show, not primarily for productive investments. This borrowing has gone really to fund the consumption binge. In other words, we have been living beyond our means over those years, and we built up these obligations.

Of course, what it means, and we are moving down this path, is we are going to be borrowing money from foreign investors in order to pay the interest and dividends on past borrowings.

As you move down that path, borrowing to pay interest on borrowing is a certain road to bankruptcy.

It is one thing to borrow to fund productive investment which you project out, and people do that all the time.

That is what good business investment decisions often reflect, borrow and make investment. That is improving productivity capacity. It improves efficiency. Then they are able to return, to pay back the borrowings and also contribute to the rising standard of living.

If you start borrowing simply to pay the interest on past borrowing, then you are really starting down the road to ruin, and that to some extent is what has been happening to us.

As I indicated, this growing international indebtedness creates enormous problems for our leadership in the world economy. As I showed, while the United States is piling up huge international debts, Germany and Japan are piling up equally massive stocks of foreign assets, beginning not only with your own creditors but creditors to the world, and that is reflected in this.

I invite the Senator to take a careful look at this chart. In 1980, the United States had a net asset creditor position here, Japan had a small one, West Germany had a small one. That continued along here running into 1982 and 1983. Then you see the United States moves into a debtor position, and it is worsened down to here. Here is where we are now. Meanwhile Japan and West Germany continue to improve their net asset position.

We were all surplus countries back here, the United States by far the largest, but we were all surplus countries; then the United States moved negative on this chart. The other countries continue and these then are projections out. These are the projections people make on the basis of the current trends, and you can see where they are taking the United States and where they would take Japan and West Germany.

As I said earlier, it is very difficult for a debtor to lead its creditors. We are at a time, as the Senator pointed out, of unprecedented change in Eastern Europe, an area which has historically been the source of much international instability, and yet our lack of resources has hampered the process of developing an effective response from the West to the huge changes taking place in the East.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this article about the appearance of Treasury Secretary Brady on the Hill entitled "U.S. Can't Fund Global Problems, Hill Panel Told," be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, July 20, 1989]

U.S. CAN'T FUND GLOBAL PROGRAMS, HILL PANEL TOLD

(By Stephen E. Nordlinger)

WASHINGTON.—Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady said yesterday that he had a "serious worry" over the growing inability of the United States, because of its huge budget deficits, to provide much, if any, money for its own foreign initiatives, including global environmental controls. Third World debt and support for free-market policies in Eastern Europe.

Summing up with unusual candor the just completed seven-nation economic summit in Paris, Mr. Brady also told the congressional Joint Economic Committee that it was "the source of some embarrassment in world forums" for the United States to be unable to provide on a timely basis the funds requested for the World Bank and other international organizations.

Mr. Brady expressed doubt whether the country's cash shortage meant that "the baton is passing to other countries," as suggested by Representative Lee H. Hamilton, D-Ind., the panel's chairman.

But the thrust of Mr. Brady's testimony indicated that the United States, while the world's largest economy, was seeing its influence dwindle because of its standing since 1985 as the world's largest debtor nation, with borrowings from abroad of more than $700 billion.

"Because of the tight fiscal constraints, we are not in a position to put a lot of resources to deal with economic problems," Mr. Hamilton said. "What does this mean for U.S. foreign policy? It seems to me the baton is passing to other nations better able to provide financing than we are."

"While I don't think the baton is passing, I do have to agree with you" on the financing issue. Mr. Brady said, "It is a serious worry. I have to agree with you."

Departing from the usual Washington criticism of Japan, Mr. Brady went out of his way to praise Tokyo for putting $5.5 billion behind the administration's debt-relief package for developing countries. The United States has been unable to commit any funds.

"We wouldn't be where we are now without the help they've given," Mr. Brady said. But he criticized West Germany, among countries with large trade surpluses, for declining so far to commit any funds to the debt-reduction plan, which was endorsed last weekend by the summit leaders, including Bonn.

Along the same line, Mr. Brady said it "bothers" him that the United States must turn to the World Bank and the private banking system "to do the foreign aid job" once assumed by the U.S. government.

"After [U.S. funds for] the Middle East, there is very little left to do the kind of growth-oriented programs we should be financing" overseas, he said. Mr. Brady said commercial banks and the World Bank must make loans so that eventually "they get their money back," which he said means they might not necessarily be financing the kind of development programs most likely to lead to long-term growth in the recipient countries.

Mr. Brady conceded the shortcoming of President Bush's limited aid program for Poland that was announced during his visit there last week.

Of the $5 billion in proposed rescheduling of Polish debts this year, a central part of the Bush aid package, Mr. Brady said it could be "subject to a lot of questions in terms of the amount of hard money" it produces. Overall, the six-part Bush package fell far short of the hopes of Polish leaders.

Addressing in his testimony a key summit issue of improving the global environment, Mr. Brady also acknowledged that President Bush felt constrained in "pushing hard" to form a consensus for adopting uniform goals and regulations on such issues as protecting the ozone layer and reducing global warming.

Mr. Brady said he was "encouraged" by the environmental commitment of the summit nations but "disappointed" by the lack of firm decision-making.

"If you push too hard . . . the other countries remind you that they all have different regimes and there is no one sure way to proceed," he said. "We do it one way, and that way is not necessarily the way they do it."

The United States committed no funds to clean up the environment, and the summit, while calling for "decisive action," adopted no common goals for reducing pollution.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this heavy external borrowing put control of significant elements of our own economy in the hands of foreign investors. Today our interest rates—and this is the point the Senator from Tennessee made and I want to make this point and one other and then I will conclude—are increasingly determined not by the Federal Reserve, but by the attitudes of foreign investors toward the U.S. economy.

At the moment those attitudes are positive and a lot of people say, "Well, you see, they are willing to send their money here. What is the problem?" They are willing to put in the money; they are funding these large deficits. What difference does it make?

Investor attitudes can change very quickly, and a shift in investor confidence could throw the U.S. economy quickly into recession.

Second, even if they are willing to send it in, that is a claim on the future generation. It is going to come back out of our standard of living in the future. It is going to have to be paid, and to that extent what could otherwise have been our standard of living is going to be lowered from what we might otherwise have achieved.

We have seen the power of international investment in the area of the dollar. Recently, despite Government agreements to stabilize the dollar, the international capital markets pushed its value upward, jeopardizing the turnaround in the U.S trade. This trade deficit may worsen significantly because of the depreciation of the currency. The moral of all of that is in the weakness of our Government's policy to influence investment decisions.

It is interesting what has happened is that the U.S. need for extensive international borrowing has made us dependent on foreign trade.

There is a marvelous line by Blanche DuBois, in Tennessee Williams' play, where she talks about being dependent upon "the kindness of strangers." Dependent upon the kindness of strangers in my view in not an appropriate position for the world's largest economy and the historic leader of the Western alliance to find itself. Unfortunately, that is the case and we need to recognize this. We need to come to grips with this.

The Senator has been trying to do that, and he is a very able and effective leader of the Budget Committee. We need to address this international situation, and we need to address the importance of investments here at home.

It is now being proposed to have a capital gains tax break when we have a deficit that we want to reduce. With this enormous deficit facing us that we need to get down, why is it being talked about to give a further tax break to the highly advantaged? Not only to do we have a deficit to reduce, but I am frank to tell you I think it is clear that we are not making certain investments in the future strength of our economy that are essential: Education, health, research and development, and the Nation's physical infrastructure.

At what point are people finally going to say we have to do something about these bridges that are collapsing, about these water systems that are deteriorating. In some of our large cities it is estimated that a third to a half of the water supply is lost because of deteriorated infrastructure of the water system. We have roads that need repair. We have airports that are overcrowded and people cannot move around the country. That all comes out of our productivity. If you spend an hour and half sitting in a car unable to move or 3 hours in an airport because of the breakdown of the transportation system, that is time wasted that could otherwise have been producing.

The other countries are doing it. We need to wake up to what is happening because the other countries are doing it, and they are gaining a competitive advantage. They are strengthing their economies. They are investing in the education of their young people, bringing them up to a high level of skill. They are addressing the health needs of their people.

This is a chart on research and development, nondefense research and development. If there is anything that is going to keep you at the cutting edge of a modern economy, it is research and development, particularly, in my judgment, nondefense research and development. Look at this. This is 1971. This is a percentage of gross national product. This is the United States, Japan, West Germany. In 1971, there was some difference but not that much difference amongst the three countries in the investment in research and development.

I do not think I have to make the case as to why that is an important investment. You are going to really stay ahead in the high technology of the modern world.

Look at what has happended. The United States has, in effect, moved almost on a level basis. Japan and West Germany have put a significantly larger percentage of their GNP into research and development. Japan in particular now has moved to the very top there, then West Germany, and then the United States. Look at that gap on the far side of that chart between our investment in nondefense research and development compared with Japan and West Germany.

These charts tell an important lesson. There is an important lesson that lies behind those charts and this budget document that the Senator has been wrestling with all year where he tries to hold on to some of these important priorities in order to build the strength of America's economy in the future.

The Senator has been absolutely on target in recognizing that if we fail to make certain investments in education, in research and development, in improving our Nation's transportation network, our communications network, tomorrow's economy is not going to be stronger. Tomorrow's economy will be weaker.

By every measurement we have completely neglected the Nation's physical infrastructure: The road network, the rail network, the air network, our ports, our water and sewer systems, the basic infrastructure you need for the private sector to do its job.

We have always had this complementary relationship between the public and the private sector and that is breaking down. The private sector cannot do its job if the truck is tied up for 4 hours on the streets and it cannot move through in order to deliver the goods. What does that do to your productivity and your efficiency?

The same thing is happening with respect to air. It is in every city in the country now. That system is so overloaded it is not working anymore. People know that. They experience it every day. They can see it right in front of their eyes.

We take these comparative scores on educational achievement at the high school level. We are lagging behind. That was one of the focuses at Charlottesville at the education summit. But we got no action program out of that in order to try to come to terms with it.

So I simply close, Mr. President, by thanking the very able and distinguished Senator from Tennessee for the leadership he has exercised on this budget issue. He has tried to move us in the direction of the important priorities. He has tried to keep this reconciliation measure on target in terms of what its focus should be so that it is not simply all over the lot, everyone trying to put their pet project on a very important measure.

This is the final piece in this budget effort. The budget effort itself needs to be taken to a new level, which I know the Senator is concerned about doing in the coming year. But we ought not to be playing games with this reconciliation measure. It ought not to be a 1,400-page document out here dealing with everything you can imagine, including now, apparently, this proposal to try to tack a capital gains provision on this measure as well.

We need to come to terms with these serious economic problems. The ordinary person has not yet felt the brunt of these trends. But, looking ahead, the warning flag ought to be flying and we ought to be concerned to remedy these trends. The Senator from Tennessee has been trying very hard to do that. But if we fail to do it, we are going to find ourselves mortgaged to others in the future, dependent upon the kindness of strangers, and we are not going to be able to exert our world leadership.

I think it is important. People say, well, what difference does it make? I think it is important for the United States to be able to exercise its world leadership responsibilities. I think that the United States in the post-World War II period has exercised that leadership, generally speaking, in a beneficient manner. It has brought a breadth to the vision of the world that has seen our own advancement as part of the advancement of others. In other words, we have not treated it as a zero sum game where we get ahead and others fall behind. We have come at it from the point of view that, well, let us improve it for everyone. Let us have an open international trading economy that everyone will benefit from. Let us have a general rise in living standards not only in this country but elsewhere in the world. And that, in fact, our best chance for a peaceful and prosperous world, to be able to enjoy that, is if others are also moving up as well.

So I think we have exercised that leadership well. But we are losing the wherewithal with which to be the leaders. You cannot be the leaders and be this large debtor nation. And we have to come to grips with that.

I commend the Senator from Tennessee for his effort to try to do that. I strongly support him in the stand he has taken, trying to turn back and away from this reconciliation measure all of the favorite sort of pet projects one or another Member of this body may have. This is serious business and we need to be serious about it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me for about 30 seconds?

Mr. CHAFEE. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Maryland for his kind remarks regarding the Senator from Tennessee. One of the joys of serving here in this body is being able to associate with individuals with the intellectual capacity and energy of our distinguished colleague from Maryland. I commend and congratulate him for the very perceptive message that he has brought today to the U.S. Senate. I thank my colleague from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Senator for his gracious remarks, and I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for yielding.

THE STRATOSPHERIC OZONE AND CLIMATE PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, numerous committees on both sides of the Capitol have held hearing after hearing on the problems of global climate change and similar hearings on the destruction of the ozone layer. In the not too distant future it is my hope that the Senate will have the opportunity to actually do something about these problems.

The vehicle to do this would be legislation that has been labeled the Stratospheric Ozone and Climate Protection Act of 1989. Perhaps it is not possible that this legislation will survive in connection with this reconciliation measure. If that is so, so be it. It may be that a general effort to strip legislation that is not directly connected with reducing the deficit from the budget will succeed. I will not argue with that effort. But I certainly do hope that we are able to bring this legislation before the Senate before the conclusion of this year.

Now what am I talking about? I am talking about an issue that I believe is extremely important for everybody in the United States to understand.

This legislation, the Stratospheric Ozone and Climate Protection Act, does the following: It focuses on the control of chlorofluorocarbons, known as CFC's. These are manmade chemicals that have been identified as being responsible for the destruction of the ozone layer. CFC's are persistent, extremely stable chemicals that rise up from 6 to 20 miles, reaching the stratosphere. In the stratosphere, the Sun's ultraviolet radiation breaks the molecule apart and frees the chlorine component.

The chlorine component, then, attacks and destroys the ozone layer that is there.

What is this ozone layer? Why do we spend so much time worrying about it? The ozone layer is the Earth's main shield against ultraviolet radiation. A decrease in the stratospheric ozone, this layer, allows more of this radiation to come through onto the Earth.

The experts tell us that the abundance of this, the excess that comes through, that is normally prevented by the ozone layer, but will come through as the ozone layer is destroyed, increases the rates of skin disease, skin cancer rates in humans, it increases cataracts, it potentially destroys the immune suppression system that all of us have in our bodies, and it makes us susceptible to all types of diseases. That is the effect on humans: On the cataracts, on the suppressive system, on skin cancer.

But that is not all. It also presents a serious threat to our food crops and to all forms of life on land and in the seas.

Most of us are familiar with this connection, that CFC's destroy the ozone layer. But there is another destructive element to CFC's and that is in connection with the global climate change that is predicted to occur as a result of an intensified greenhouse effect.

What is the greenhouse effect? The threat of uncontrolled global climate change is caused by the accelerating accumulation of certain gases in the atmosphere and these gases are carbon dioxide, they are chlorofluorocarbons, and they are methane.

These gases, when they get into the atmosphere, act as a thermal blanket around the Earth and they trap within the Earth's atmosphere the heat that is there. In other words, the sun pours heat down on the Earth and the Earth reflects it up and it dissipates and thus keeps the globe at a relatively normal, constant temperature.

When this blanket is wrapped around the Earth that prevents the heat from escaping, then we have what is known as the greenhouse effect. Obviously, if the heat can get in but it cannot get out, the Earth warms up.

What are these gases? Carbon dioxide is the worst offender. That is estimated to cause about 50 percent of the global warming.

CFC's are estimated to account for 15 to 20 percent of this warming. But, each molecule of CFC has approximately 20,000 times more impact on global climate than does a single molecule of carbon dioxide.

One might say, if that is true, then, how come carbon dioxide is responsible for 50 percent of the global warming? That comes about because there are many more molecules of carbon dioxide released than there are of CFC's. Furthermore, we can see that just a slight increase of the CFC's does tremendous destructive damage and causes the greenhouse effect. On the other hand, if we can reduce the CFC's, just keep working on pulling them down, then each step in that direction is extraordinarily important in our efforts to overcome the greenhouse effect.

Why are we worried about the greenhouse effect? What does it mean to our world? The statistics are extraordinarily interesting and alarming. An increase, with this global warming effect; in the global average temperature of 2.7 to 9.9 degrees Fahrenheit over the next 40 to 60 years is anticipated.

Let me say that again. Roughly an increase from 3 degrees to 10 degreees Fahrenheit over the next 40 to 60 years is estimated to occur, will occur, due to these gases, these greenhouse gases that are in the atmosphere.

What does an increase of 3 to 10 degrees Fahrenheit mean? Let us compare it to what has happened in the history of the globe. In the past 10,000 years the temperature has only increased by 3 degrees in 10,000 years. We foresee that the temperature will increase by 3 to 10 degrees in the next 40 to 60 years.

This means nature just cannot adjust to this, this rapidly. It is impossible to do so. The extinction of numerous species of plants and animals and a significant interference with nature's evolutionary responses will occur.

Reduced soil moisture content and altered storm patterns will seriously disrupt the agriculture of our Nation and the agriculture of every nation in the world.

A rise in sea level of 1 to 4 feet over the next 60 years will occur, and a continuing sea level rise in the succeeding years.

It is easy to overstate the uncertainty that surrounds this issue. A lot of people will say: Prove it. It is true that scientists disagree on these matters. They disagree whether the greenhouse effect has actually started. There is no scientific consensus about the precise timing of these changes. They can argue whether it is 3 degrees or 10 degrees or 7 degrees; they can argue whether it is going to happen in 40 years or 50 years or 60 years. Nevertheless, there is a remarkable degree of scientific consensus concerning the massive threat that is posed by uncontrolled global climate change.

Specifically, most experts agree if we do not change our pattern of polluting the atmosphere, many of us, our children and our grandchildren, will experience devastating climate changes of a magnitude and at a rate that will preclude natural evolutionary responses. In other words, nature will just not be able to respond quickly enough.

There is consensus on another point. By the time there is scientific proof for every detail of this problem, when we can get all the scientists to agree, and that is going to take quite a while and will be a massive undertaking—when they do agree it will be too late. It will be too late to avoid the most devastating impacts of an intensified greenhouse effect and of the global climate changes.

So we just cannot wait another 10 years and have more research to decide to do something. We must move immediately to reduce the atmospheric concentration of these greenhouse gases that I mentioned: carbon dioxide, CFC's, methane. At the same time we must implement additional strategies for coping with the changes that have already taken place or will take place.

I get back to CFC's. CFC's, as I say, are the cause of the destruction of the ozone layer. They contribute 15 to 20 percent of the greenhouse effect. So, if there is one gas that we ought to attack immediately, that is it.

That does not mean we should not try to reduce the carbon dioxide emissions or the methane emissions. But by reducing the CFC's we get a double effect. We solve the ozone layer problem and we reduce the greenhouse gases.

Under the leadership of the U.N. Environment Program called UNEP, we have made an excellent start in connection with CFC's reduction. In September 1987 the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer was negotiated and it was signed by more than two dozen nations. It was a remarkable achievement. The protocol entered into force in January of this year, and more than 30 nations are now parties to the protocol.

Unfortunately, since this was negotiated in 1987, scientists have observed and measured losses of ozone on a global scale. In other words, we knew then what was happening over the Antarctic, but now we have been seeing it all over the world.

It has been discovered that destruction of the ozone layer is not limited to these remote sections of the Antarctic that we are familiar with. Equally alarming are reports from the Antarctica, reports showing this year's hole in the ozone layer now covers 10 million square miles. The expectation is that the severity of ozone loss over the Antarctic this year will match the disaster of 1987.

In other words, this is a cumulative process, it is getting worse and worse. In 1987, measurements revealed losses greater than 50 percent of the total ozone column and greater than 95 percent between the altitude of 15 to 20 kilometers; that is in the 9 to 12 miles up from the Earth.

(Mr. ROCKEFELLER assumed the chair.)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, measurements of actual ozone loss over Antarctica and across the entire globe are significantly greater than the computer models predicted. These measurements raise serious questions about the adequacy of the control measures that were agreed upon in Montreal in 1987, and they really question whether our existing EPA regulations are sufficient.

There are six main elements to this act that I am so interested in and that I am urging upon the Senate.

First, this act establishes a national policy that the production and use of five of the most destructive CFC's, which are CFC 11, 12 113, 114, and 115, the halons and carbon tetrachloride should be reduced and eliminated as expeditiously as possible. That is the national policy that is set forth in this act.

It directs the Administrator to implement a phaseout schedule to control, reduce, and eliminate production of CFC's more rapidly than the schedule set forth. We shall do this if new information suggests such accelerated schedule may be necessary. We shall do it if the Administrator determines, based on the availability of substitutes, that an accelerated schedule is attainable, or, three, if the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer is modified to include a schedule that is more stringent than the act I am discussing.

Second, subject to acceleration by the Administrator, as outlined above, the act places the five most destructive CFC's that I previously referred to on a production phasedown schedule. In other words, using 1986 as a base, the Montreal protocol says we must reach a 20-percent reduction by 1993 and a 50-percent reduction based on the 1986 figures; 50 percent of that must be reduced by 1998. There is an additional step: Virtual elimination of these five most dangerous CFC's by the year 2000.

Third, the Montreal protocol only freezes production of halons and does not regulate carbon tetrachloride, but these are powerful ozone depleters. This act puts those chemicals on the same phaseout schedule as the five most dangerous CFC's I referred to before.

Fourth, where the Montreal protocol will allow unlimited production and use of other less potent ozone depleting chemicals and, in turn, continue the threat to the ozone layer, the Montreal protocol does not deal with these other substitutes that are also ozone depleters. This act puts a limit on the production and use of those.

Fifth, the act includes a supplement to the production phaseout. This is extremely important. All through the refrigerators of the United States, through the cooling systems currently are CFC's and the worst thing that could happen is that these be released into the atmosphere. So this act significantly reduces these emissions by requiring that they must be recaptured and destroyed in a fashion that will not release them into the atmosphere. That is what we call overcoming the practice of venting these chemicals. The venting of these chemicals will be prohibited by January 1, 1992.

EPA is directed to promulgate standards for control of emissions to the lowest achievable rate and for the use of alternative substances.

The sixth part of this act is as follows: Twelve months after it becomes law, importing into the United States of the five most destructive CFC's, of halons, of carbon tetrachloride in bulk or in products will be prohibited unless EPA certifies that the country of origin, in other words, where these CFC's are coming from or where they have been used, for instance, to clean microchips in computers, the EPA must certify that the country that is shipping those into the United States has embarked on a phaseout and a regulatory program of its own.

Mr. President, it is extremely important that we eliminate these chemicals as quickly as possible. We have seen projections that a 3- to 5-year delay in the phaseout of these chemicals means that for the next 20 or 30 years, there will be elevated chlorine levels in the atmosphere. In other words, it takes a long time, some 10 to 12 years, for these chemicals to work their way up into the atmosphere. So that if we stop everything right now, those CFC's that have previously been vented by the destruction of an air conditioner in an automobile, for example—I think we have all seen when the air-conditioner is not working properly, the mechanic just vents the gases that are in there. That is releasing these CFR's. When an old refrigerator is thrown in a dump and the tractor runs over it as it is buried, the CFC's are released. Those CFC's that are released now and that were released 10 years ago have not yet caused their destruction. They are on their way upward. The sooner we stop this the better. It does not do any good for anybody to say, "Well, what is the hurry?"

I do not know whether the Chair is familiar with the famous French marshal, Marshal Loti who was in North Africa with his gardener looking over the garden and they were planting a century tree. The marshal was quite anxious to have it planted and the gardener said, "Well, what is the hurry? It will not bloom or for a hundred years." The response of Marshal Loti was, "Then plant it now." The same applies to the CFC problem. Now is the time to do something about it.

As introduced, my bill would have phased these chemicals out totally by the year 1997. The latest version of the bill has an absolute deadline, no question, by the year 2000. But I think we can do a lot better than that.

We had meetings with all sorts of parties that are interested in this, that are seeking substitutes, but they just say they cannot do it. I would like to see these chemicals eliminated not by the year 2000, not by the year 1997, but by the year 1995, and we ought to direct our energies in that direction.

This bill is structured to force reductions and eliminations as soon as possible. The producers have testified that they intend to eliminate the chemicals by the year 2000. They can meet that goal. I think we can do better. That is the goal the President set, but I think our goal, our ambitions have to be loftier than that.

By waiting for measurements of actual ozone loss, by failing to take appropriate action on the basis of credible, undisputed scientific theory, governments around the world have allowed this major environmental threat that would have been manageable had we tackled it earlier. Now it has become an environmental crisis.

It is hard to think that we originally started wrestling with this matter before I came to the Senate. I believe it was around 1972 that freon in the freon cans were abolished; in other words, CFC's is cans, freon cans, such as dispensable shaving cream, no longer were CFC's permitted in those cans starting in 1972 in this country. If we kept up that head of steam, we would have found substitutes, just as substitutes were found in those dispensing cans.

So our challenge is to take action as rapidly as possible to reduce the threat of additional damage to the ozone layer, to reduce the rate and magnitude of human-induced global climate change.

There has been a great deal of misinformation circulating about the legislation I am discussing. I will just mention three of the points that are raised in criticism of it. First, some say it is a new bill; we are rushing into this; we ought to take our time; where did you get this from anyway? It has come out of nowhere.

I first introduced this legislation in February 1987, nearly 3 years ago, and again I introduced it in this Congress, in March of this year. Since we introduced it, in the Environment Committee we have held 6 days of hearings, the most recent being May 19 of this year. We received testimony from all affected parties and numerous scientific experts. It has been a very open process and nobody can complain we are rushing into this.

Second, some suggest that this bill bans the production of the alternatives known as HCFC's, hydrochlorofluorocarbons. People say you ban those. We have not banned them. That is nonsense. The controls in this bill will allow HCFC production to grow for a while, at the same time bringing the chlorine concentrations in the atmosphere back down to the 1985 levels is our goal.

Third, this bill was approved in the Environment Committee by a vote of 13 to 0 on July 21. It seems to me, Mr. President, as Members of the Senate we are in a unique position to make a difference for the sake of our children and all future generations. I believe we have a responsibility to leave this wonderful globe we are riding around on at least as clean and as healthy as we found it, and hopefully better. The time has come to stop abusing Mother Earth.

The Stratospheric Ozone and Climate Protection Act of 1989, the bill I have been discussing, offers us an opportunity to make an extremely positive contribution to the betterment of the world. There is no question that this legislation breaks bold new ground. As stated in a letter being circulated by environmental groups in support of this legislation, "Enactment of this bill is the first concrete action Congress can take to reduce the two global threats of ozone depletion and greenhouse effect." So I urge all my colleagues to support it when it comes before the Senate for a vote.

In conclusion, I remind everyone about a bit of graffiti that I saw. It seems to sum it all up. It said, "Be nice to the Earth. Good planets are hard to find."

I hope we will all remember that and do everything we personally can to make this world, its environment, a better place.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 12:09 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, without amendment:

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GORTON (for himself and Mr. HEINZ):

S. 1751. A bill to prohibit the use of refrigerated motor vehicles for the transportation of solid waste, to prohibit the use of cargo tanks in providing motor vehicle transportation of food and hazardous materials, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SAFE TRANSPORTATION OF FOOD ACT

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, today, I am introducing Senate companion legislation to H.R. 3386, the Safe Transportation of Food Act introduced by Congressman CLINGER of Pennsylvania. I congratulate Congressman CLINGER for introducing this measure and for already participating in a hearing on this important issue. I hope that my colleagues in the Senate will also appreciate the urgency in this matter and will act expeditiously.

I was appalled to read reports, first detailed in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer that some trucking companies are alternately hauling chemicals and edible liquids such as fruit juices or cooking oils in the same tanker trucks. What is worse, this practice is legal. While trucking firms could be charged under the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act if adulteration of food occurs, this law offers the consumer very little real protection. It is simply not good enough to rely on our ability to detect contamination after-the-fact. The risk is too great.

Mr. President, there are really two risks here. First and foremost, there is a genuine health risk to consumers—a longstanding concern of mine. And second, if we do not move promptly to eliminate this risk, we may also diminish consumer confidence in the safety of American food, and in government's ability to insure that safety. On behalf of consumers and producers, we must do better.

The bill I am introducing today would prohibit the transport of food in a cargo tank which has been used to transport a hazardous material or hazardous waste. It would also prohibit the transport of solid waste in a refrigerated motor vehicle. I recognize that this will be a costly requirement, but it is a price we must pay—consumers must have confidence that the food they eat is safe.

During the last several months, the Washington State Department of Agriculture has conducted a tanker truck investigation. I quote from an October 3 statement from the Department: "My investigation of the June 5, 1989 trucker complaint on Valley Express DBA Premium Tanker Transport in Yakima, WA, confirms foods and chemicals are being hauled in the same tankers intrastate, interstate, and internationally. Tanker cleaning practices are varied and of questionable sufficiency and there is a shortage of suitable cleaning facilities available."

Mr. President, during the last few weeks we have heard tales of truck drivers being told to put drops of deodorant or chlorine in a tank after a washout to mask odors, we have heard of falsified washing reports, and we have documented reports of tanks hauling waste automotive oil one way and palm oil the other. These are not isolated events. They have been shown to be happening nationwide.

Food safety is simply too important to be left solely up to an individual operator's conscience. My bill will direct the Secretary of Transportation to develop regulations to ensure that liquid foods and liquid chemicals will no longer be hauled in the same truck. In this way, we can assure both safety to food, and confidence to consumers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill appear in the record following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1751

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, Senator GORTON, Congressman CLINGER and I are introducing today, legislation to ban the practice of backhauling garbage in refrigerated food trucks and to ban backhauling of chemicals in food carrying tank trucks.

The practice of backhauling is simply this: when food goods are transported in one direction, instead of returning with empty trucks to the point of origin, transporters use their food trucks to haul back garbage or chemicals. The reason why backhauling has become so commonplace is for the simple reason that solid waste refuge has grown in alarming proportions.

The proliferation of trash is causing a landfill capacity crisis around the country. At present, 75 percent of our garbage is deposited in landfills, while 11 percent is recycled and 13 percent is burned in waste-to-energy plants. In less than 8 years, more than half of our existing landfills will close. As landfills reach capacity and close, pressure mounts in large trash producing areas to transport their trash to other areas.

A few years ago, backhauling began as landfills in the east reached their capacity and had to turn west in order to find empty landfills. Many truckers thus began backhauling trash on their return route instead of returning home empty. However, the problem is not solely interstate, but intrastate as well. In my home State of Pennsylvania, 57 of our 67 counties send waste to other counties for disposal. While in itself, intrastate transportation of trash is not alarming, the practice of backhauling trash and chemicals in refrigerated food trucks is cause for concern.

In my own State of Pennsylvania, my constituents recall too well the crash of a refrigerated food truck on Interstate 80 near Clearfield, PA. When the State police opened it, they had to run for cover because a cloud of noxious, visible fumes rolled past the doors and into their faces. The methane gas was a byproduct of the truck's load: baled garbage. Mr. President, that truck's previous load had been produce hauled into New York City's supermarket's.

Some will argue that backhauling is necessary in the competitive environment of trucking deregulation. Backhauling lowers prices for consumers through the more efficient use of transportation. Prior to deregulation, trucks returned with empty cargoes which adds to the cost of transporting goods. But, Mr. President, isn't it ironic that when you buy food goods at a lower price, you pay the higher price of the uncertainty that those goods may have been transported in containers that carried garbage or chemicals.

It is with this concern that we introduce the Safe Food Transportation Act of 1989. This legislation will do four things, Mr. President:

Ban the hauling of garbage in refrigerated food trucks.

Ban the hauling of consumable foods in tanker trucks that have been used to ship hazardous liquids.

Instruct the Secretary of Transportation to undertake a study of the hauling of garbage in dry vans that are used to transport food to the marketplace.

Require the Department of Transportation to draft regulations within 180 days after enactment of the bill.

Mr. President, I have come before this body many times to introduce legislation to reduce the proliferation of solid waste. I have warned my colleagues that the growth of trash and its derivatives will cause numerous problems in the present and near future. Backhauling is a prime example of this growing problem and its condition.●

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 1752. A bill to exclude the Social Security trust funds from the deficit calculation and to extend the target date for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings through fiscal year 1997; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

SOCIAL SECURITY TRUTH IN BUDGETING ACT

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, Today I rise to introduce what I think is the most important piece of legislation that we could enact to deal with that, entitled "The Social Security Truth in Budgeting Act."

Mr. President, my proposal is straightforward. It is to the point. It takes the Social Security trust fund out of this annual deficit deception game we play and ensures our commitment to current and future retirees. My proposal simply makes it clear, perfectly clear, as we might say, that using Social Security surplus funds to reduce the deficit is bad budget policy and we are not going to do it anymore.

There are three principal reasons why the Social Security Truth in Budgeting Act is not only appropriate but primary to any discussion involving the reduction of the deficit. I trust that, as I review these three points, the sense of urgency that I feel will become clear to all our colleagues.

First, absent the Heinz approach that I will enumerate, Congress will continue its practice of clandestine borrowing from the trust fund reserves to mask the true size of our national debt and allow that debt to keep spiraling. It is time for the Congress to admit to itself and, more importantly, to the American people that postponing tough choices does not make them any less painful to make.

With the passage of the Social Security Truth in Budgeting Act I propose, we will have replaced our practices of deceptive budgeting with Financial honesty, and I believe that is what the American public wants and certainly deserves from the Congress.

Second, my legislation honors our obligation to protect the Social Security trust fund for current and future retirees. When Pesident Roosevelt signed the Social Security Act to law some 54 years ago, he sealed a compact between Government and the public. Yet, Congress is now undermining the very spirit of this compact and risks defaulting on its obligation through the annual misapplication of trust fund reserves.

The problem is, of course, that the surpluses we apply toward the deficit today are owed to the retirees of the future. It is the responsibility of this body and of the Congress to ensure that when the baby boomers reach retirement age, beginning around the year 2015 or 2020, that they receive the benefits that they are paying for and to which they are entitled.

I ask any of my colleagues who doubt the necessity of this legislation to tell me where are we going to get the $9.6 trillion in current dollars that we are going to owe to today's beneficiaries of the year 2020 when we get there in the year 2020. $9.6 trillion. If the trust fund is not protected, the Government will have to slash benefits or hike taxes through the roof or borrow from the public on a literally unimaginable scale.

A third reason why this legislation is approprite to any discussion of deficit reduction is the issue of interest on the national debt. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was a commitment to reduce Government borrowing, and thus simultaneously reduce interest paid out on Government debt. But our current use of Social Security reserves simply replaces one form of borrowing with another. Instead of reducing the interest burden on the Government, we are adding to it.

Right now we are spending about 25 cents out of every dollar in general revenues just to pay interest on the national debt. If we continue to borrow and spend Social Security reserves as we do today, by the year 2000, just 10 years from now, we will be spending about 60 cents of every revenue dollar just to pay interest.

The legislation I am introducing today will remove the Social Security Trust Fund from the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings calculations immediately and halt the use of the OASDI Trust Fund from being used to cut the national deficit. This will be achieved, first, by adjusting the current Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets upward by an amount equal to the current CBO estimate of the OASDI surplus for fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993.

Mr. President, second, extends the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets through fiscal year 1997. There would be no additional fiscal impact from fiscal years 1990 through 1993; in other words, changing the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets upward by the amount of the anticipated OASDI surplus will not cause Congress to have to cut additional spending or raise additional revenues in fiscal years 1990 through 1993.

And, third, once our Social Security Trust Funds are taken off budget, it is important that they remain fully protected. Therefore, this proposal would retain the equivalent Gramm-Rudman-Hollings 60-vote point of order before any legislation may be considered to use any of the Social Security surplus funds beyond the purposes of current law.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues' support for a plan that would ensure future retiree benefits. It is this Senator's view that every day we postpone removing the trust fund, the more difficult and intimidating the task will become. The day of reckoning for honest budgeting cannot be postponed for future generations. That day is today. I ask my colleagues to consider this proposal as a pledge to honest budgeting and a healthy economy.

Mr. President, it is time for Congress to admit to itself, and more importantly, the American public, that postponing tough choices doesn't make them less painful to make. There is no question that the legislation I am offering today forces us to continue for several years more to make the difficult decisions required to continue to reduce the deficit down to a balance between revenues and spending.

But we will have replaced our practices of deceptive budgeting with financial honesty, and I believe that is what the American public wants and deserves from Congress.

Second, my legislation honors our obligation to protect the Social Security trust fund for current and future retirees. When President Roosevelt signed the Social Security Act into law 54 years ago, he sealed a compact between Government and the public. Yet Congress now undermines the very spirit of this compact and risks defaulting on its obligation through misapplication of trust fund reserves.

The problem, of course, is that the surpluses we apply toward the deficit today are owed to retirees in the future. It is the responsibility of Congress to ensure that when the baby boomers reach retirement age—around the year 2020—they receive the benefits to which they are entitled. According to intermediate projections in the 1989 Social Security Board of Trustees Report, in 2020 the balance of the old age survivors disability income [OASDI] trust fund will be $9.6 trillion in current dollars. These combined trust funds are estimated to become exhausted in the year 2046.

If we continue to pillage these trust funds, I ask my colleagues who oppose me to tell me where we will get the $9.6 trillion that will be owed to beneficiaries. If the trust fund is not protected, the Government will have to slash benefits, raise taxes, or borrow still more from the public.

There is some irony that Congress saved the Social Security goose 5 years ago only now to melt down the golden egg. In 1983, the Bipartisan Commission on Social Security Reform, organized by President Reagan and chaired by Alan Greenspan, crafted the rescue of the then-troubled program. The short-term crisis was resolved and the trust fund reserves began to grow. By using these funds as we are, we undo what the Commission has done, and push the program back to a precipice of disaster.

A third reason why this legislation is appropriate to any discussion of deficit reduction is the issue of interest. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was a commitment to reduce Government borrowing and thus simultaneously reduce interest paid out on Government debt. Our current use of Social Security reserves simply replaces one form of borrowing with another. Instead of reducing the interest burden on the Government, we are adding to it.

The numbers speak for themselves, we already pay out more than 40 cents of every dollar of our non-Social Security revenues just to make interest payments on this debt. If we continue to postpone honest reduction effort, by the year 2000 as much as 60 cents of every such dollar will be required to cover interest due.

And, of course, there will be far less available to finance the responsibilities of general government: the investment we make each year in education, training, health, and the readiness of our Armed Forces. A dollar committed to interest payments is a dollar that will never help educate a single child, train one dislocated worker or find a cure for AIDS or cancer.

It is important to note that the Social Security Trust in Budgeting Act requires that interest paid to the OASDI trust fund be shown in our Federal budget in the same fashion as other interest. Only by accurately accounting for all OASDI interest payments will we know both what our actual deficit is and how much or little we have to spend to meet Government's many other responsibilities. We must also recognize the benefits that would be realized by the Social Security Trust in Budgeting Act which I propose, not just the adverse consequences of our failure to enact it.

One extraordinary benefit is that we would be able to buy in the entire publicly held portion of the national debt by the year 2007. The Treasury no longer would be competing with the private sector and borrowing in increasing amounts from abroad, while driving up interest rates at home. The cost of borrowing for a house, and automobile, or starting or expanding a business would shrink dramatically. Instead of being locked into refinance an ever-increasing burden of government debt, vast amounts of savings would be freed for investment in job creation and industry. Virtually every economist agrees that the United States would be able to enjoy an unparalleled period of prosperity.

Mr. President, I have addressed our colleagues on this issue before. I was pleased that on May 3, 1989, the Senate passed a resolution which I introduced with Senator MOYNIHAN and Senator HATCH to restore truth and accuracy to the budget process by removing the Social Security trust fund from our calculations. I offered in support of that resolution the findings of the National Economic Commission. In fact, the only recommendation that the National Economic Commission agreed on was that the Social Security fund should be removed from the annual Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction game.

The legislation I am introducing today will remove the Social Security trust fund from GRH calculations immediately and halt the use of the OASDI trust fund from being used to cut the national deficit.

This will be achieved by:

First, adjusting the current GRH targets upward by an amount equal to the current CBO estimate of the OASDI surplus for fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993. There would be no additional fiscal impact in fiscal year 1990 to 1993. In other words, changing the GRH targets will not cause Congress to have to cut additional spending or raise additional revenues in fiscal year 1990 to 1993;

Second, by extending the GRH targets through fiscal year 1997. This will give Congress the additional time needed to reduce the larger indicated deficit in manageable increments of about $25 billion per year, as under current law;

Third, once the OASDI trust funds are taken off the budget, it is important that they are fully protected. Therefore, this proposal would retain the equivalent GRH 60 vote point of order before legislation may be considered to use any of the Social Security surplus funds; and Finally, this legislation specifies that all payments to the OASDI trust fund from general revenues, including interest, will be recorded as outlays in the budget of the United States.

I urge my colleagues' support for a plan that would ensure future retiree benefits. Every day we postpone removing the trust fund, the more difficult and intimidating the task will become.

The day of reckoning for honest budgeting cannot be postponed for future generations. That day is today and I ask my colleagues to carefully consider this proposal as a pledge to honest budgeting and a healthy economy.

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 1753. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to restore income averaging for qualified farmers; to the Committee on Finance.

RESTORING INCOME AVERAGING FOR QUALIFIED FARMERS

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today with Senator PRYOR I am introducing a bill to restore income averaging for America's farmers and timber owners. Income averaging for tax purposes is invaluable for America's farmers and timber owners because their livelihood is subject to economic and natural forces far greater than those faced by any other sector of American business. Farmers are subject to weather causing dramatic changes in the crops they can produce. Their livelihood is also subject to commodity prices that vary widely over a short period of time. Because of these forces beyond their control, few other taxpayers are subject to such volatile swings in income from year to year.

In my view the 1986 Tax Reform Act moved in the wrong direction when it repealed income averaging for farmers and timber owners. Income averaging was repealed because the change to only two income tax rates—15 percent and 28 percent—most taxpayers are subject to the same tax rates on their income in each year. Unfortunately for farmers, this premise does not hold true.

Many farmers earn nothing in a bad year but can earn $50,000 in a good year. And they see that pattern repeated over and over again. In the good years they will be subject to the 28-percent tax rate even though their average income taking into account the good years and the bad years would not be subject to that rate.

Yet, the income tax that an average salaried worker with a family would pay on the same average income could be less than one-half of the income tax that the farm family in our example would have to pay. The family farmer is treated unfairly only because of the volatility of his income.

The Baucus legislation which I am pleased to introduce provides that farmers will have the right to average their incomes in future years as they were allowed to do through 1986. To target assistance to small- and medium-sized farmers; this amendment limits the use of income averaging to those farmers whose annual sales are less than $5 million.

I urge that the legislation be passed.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

NATIONAL BIBLE WEEK

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise to call my colleagues' attention to the approach of National Bible Week, which this year is slated for November 19 through 25. This 49th annual observance of National Bible Week is in the best American tradition. Its inspiration and sponsorship are from the grassroots, and, from its inception, this celebration has remained proudly nonsectarian and nongovernmental. Indeed, the interfaith Laymen's National Bible Association, which spearheads this annual observance, has expressly refrained from asking Congress to adopt a resolution or to enact legislation supporting National Bible Week.

Mr. President, the Laymen's National Bible Association was formed in 1940 by a small group of New York business and professional men who sought to encourage Americans to appreciate our Nation's religious heritage. They saw the Bible—the primary sacred text of the overwhelming majority of religious Americans—as a uniquely rich lode of faith, spiritual guidance, and moral teaching.

The observance of National Bible Week has been held every year since 1941. It involves people from a broad range of faiths. Local observances take place in thousands of communities all across the land, conducted as often by civic clubs, fraternal groups, libraries, bookstores and the like as by churches or synagogues.

Without funding from any denomination or faith group, the costs for the annual observance are covered mainly through support from corporations and individuals. National Bible Week has come to be widely regarded as the corporate sector's interfaith response to the moral and ethical dilemmas that confront Americans from all walks of life.

Out of respect for the Constitution's separation of church and state, the sponsors have never sought official sanction or legislative backing for their observance. However, the sponsors have welcomed the personal support and involvement of Government leaders down through the years. Most Presidents have served as honorary national chairman, and every President has issued a message saluting Bible Week. Mayors and Governors issue Bible Week proclamations, and other Senators and Representatives have given public endorsement, too.

This year, Representative BOB STUMP of Arizona and I are serving as congressional cochairmen of National Bible Week. We recognize that Americans view the Bible in many ways. However, no one doubts that it has left a profound imprint on the United States, so much so that President Andrew Jackson once referred to the Bible as "The rock upon which our republic rests."

Mr. President, to challenge all Americans to remember the Bible's place in our Nation's history and its relevance to our daily lives, the Laymen's National Bible Association will mount a public service advertising campaign and conduct other educational and promotional activities during National Bible Week. It is a proper time to remind ourselves and our fellow citizens that, as the Psalmist said, "The word of the Lord is right; and all his works are done in truth."●

NEIGHBORHOOD CLEANERS ASSOCIATION

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, the Neighborhood Cleaners Association [NCA] is paying tribute this weekend to their executive director, Mr. Bill Seitz for 40 years of service to the industry.

NCA, which is headquartered in New York City, represents the neighborhood dry cleaners in nine States and has become a progressive force for the drycleaning industry. They have worked every year with us and the president at the national level to highlight the contributions of the drycleaning industry, and especially the small dry cleaner, by sponsoring Good Grooming Month each April. Throughout the past several years they have embarked upon several activities of special concern and have highlighted their industry's contributions to all of us.

NCA was a participating sponsor in the restoration effort of the Statue of Liberty and instituted a program among all of its members and their customers to raise money to "help groom the most important lady in the world." They have sponsored small business programs which have provided new opportunities to many Americans, especially the Korean-Americans. They led the way in developing a hazardous waste pickup system for dry cleaning waste in an effort to clean up the environment long before the RCRA legislation mandated such action, demonstrating their concern and need for a clean and safe environment. As an organization, NCA is an example of how the private sector and Government can work together to provide all of us a better America.

Mr. President, any organization, however, is made up of people who are willing to lead them in a positive direction and NCA has such a person in Bill Seitz, who for 40 years has been the major force behind these NCA contributions.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask you and all my colleagues to join with all of those who will participate in the October 15, 1989, tribute to Bill Seitz for his 40 years of leadership and service to the Neighborhood Cleaners Association and leading them in their significant contributions to all of us.●

J. MICHAEL BISHOP AND HAROLD E. VARMUS AWARDED NOBEL PRIZE

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today with great admiration and pride for two remarkable scientists and fellow Californians, J. Michael Bishop and Harold E. Varmus, who have been recently awarded the Nobel Prize in medicine. I ask my colleagues to join with me in the Chamber of the U.S. Senate and record their brilliant and lasting discoveries in the field of medicine.

The successful partnership of these two American scientists lead to the clarification in 1976 of the longstanding controversy over the cause of cancer. Their discovery determined that cancer was not caused by invading viruses, but instead, was caused by pre-existing normal genes in our bodies. These genes have undergone a change caused by various ingested substances such as tobacco smoke, toxic wastes, and radiation.

Since joining the staff at the University of California, San Francisco, Dr. Bishop and Dr. Varmus have been outstanding professors, and their collaborated effort in research has been a forefront for modern scientific developments. Their commitment to improve the medical community and their desire to enhance and preserve the quality of health for all people are outstanding. The Nobel Prize is a most fitting and prestigious award to honor and rcognize their achievements.

I am proud to salute the enormous contributions J. Michael Bishop and Harold E. Varmus have made over the past three decades to the medical world. I wish them both continued success and know their research will continue to set precedent in the scientific community.●

THE 1990 FARM BILL: PREFERENCES OF INDIANA FARMERS

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, next year the Senate will rewrite our Nation's basic agricultural policies. The 1985 Food Security Act expires next year and Congress will work toward its reauthorization.

Every American will be affected by the farm bill we write next year, but no group of Americans will be more directly affected than farmers. It is important for us to know, therefore, how farmers view current agricultural policy and how they believe our farm laws could be improved.

Three agricultural economists at Purdue University recently published the results of a poll on agricultural policy. Though the farmers in my State may differ from farmers elsewhere on a few issues, I believe the polling data reflects the views of most farmers in this country.

Mr. President, 5 years ago Indiana farmers, like farmers elsewhere, were in trouble and needed our help. One-fourth of the farmers then supported mandatory supply control programs, while another fourth urged elimination of such programs. In 1984 Congress listened. We crafted a farm bill that struck a balance and answered the needs of the farming community.

In 1989, farmers who completed the Purdue survey are saying something different. Fully 42 percent would prefer the gradual elimination of all production controls, while another 31 percent would like Government payments decoupled from production. A mere 8 percent want mandatory supply control. The 1985 Food Security Act apparently has made market-oriented programs more popular, and heavy-handed Government production controls less so.

Farmers' opinions on target prices show more of a split. Though one-third would like to keep target prices and index them to inflation, another third would prefer to see target prices phased out over 5 to 10 years. Two other options—keeping target prices at their current levels and cutting them by 2 to 4 precent a year—were favored by 12 and 11 percent, respectively. Here again, support for high target prices has weakened since the 1984 survey.

Forty-four percent of farmers favor doing away with commodity loan rates entirely. Another 29 percent want loan rates based on a moving average of market prices. Finally, 16 percent believe loan rates should be raised significantly. By contrast, in 1984 one-half of farmers supported higher loan rates.

Another topic sure to be addressed next year is crop acreage bases and the need to give farmers greater flexibility in making planting decisions. In the Purdue survey, about 50 percent would like a more flexible system, with each producer able to select his crop mix within a total farm base. Only 28 percent prefer to continue the current crop-specific base system.

Payment limitations on farm programs, always controversial in Washington, are the source of disagreement in Indiana as well. While 38 percent would like to retain the current $50,000 limit on direct payments, another third would like to see it decreased. And 11 percent want no limit on payments, while 6 percent want an even higher limit than present.

Soil and water conservation issues will be at the forefront of the farm bill debate. One of the most significant policy decisions Congress made in 1985 was linking eligibility for Federal subsidies to farmers' willingness to undertake sound conservation measures. Some 56 percent of Indiana farmers agree that soil conservation and water quality compliance should be a condition for receiving Federal benefits. However, only 13 percent are in favor of additional government regulation to achieve environmental goals. About one-third would support taxes on fertilizer and chemicals to reduce excessive use.

In the areas of crop insurance and other risk management policies, one third of farmers favor a continuation of the current subsidized crop insurance program, but a fifth would prefer to eliminate crop insurance and have the Government provide limited disaster assistance when catastrophic weather losses occur, as in 1988. Another 14 percent favor doing away with both crop insurance and disaster programs.

Mr. President, we often hear only from constituents who believe Government needs to do more. The poll taken by Purdue University suggests to me that many farmers are not eager to expend the role of Government in agriculture; quite the opposite, in fact. The farmers in my State favor policies that respond to market signals, leaving decisions on grain production and marketing where they belong: in the hands of farmers, not the Government. I hope the farm bill we draft in 1990 will take into account the views of these hard-working farmers.

Mr. President, I want to commend Marshall A. Martin, associate professor of agricultural economics, Bob F. Jones, professor of agricultural economics, and research assistant Dennis Shields for conducting and publishing this most interesting and valuable survey. I ask that an article from the August 1989 issue of the Purdue Agricultural Economics Report, which summarizes the poll results, be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

THE 1990 FARM BILL: PREFERENCES OF INDIANA FARMERS

(By Marshall A. Martin, Bob F. Jones, and Dennis Shields, Associate Professor, Professor, and Research Assistant, respectively, Department of Agricultural Economics)

The Food Security Act of 1985 expires in 1990 (Glaser). Consequently, the debate over the next farm bill is now underway. To provide Indiana farmers an opportunity to express their preferences over possible provisions in the 1990 Farm Bill, the Department of Agricultural Economics at Purdue University conducted a mail survey of a randomly selected sample of Indiana farmers in February 1989. There were 409 completed surveys returned (27 percent of those mailed to farmers).

Based on a comparison of the characteristics of the farmers in the sample with recent Census of Agriculture data (U.S. Department of Commerce—Bureau of the Census), the sample was judged to be representative of Indiana farmers. About 14 percent of the survey respondents farm fewer than 50 acres, 34 percent farm between 50 and 180 acres, 30 percent farm between 180 and 500 acres, 14 percent farm between 50 and 1,000 acres, and 8 percent farm more than 1,000 acres.

Farmers were asked to share their opinions on possible provisions in the 1990 Farm Bill and related policy issues. The remainder of this article summarizes the survey findings.

PRODUCTION CONTROLS

Indiana farmers' views on production controls and associated price supports are mixed. Forty-two percent prefer the gradual elimination of all commodity programs, while 31 percent would favor a separation of government payments from production (decoupling). Only 8 percent desire a mandatory supply control program. Three percent suggested other options, and 7 percent had no response to the question.

Compared to a similar survey in 1984 prior to the passage of the Food Security Act of 1985, Indiana farmers' views appear to have changed (Martin). Support for a mandatory acreage reduction program has declined from slightly over one-fourth to 8 percent, while support for the elimination of government supply control programs has increased from about one-fourth in 1984 to 42 percent in 1989.

A larger proportion of the operators of farms with gross sales under $40,000 and those who farmed less than 180 acres prefer the complete elimination of farm programs. The moderate-sized operators more frequently expressed a preference for the current program as well as a willingness to separate government payments from production requirements, i.e., decoupling. Those who farm more than 500 acres generally oppose the elimination of all farm programs and tend to favor the current program or decoupling. Grain farmers are more often supportive of the present program than are livestock producers. Livestock producers more frequently favor the elimination of current farm programs.

TARGET PRICES

Attitudes towards the role of target prices also are mixed. About one-third want target prices phased-out completely over a 5- to 10-year period. However, another one-third want to retain target prices and increase them annually at the rate of inflation. About 12 percent prefer to keep target prices fixed at current levels ($2.84 per bushel for corn and $4.10 per bushel for wheat). A similar number (11%) would favor a gradual annual reduction in target prices of 2 percent to 4 percent to reduce federal budget expenditures and to discourage overproduction. Others (10%) had no opinion or favored other alternatives.

Support for high target prices has declined. Five years ago the majority (56%) of the farmers surveyed favored the continuation of target prices with about 40 percent wanting them held constant. Only 4 percent wanted target prices lowered. In 1984 target prices for corn were $3.03 per bushel and for wheat were $4.38 per bushel.

Larger grain farmers generally want to retain or increase current target levels. Livestock producers are more likely to want target prices reduced or phased out. Those farmers with more years of schooling generally want target prices phased out also.

LOAN RATES

Many farmers (44%) would favor the complete elimination of all loan rates and commodity loan programs. Others (29%) favor a loan rate based on an average of market prices during the previous 5 years. Still others (16%) believe that loan rates should be raised and be the primary policy instrument to support commodity prices. Eleven percent had no response.

In 1984 one-half the farmers wanted loan rates raised, about 20 percent wanted them held constant, and only 2 percent wanted them reduced. However, under the provisions of the Food Security Act of 1985 loan rates were reduced substantially, mainly as a tool to increase international competitiveness of U.S. grain and reduce stock levels. For example, the loan rates for corn and wheat were reduced from $2.55 and $3.30 per bushel, respectively, in 1984 to current levels of $2.06 and $2.58.

Small farmers generally prefer the elimination of loan rates. Many of the larger grain producers favor higher loan rates. However, livestock producers favor lower loan rates.

PAID LAND DIVERSION

In the 1980's farmers have in some years had the option of receiving additional payments to divert more acres than were required for the minimum acreage reduction program. Thirty-eight percent of the farmers surveyed believe that an annual paid land diversion program to control production should be continued as an option available to the Secretary of Agriculture when stocks become burdensome. However, 29 percent think this program could be discontinued. But a large number (26%) are unsure about whether this program should be discontinued.

Larger grain producers generally want the paid land diversion program continued. Livestock producers and smaller farmers are less supportive.

MARKETING LOAN

Under the 1985 Act, a marketing loan became available for rice and cotton. The marketing loan program allows farmers to take out a commodity loan at the announced loan rate. However, if the market price never surpasses the loan rate, farmers may repay the loan at the market price rather than the loan rate value. The difference between the loan rate and market price becomes an implicit government subsidy. The intent of the program is to move a commodity onto the market rather than allow it to accumulate in government storage through loan forfeiture.

Expansion of this approach to wheat, soybeans, and feed grains was authorized in the 1985 Act. However, former Secretary of Agriculture Lyng opposed this, arguing that such a program would be too expensive.

When asked if they favored the extension of marketing loans to include wheat, soybeans, and feed grains, 40 percent of the Indiana farmers surveyed said no. Twenty-eight percent said yes. A similar number (26%) are unsure. Larger grain producers are more supportive of the marketing loan concept.

ACREAGE BASES

Historically, several approaches have been used to determine the acreage of program crops that farmers may plant and how much land must remain idle. The 1985 Act continued the acreage reduction program (ARP) concept. Each year the Secretary of Agriculture announces the percentage acreage reduction within the limits set by the Act. To determine the number of acres to idle a farmer must multiply the ARP percentage times his base acres for each eligible crop, e.g., a farmer with 100 corn base acres and a 10 percent ARP would be eligible to plant 90 acres of corn and idle 10 acres.

The base acres for each crop under the 1985 Act are determined by the area planted or considered planted to a particular crop during the 5 preceding crop years. Although not implemented by the Secretary of Agriculture, the 1985 Act also allows for a set-aside program as a percentage of the normal farm acreage base, which includes all crops planted and idled acres.

A concern of many farmers has been the lack of flexibility of crop acres under the 1985 Act, i.e., farmers participated in the acreage reduction program not only to enjoy program benefits but also to avoid the loss of base history and thereby retain maximum eligibility for future programs. Thus, when soybean prices rose relative to market prices for program crops such as wheat and feed grains, farmers did not expand their soybean acreage.

About 50 percent of the Indiana farmers surveyed favor a more flexible acreage base with each farmer able to select individual crop acreages within a total crop acreage basis. Others (28%) prefer a continuation of the current crop specific base acreage approach.

PAYMENT-IN-KIND (PIK)

Current support for the Payment-in-Kind (PIK) program is relatively weak and many farmers are uncertain if it should be continued. This is a sharp change in farmers' views compared to 5 years ago. PIK certificates were instituted in 1983 and the continuation of the PIK program was strongly favored by two-thirds of the Indiana farmers who responded to the policy survey in 1984. In the 1989 survey, when asked if they favored the continuation of PIK certificates as long as government stocks exist, only 31 percent said yes and 36 percent said no. It is important to note, however, that 25 percent are unsure and 8 percent did not respond to the question.

FARMER-OWNED GRAIN RESERVE

Indiana farmers' support for a grain reserve has declined. In 1984 about one-half the farmers favored the continuation of the farmer-owned reserve, about one-fifth were oppposed, and 28 percent were undecided. In the 1989 survey only 37 percent favor its continuation, while 28 percent are opposed, and 35 percent are unsure or did not answer the question. Higher market prices and declining stock levels may have influenced farmers' views now compared to 5 years ago.

PAYMENT LIMITATIONS

Farm legislation for over two decades has contained provisions to limit the size of government payments to farmers. In the 1984 survey three-fourths of the respondents favored payment limitations with about one-half favoring the continuation of a $50,000 payment limit per farmer and the rest about equally divided between higher and lower payment limitations.

In the 1989 survey, 38 percent favor the continuation of a $50,000 payment limitation per farmer. One-third want the limit decreased, and only 6 percent want it increased. Eleven percent want payment limits completely eliminated, 6 percent suggested other alternatives, and 5 percent did not respond. Operators of smaller acreage or those with annual gross sales under $40,000 generally want the payment limit decreased while operators of larger acreages or those with annual gross sales over $250,000 are much more likely to prefer an increase in the payment limit or its complete elimination. Moderate sized farmers are generally more supportive of a continuation of the current payment limit of $50,000. Younger farmers more often want the payment limit increased.

SOIL CONSERVATION AND WATER QUALITY

It is widely anticipated that the 1990 Farm Bill will include provisions to improve the environment. Policy measures to reduce soil erosion and improve ground water quality are expected.

In the 1984 survey, three-fourths of the respondents supported a recommendation which would link soil conservation practices to eligibility for price and income payments. The 1985 Food Security Act includes provisions that require farmers to develop conservation plans by 1990 and fully implement these plans by 1995.

These soil conservation provisions have been controversial. When asked in the 1989 survey, 56 percent of the farmers concurred that soil conservation and water quality compliance should be a condition for receiving government farm program benefits. Twenty-four percent said no, and 20 percent were not sure or did not respond to the question. Younger farmers are more likely than older farmers to favor this proposal. Also there is less support for this proposal among larger farmers than among smaller farmers. Farmers who are college graduates strongly support the proposal.

Government regulation of farming prices is not very popular among Hoosier farmers. Only 13 percent of the respondents desire additional government regulations of farming practices to achieve soil conservation and water quality goals. Most (44%) prefer government cost sharing to establish conservation and water structures. About one-third would support taxes on fertilizer and chemicals to reduce excessive use. Older farmers are more supportive of taxes on fertilizer and chemicals than are younger farmers. Government payments to producers to modify cultural practices or remove land from production were supported by 26 percent.

CROP INSURANCE

Several past farm bills have provided for Federal crop insurance to cover losses from natural disasters. However, in years of major drought such as 1988, the Congress usually has responded with special emergency legislation. When asked what our national policy should be to deal with production risk associated with natural disasters such as drought, about one-third of the respondents preferred a continuation of the current voluntary crop insurance program where farmers pay about 70 percent of the cost and government pays about 30 percent. About one-fifth of the farmers would prefer the elimination of the current Federal crop insurance program and instead have the Congress provide limited disaster assistance when a severe national disaster occurs such as in 1988. However, 14 percent favor the elimination of all government crop insurance and disaster assistance programs. Only 9 percent favor legislation that would require farmers to buy Federal crop insurance to be eligible for government program benefits. Yet 14 percent were not sure, 5 percent did not respond, and 2 percent suggested other alternatives.

A significant number of the smaller farmers want all government disaster programs eliminated. Support for the current crop insurance program appears to be strongest among the mid-sized farmers.

DAIRY POLICY

Dairy policy has often been controversial. Six percent of the Indiana farmers who returned the survey were dairymen. Of these dairy farmers, only 17 percent have more than a 50-cow herd. Thirty percent of the dairy farmers favor the elimination of all dairy price support programs, 23 percent want to continue the current program, 20 percent prefer production quotas and price supports based on the average cost of production, 13 percent want to give the Secretary of Agriculture more authority to set milk price supports, and 13 percent are not sure what future dairy policy should be. A comparison of all respondents indicates attitudes on dairy policy similar to those of dairy farmers.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT POLICY

For many years the Farmers Home Administration has served as a creditor of last resort for many farmers who cannot obtain credit through commercial channels. When asked if the government should continue to lend money to farmers with limited capital who cannot get credit from other sources, 44% said no, 28 percent said yes, 20 percent were not sure, and 8 percent did not respond.

PROGRAM PAYMENT DISTRIBUTION

Slightly over one-half of the Indiana farmers favor a change in farm programs which would give a higher proportion of price and income support payments to smaller farmers. As might be expected, the response to this question is highly correlated with farm size. Farmers with annual gross sales less than $100,000 are supportive of this proposal, while larger farmers with annual gross sales over $250,000 are not.

FARM PROGRAMS AND STRUCTURE

Farmers' views on whether farm programs should be used to influence the number and size of farms are quite divided. Forty-six percent said yes, while 40 percent said no, and about 8 percent did not respond. Small operators with less than 180 acres of annual gross sales less than $40,000 think farm programs should influence farm size and numbers while those who operate more than 500 acres or whose annual gross sales exceed $250,000 disagree.

DOMESTIC FOOD PROGRAMS

There are strong and opposing views among Indiana farmers concerning the level of government expenditures on domestic food assistance programs. In 1987 the U.S. government spent $19 billion on food stamps, school lunches, and other food assistance programs. Slightly over one-third (37%) agreed that this amount should be increased. Slightly more (39%) disagreed. About one-fourth were unsure or did not respond.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

There has been growing interest in the Congress and in rural communities to expand efforts to encourage economic development in rural areas. Over one-half (53%) of the respondents favor increased Federal government funding for rural development programs to expand employment and economic activity in low-income rural communities. Only about one-fifth disagree. Support for rural development efforts is inversely associated with educational levels. Those with less years of schooling are more supportive. Rural development is an issue that is likely to receive increased attention in the 1990 Farm Bill.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

Since the early 1970's international trade has become extremely important to U.S. agriculture. After rapid growth in the 1970's, agricultural exports declined in the early 1980's and have only begun to recover since 1986. Changes in domestic policies, e.g., lower loan rates and export subsidy programs, economic recovery in other countries, and a weaker U.S. dollar have contributed to the recent increase in the value and volume of U.S. agricultural exports.

Indiana farmers strongly favor efforts to reduce world trade barriers (78%), especially grain producers and those who are college graduates. Over one-half (58%) favor bilateral and multilateral efforts to reach separate trade agreements and reduce farm and export subsidies to enhance world agricultural trade. There is less enthusiasm, however, to enter into joint agreements with other nations to limit production and establish marketing controls. Thirty-six percent agree, 30 percent disagree, and 34 percent have no opinion.

The United States has been a major source of foreign food assistance under P.L. 480 since the 1950's on both a donation and concessional sale basis. Most farmers (43%) favor the continuation of efforts to fund food aid to low-income nations. However, 21 percent disagree, and 29 percent have no opinion.

Private and public funds have financed the development of foreign markets for U.S. agricultural products. Most farmers (47%) favor additional farmer-financed foreign market development efforts. However, again there are other views with 21 percent saying no, 23 percent unsure, and 9 percent who did not answer the question.

Farmers' views on the effectiveness and level of expenditures on export subsidies vary. Partly in response to the use of export subsidies by the European Community, the U.S. began an Export Enhancement Program in 1985. Since then the U.S. has spent several billion dollars on agricultural export subsidies, especially for wheat. Most Indiana farmers (46%) favor the continuation of these export subsidies. While 11 percent disagrees, a large number (32%) are unsure, and 11 percent did not answer the question. Large grain producers are more likely to favor the continuation of these export subsidy programs. The support for a reduction in U.S. agricultural import barriers is relatively weak. About one-third would favor such efforts, about one-fourth would not and, about another one-third are uncertain.

U.S. agricultural development assistance programs in low-income countries have been controversial for many years. Despite research evidence and country-specific experience where the U.S. has assisted a country to develop its agricultural sector and subsequently that country has become a strong importer of U.S. agricultural and nonagricultural products, many farmers still do not support economic development efforts directed towards agriculture by the U.S. Agency for International Development. Less than one-third (30%) of the respondents favor such efforts, while over one-third (38%) do not. Again, many are unsure (21%) or did not answer the question (11%).

FEDERAL BUDGET DEFICITS

Federal budget deficits have been a major national concern throughout the 1980's. Despite the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Budget Amendment, efforts to reduce the Federal budget deficit have been only modestly successful. The deficit during each of the past 3 years has exceeded $150 billion.

Most Indiana farmers (53%) favor across-the-board cuts to reduce the Federal budget deficit. About one-fifth disagree, however.

There is strong support to cut defense expenditures (57%), social programs excluding Social Security (50%), and farm program expenditures (49%). Also farm programs are reduced, 36 percent favor across-the-board cuts, 36 percent favor the continuation of payments to small and moderate sized farmers, 11 percent would make payments only to farmers with severe financial need, and 7 percent would cut some programs more than others. About 10 percent had no response or suggested other alternatives. Larger grain farmers are more likely to support across-the-board cuts, while smaller farmers favor cuts in payments to larger producers and prefer that payments be made on the basis of financial need.

There is very little support for a tax increase (16%) as a budget balancing technique. However, a majority of farmers would favor an increase in user fees for government services (49%) and increased efforts to collect taxes due the Federal government (71%).

Farmers clearly do not want Social Security payments reduced. Only 11 percent favor this. Farmers with annual gross sales under $40,000 strongly disagree with any efforts to reduce Social Security payments. Also, as expected, older farmers were more likely to disagree.

SOME INDIANA ISSUES

The survey included a few policy questions that may be addressed in future sessions of the Indiana General Assembly.

Corn Check-off. In recent years there have been two soybean check-off referenda and one for corn in Indiana. All were defeated. When asked in this survey if they would favor a corn check-off of one cent per bushel with the funds allocated for research and market development as determined by an elected board that included only Indiana corn producers, 41 percent of the respondents said no. A slightly smaller number (37%) said yes. About one-fifth were unsure, and 4 percent did not respond. These responses parallel the vote in the December 1987 corn check-off referendum when 37 percent of the Indiana corn producers voted yes and 63 percent voted no.

College graduates and mid-sized farmers are more likely to support a corn check-off.

Roads and Bridges. Many Indiana residents have expressed concern in recent years with the declining condition of rural roads and bridges. Farmers are especially concerned about the need for all weather roads and stronger bridges that support heavy loads of grain and are safe for the movement of large farm equipment.

The survey asked if they would favor a 2-cent-per-gallon increase in the Indiana gasoline and diesel fuel tax with no exemptions for farm use but the requirement that all tax revenues could only be allocated for the repair of rural roads and bridges. Despite the frequently expressed concern about the poor state of Indiana rural roads and bridges, over one-half (56%) responded negatively to this proposal and less than one-third (28%) would favor such a tax to generate revenues to repair rural roads and bridges. Eleven percent were unsure, and 5 percent did not answer the question.

Agricultural Credit from the State of Indiana. Farmers' views on state agricultural credit programs such as the Indiana Agricultural Development Corporation and the Treasurer's Farm Program appear to be quite mixed. One-fourth do not favor this type of credit program. However, 29 percent favor more of this type of credit, 30 percent favor a continuation of the same level, and 13 percent want it reduced. Only 2 percent had no response. Larger farmers tend to be more supportive of additional agricultural credit.

CONCLUSIONS

Indiana farmers remain divided in their views on many food and agricultural policy issues. Furthermore, their views appear to have changed on some issues during the past 5 years.

Perhaps the most significant change in views is with respect to mandatory production control programs. Only 8 percent favored this in 1989 compared to slightly over one-fourth in 1984. Furthermore, the support for elimination of farm programs has increased from about one-fourth to 42 percent.

The support for soil conservation programs remains relatively strong. While there are some differences of opinion about the size of the Conservation Reserve Program, most farmers favor its continuation.

The Uruguay Round of General Agreement on Tariff and Trade (GATT) negotiations are underway in Geneva, Switzerland. A major goal of these multilateral trade negotiations is to reduce barriers to trade. Indiana farmers strongly support efforts to open world markets to U.S. agricultural products.

Indiana farmers are concerned about the Federal budget deficit and favor cuts in budget expenditures including farm program expenditures. However, they are vehemently opposed to tax increases as a means of balancing the Federal budget. They are more supportive of increases in user fees for government services.

At the State level, farmers generally do not favor any "tax." The majority oppose a corn check-off, a tax on fertilizer and pesticides to improve ground water quality, and a fuel tax to repair rural roads and bridges. The challenge before Indiana policymakers and agricultural leaders will be to devise ways to increase agricultural efficiency and profitability while minimizing environmental damage and taxpayer costs.

The challenge before the national agricultural community and policymakers as the 1990 Farm Bill is written will be to increase program flexibility, protect U.S. agriculture from extreme downside, price and income risk, and retain the competitive position of U.S. farmers in world markets.

As was the case when the 1985 Food Security Act was written, there will be pressures to minimize budget costs. However, two other forces will be prominent as the 1990 Farm Bill is drafted. The ongoing GATT trade negotiations will likely force policymakers to seek ways to reduce trade distortions and maintain the competitive position of U.S. farmers. Second, the environmental and food safety movement is stronger as well as better organized and financed than it was in the past. Additional soil conservation and water quality provisions very likely will be included in the next farm bill.

WHAT IT TAKES TO MAKE A SCHOOL SUCCEED

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the question of what it takes to make a school succeed is a difficult one to answer. There are four articles in a recent Christian Science Monitor that address that very issue. It appears that in these examples the success rate is determined by dedicated teachers, committed staff and involved parents.

Joyce Carey is Illinois' new teacher of the year. She team teaches a second/third grade class with Kathryn Keller at Glen Ellyn's Benjamin Franklin Elementary School. Three of the components which make Carey's system work are its dedicated teachers, its parental support and its flexible environment.

The joint class is taught in such a way that there are numerous small groups and Carey and Keller are in contact with all the students in both the two main groups and the smaller subgroups continuously. The variety of levels make the program unique in that the students learn cooperatively and they teach each other.

The parental support within the system is admirable. Carey uses parents as assistants in the classroom, and not just for field trips and other activities as she has done in the past. She expects the problem not to be finding volunteers, but picking from the large number of applicants.

Florida's new teacher of the year is Dee Dee Noonan. She focuses on some of the new problems that students today are facing. Her students deal with the problems of AIDS, teenage pregnancy, and gun control. Schools, she claims, are not only supposed to provide an academic education, but also a moral and social education.

Noonan speaks in favor of the restructuring of the teacher certification and teacher education system. Current teaching programs, she claims, do not teach future educators about many of the new problems today's children are facing.

She feels that it is important not only to know her students academically, but personally as well. She describes herself as field and research oriented. Her students take many learning field trips and she even brought a group to Washington last year. She gets to know her students outside the classroom. This type of involvement helps her to understand them and deal with them more effectively in the classroom.

At John Marshall Elementary School in Glendale, CA, the staff is the key ingredient. It is modestly funded, overcrowded and the children are from varied backgrounds. Over 80 percent of the students speak English very poorly or not at all when they first begin classes. But the school consistently sends out students who know their math, their geography, and their language.

The staff is unusually devoted and dedicated. The cohesiveness is necessary. With such a diverse student body, no single teacher can meet the needs of the children. The school stresses order in an environment which is always changing. Both students and teachers understand what is expected of them. Limited homework is given to children as young as kindergarten age, and disciplinary rules are clearly spelled out. It is a tough but fair system.

At Harlem's A. Phillip Randolph Campus High School 95 percent of its graduates continue on to college. The dropout rate is under 2 percent. Lottie Taylor, the school's principal is the power behind the success rate. Randolph is a minority school. Three-fourths of its students are black. One-fourth are Hispanic. Just under 50 percent receive public aid. She doesn't always do things strictly "by the book." But her methods succeed. She is described as a "tough good lady." She's begun many substantial programs: a full-time medical clinic; a system whereby students who do poorly in the first term can redeem themselves in the second, and an academic camp among others. The students have responsibilities as well as rights. Besides giving their best effort to their class work, before graduation all must devote 80 hours of their time to their community. This successful approach does not fit into any specific plan; it is based simply on respect and goals.

These four schools and their faculties are to be commended. In a time of serious problems in our schools including drugs, dropout rates, and apathy these schools are an example to us that our education system can work. I urge my colleagues to read these articles and ask for to have them printed in full in the RECORD.

The articles follow:

A STAFF WITH DEDICATION—TEACHERS COPE WITH OVERCROWDING, LOW FUNDING, AND ETHNIC DIVERSITY IN THIS SUBURBAN SCHOOL

(By Scott Armstrong)

GLENDALE, CA.—When Thomas and Rozik Sarkissian, Armenians from Iran, moved to the United States last year, they had intended to live next to relatives in La Crescenta, Calif., who would help them get settled and learn English.

Instead they ended up starting a new life in the town next door, Glendale, so their two children could attend the John Marshall Elementary School, which they had heard about from friends while overseas.

"It was very important for me to live next to my sister," says Mrs. Sarkissian.

"But the reason we came to this country was for our kids. The school was most important to us."

At a time when American education appears in decline, the John Marshall Elementary School in this suburban community north of Los Angeles is one institution that seems to work.

The nondescript structure, shoehorned between apartment buildings and mini-malls in a busy section of town, consistently produces students who score well on tests and has won recognition from state and federal education officials.

Yet John Marshall is a school that shouldn't work. It is overcrowded, modestly funded, and faced with a student body as diverse as a Chinese menu. Eighty-five percent of the students speak something other than English as their primary language.

The school isn't a melting pot as much as an entire stove. Close to half the students are Armenian, with Hispanics and Koreans making up a large percentage of the rest, though pupils from more than 30 countries are represented. Many are recent immigrants from low-income families.

Nor are the facilities platinum plush. You won't see telescopes, a manicured baseball diamond, or a swimming pool. The playground, what's left of it (much has been taken up by portable, mobile-home-like classrooms while an addition to the main building is completed), is tar, the library a converted storage room in the basement.

"In spite of the limitations, they have done an exceptional job," says Vaughn Heinrich, a high school principal in Caldwell, Idaho, who evaluated the school for the US Department of Education. "Many of these students can't speak English when they start. The fact that usually within a year they can speak it fluently is remarkable."

Johnny can read here. So can Ivan, Ho, and Pedro. The reason for the school's apparent success is some old-fashioned virtues: hard work, devotion, and community involvement.

The teachers' parking lot begins to fill up by 7:00 a.m. The staff is unusually cohesive. Part of this is out of necessity: With so many students from so many different cultures, no one teacher can meet all a pupil's needs.

But those who have taught elsewhere maintain that the esprit de corps at John Marshall, as well as the attention to student concerns, is rare.

"Kids do not slide through the cracks here," says Maral Guarino, a sixth-grade teacher who came to John Marshall from a private school five years ago. "There is a lot more follow-up."

A premium is put on order and consistency in a school where change is constant. Students and teachers know what is expected of them. Pupils are promptly in their seats by the sound of the second bell. Homework is given to students four times a week (including kindergarteners). Ground rules for discipline are clearly spelled out.

"We are firm but we smile," says third-grade teacher Marjorie Schafer.

The Apollonian tone starts at the top, with Nancy Jude, the school principal. Harboring a Swiss-watch attention for efficiency, she runs what one teacher calls a "tight but fair ship."

Dr. Jude, who looks in frequently on classes and greets parents picking up students after school, came to the campus 10 years ago, at a time when John Marshall was undergoing an enrollment surge and rapid ethnic changes. She set out to recruit teachers eager to work with minority students.

"When almost 90 percent of the students are limited English proficient, the focus of the school is on ESL [English-as-a-second-language] instruction," she says. "Certainly the basics are the emphasis."

Jude is sitting at a round desk in her temporary office. A whistle dangles from her neck. Outside, beyond two barred windows, children can be heard socking tether balls and traversing jungle gyms.

"This school spends a lot of time helping these people learn to work with each other," she says. "Many of them come from countries where it is savvy to beat the system. We spend a lot of time on values—waiting in line, honesty, being considerate of other children."

English-language and bilingual instruction are strong here. While many schools give students only a few months of English before putting them in the regular classroom, John Marshall has eight levels of ESL classes that can extend over several years.

The main part of the school standing today was built in the 1930s with Works Progress Administration money. Crowded and compact, it has the look of buildings of the era—sturdy, blocky, the type that if you didn't check the nameplate on the door you might mistake for the local department of water and power.

Until 10 years ago, the school was largely Anglo with a few Hispanics. But the ethnic composition has changed dramatically since then, reflecting the influx of immigrants to southern California, America's new Ellis Island.

First the Hispanic population surged. Then came a large infusion of Vietnamese refugees in the early 1980s. Now Armenians from the Soviet Union and Iran are pouring into this community, which already has one of the largest concentrations in the United States.

With each wave, the school has had to adjust, like a parent who has just found out there will be more kids coming to the birthday party. Currently the school is short of Armenian teachers and assistants.

Different expectations arise with different cultures. Some Armenian parents, used to rigorous schools in Iran, want to know why their children aren't getting more homework. Some Armenian children, used to discipline with a stick, find rules lax here.

"It is kind of easy," says Eric Ganrazian, a sixth-grader from Iran who takes a break from looking at onion cells under a microscope.

Tarick Ahmed, in high-top tennis shoes, pauses while building a rhombus.

"This school teaches you in a nice way," says the son of Egyptian parents. "I call my friends and tell them they should move here."

Most find the cultural mix enriching. Many teachers spend time after hours learning a new language or about Armenian dance. Students reared on burritos make Korean fans. Even parents become more active in the school: John Marshall holds several meetings a year in which school officials explain how they teach.

"Because a lot of the students are immigrants, many parents are even more concerned about finding out about the school," says Carol Shareghi, president of the local Parent-Teacher Association.

If John Marshall has adjusted well to the racial diversity, the number of students poses another problem. The population of the school has doubled in 10 years, to 850. Twelve portable classrooms have been set up on the playground to handle the overflow while the school is enlarged.

Even with the addition, however, the student-teacher ratio will remain high (more than 30 to 1). Students are funneled through the lunchroom in five shifts so all can be served.

"The teachers here deserve so much credit," says Mrs. Shareghi. "But even the most brilliant teachers can get discouraged when there are so many children in a classroom"

Through it all, John Marshall seems to turn out students who understand fractions and how to locate the Philippines. The short answer to how the school does it, if there is one, says Jude, is staff. "Just dumping a lot of money on a school doesn't mean it will work. It is the attitude of the staff. Here, they don't give up."

A PRINCIPAL WITH POWER—STRONG LEADERSHIP CUTS THROUGH THE BUREAUCRACY TO MAKE THIS INNER-CITY HIGH SCHOOL WORK

(By Jonathan Rowe)

NEW YORK.—The textbook budget is only $25 per student. In some classrooms, students can barely hear, what with carpenters' power saws whining in the halls.

Then there's the science teacher assigned by the Board of Education. A disaster. He has survived in the system because other principals chose to pass their problem along rather than endure an exhausting dismissal process.

Small problems, perhaps, as things go in the New York public schools. ("School Opens With a Murder" was the Newsday headline the day after summer vacation ended.) But Lottie Taylor isn't one to settle for less bad. She's on the phone, as she often is, wheeling and dealing like a general manager in the National Basketball Association.

Maybe she can find a graduate student to "assist" the disappointing teacher. She raises money for just such emergencies, so she can avoid delays and red tape. It's not strictly by the book. But her students can't wait while the bureaucrats play games. "You do what you have to do to get the material across to your kids," she says.

Mrs. Taylor is principal of the A. Phillip Randolph Campus High School in Harlem. Hailed by former Education Secretary William Bennett and the subject of a TV documentary, Randolph is an inner-city school that works.

Randolph is a minority school. Three-quarters of the students are black. Another quarter are Hispanic. Almost half receive public assistance. Yet more than 95 percent of Randolph graduates go to four-year colleges, many to the very finest. The dropout rate is less than 2 percent.

While concerned parents and a bright student body certainly help, Taylor is by all accounts the guiding force. "She makes you believe anything is possible for these kids," says Martha Harvey, president of the school's Parents Association.

Yet Taylor's plaudits have not spared her the daily harrassments and absurdities of New York's public school bureaucracy. Her story shows that to make an urban school work it's not enough to fight television and crack. One has to fight the system as well.

"It can wear you down," Taylor says. "Yet I can't let that be an excuse to not educate the students the best that I can.

"If they want to fire me—no sweat," she says. "I will go out into the community and work with the parents."

The first thing a visitor notices at Randolph is the order. The school occupies an old (1924) stone building on the fringe of City College next to the drug warren of St. Nicholas Park. Originally, Randolph was to be a model school, run jointly by the school system and the college. But 10 years of planning and union pressures diluted the idea.

The previous principal, a white male, fell victim to bitter racial politics. By the time Taylor arrived, "things were just falling apart," recalls Margaret Ketly, a guidance counselor at the school.

Today, the wood is polished and the lockers work. Major renovation work is in progress. A uniformed guard greets visitors politely in a starched white shirt. Classes are purposeful and planned to the last detail.

Students waiting to speak with a visiting reporter (who arrives, sheepishly in this setting, 15 minutes late) are put to work stuffing envelopes. "There is something to do every minute," Taylor says.

But this is not the macho order of principal Joe Clark of Newark, N.J., with his trademark bullhorn. Taylor shows that mothering qualities are no less important.

To be sure, she is a "a tough, good lady," as one admirer put it. Taylor walks the halls between classes, admonishing young men who tower over her to remove their baseball hats and show some respect. The curriculum is demanding, and she drives her teachers hard. She is legendary for standing firm against the city and union bureaucracies.

"They can't touch me because I'm steel," she says, without exaggeration. "Some people translate that into another five-letter word."

But Taylor also attends to her students' smallest daily needs. Some live in disordered households and have trouble getting up in the morning. So Taylor raised money to provide computerized wake-up calls. (Boogie music followed by "Hi. This is Mrs. Taylor. I'm here to remind you that you have a date at 8 so don't be late.")

When the Board of Education ordered the schools to devote a day to workshops on drugs, AIDS, and the like, Taylor asked "One day?" She raised the money—again outside school channels—to install a full-time medical clinic.

She arranged the school year so that students who do poorly in the first semester can redeem themselves in the second. She's started an academic summer camp and done—it seems—a zillion other things. "We are going to save these kids because they are mine," she says. "You come to Randolph, and you are mine."

Teachers get the same kind of attention: special programs, extra cash, pats on the back. The approach here does not fit neatly into conservative or liberal agendas; it's based simply on aspiration and respect. At the outset of each class, teachers, students, and parents all sign a contract laying out what they expect from the course and what they will do in return.

"Children have rights too," she says. "That's a hard thing for a lot of teachers to accept." But with rights come responsibilities. Before they graduate, students devote 80 hours to community service—to give back a little of what the school gives them.

"From the very first day you step into this school, everyone here wants to accomplish something, wants to go someplace higher," says Vaughn Malone, the student body president, Mr. Malone wants to become a lawyer because, as he explains it, "a lot of my brothers are in jail."

There are city educators who think Taylor has gotten more than her share of glory. Yes, she's a good principal, they say. But look at what she has to work with: a new school, without entrenched faculty politics and a link with City College that is a magnet for grants. Randolph was planned to have a complete cross section of students, but Taylor has tilted the mix toward the best and brightest. There are grumblings about skimming the cream and leaving local "zoned" schools to deal with the rest.

"They do a good job, but they are not a typical school," says one school official who asked not to be named.

But Randolph isn't typical. Last year, 3,000 students applied for 115 places in the school's special pre-med program, funded by the Macy Foundation. The intellectual, Spike-Lee look common in the corridors.

But Randolph also accepts underachievers and special-education students and lifts their sights as well. "That's the success of it," says Mrs. Harvey of the parents association.

Taylor is a handsome woman with bronze skin and fierce protective instincts. The whole "skimming" issue sets her off.

As a youngster in Harlem, she recalls, her parents had to lie about their address to send here to a first-rate high school. What's so wrong with providing that kind of school for bright Harlem kids today? Randolph has a higher percentage of blacks than any other high school in Manhattan, she says.

When I march [at graduation] I march with a whole class of minorities," Taylor says, with not a little indignation. "What happended to these kids before A. Phillip Randolph existed?"

The key, she says is giving principals the authority to do their job. "Change will come at the school level with principals who say, 'The heck with this bureaucracy.' "

PARENTS WHO CARE

Martha Harvey thinks it's just a matter of setting a good example.

Mrs. Harvey is president of the A. Phillip Randolph High School Parents Association, and it's a commitment she and her fellow board members take seriously.

They meet through the summer and at least two times a month during the school year. Some even give up vacation time. And some stay on after their own kids graduate, to help the next group learn the ropes.

"We feel that by doing, we exemplify what we expect our kids to do," Harvey says.

This is not a group that runs bake sales. They press the school for real changes, such as mid-term reports, which teachers resisted.

They also run political interference at the New York Board of Education for Lottie Taylor, the principal, such as supporting her in cutting on administrator instead of a classroom teacher.

Mrs. Taylor encourages such involvement. To her, lack of parent participation is the big gap in a pet conservative school reform; vouchers, which let families shop for schools.

Taylor is all for parental choice. But she thinks the voucher lobby talks too much about choice and not enough about responsibility.

"There is a broader obligation on the part of the parent once he chooses. The parent has to be a real parent."

A CLASS ILLUSTRATES WHAT WORKS—PRESIDENT BUSH MIGHT LEARN A THING OR TWO FROM A VISIT TO THE BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SCHOOL

(By Laurent Belsie)

GLEN ELLYN, IL.—The Benjamin Franklin Elementary School looks like somebody's grade school memory. Outside the red-brick two-story building, children line up to wait for the bell. No spiked or wildly colored hair here. Glen Ellyn, Ill., is an upper-middle-class, conservative, family-centered place, says Principal Doug Craig, on his way to greet the children. "This is a throwback to the '50s," he says.

But walk inside the school past the office, into the large class room on the right, and old memories fast-forward into the 1990s. If President Bush wants to see what's right with education in America, he ought to see the team-taught classroom of Joyce Carey and Kathryn Keller.

"What story problem would have the solution 16 hot dogs?" Mrs. Carey asks a set of eager listeners on a Monday morning.

One boy tells of a barbecue where three hot dogs are added to 13 already on the grill. Another student adds one hot dog to 15. Someone else gets mixed up and tells about nine cowboys and how seven get wiped out. Rather than dismiss the story, Carey draws nine cowboys on the board, to the great amusement of her students, then shows what happens when you wipe out seven.

Joyce Carey is Illinois's new Teacher of the Year. And it's easy to see how dedication and a natural teacher's instinct pay off.

While this teacher's specific techniques wouldn't apply everywhere, there are certain universal elements behind their success:

A flexible teaching environment. The 52 second- and third-graders in the class are divided into two main groups according to grade level, but there is a lot of mixing as small groups break off for specific activities directed at their needs. A student may join a small reading group for one week or the whole semester. The class is team-taught, so Carey and Ms. Keller are in repeated contact with all the students.

Dedicated teachers. It would take a sophisticated flow/chart to describe the comings and goings of the Carey-Keller kids during the week. One has violin lessons; others leave for gifted-talented programs, speech assistance, or remedial needs. Carey and Keller spend hours planning. Typically, they get in around 7 a.m. and leave at 6 p.m. The pair has included students with disabilities from a nearby school in the regular teaching. The idea, Carey says, is that by letting students learn cooperatively, they will teach each other.

Parental support. Virtually every parent in the district expects his or her child to go on to college or some form of post-secondary education, says Mr. Craig, the principal. Every day, many parent volunteers are at work in the school. And the community has been willing to funnel a lot of its tax money into the schools, he says. Last year, which was the first time that Carey and Keller taught the second- and third-grade combination, they only used parents for social activities, such as field trips. This year, Carey hopes to bring parent assistants into her classroom.

"It will be more difficult for us to decide whom to pick [rather] than not having enough volunteers," she says.

The fact that these elements—flexibility, dedicated teachers, and parental support—make good schools is no surprise. The question is how to encourage these things.

The No. 1 policy has to be patience, Carey says.

"So many times, change is initiated in the classroom: 'Let's do this, let's do that.' We do it for one year and we expect to see fantastic changes. And you're not going to get that.

"I would say to Mr. Bush and everyone involved: 'Whatever changes you propose, we have to provide the economic backing, the professional backing for more than one year.'" Nor should policymakers focus solely on the classroom, she says.

"My philosophy is: We are teaching the total child. . . . So if you do that, you have to look at where the child starts. And that would be at home. Maybe part of this educational reform needs to look at services and agencies that can provide help for the future student." That way, students would come to school prepared, Carey says—fed, cared for, well-treated by society.

Finally, teachers should have maximum flexibility in the classroom, Carey says. In exchange, teachers should be held responsible for the students' achievement. "The big question is: How do you measure?"

Craig points proudly to last year's results from the Iowa Test of Basic Skills, which show Franklin students in the top 1 or 2 percent in the nation. But more is going on in this classroom.

When one Carey-Keller student lost a family member recently, the teachers decided to tell the class in simple terms what had happened. Not only did the class go out of its way to help a classmate, a few students on their own wrote the surviving family member to express their sympathy.

"How do you measure that?" Carey asks. No one, not even Carey, has answered that one yet.

EVER-EXPANDING ROLE CHALLENGES TEACHERS—IN FLORIDA, TEACHING ABOUT AIDS, DRUGS, MORALITY—AND NOW GUN EDUCATION—STRETCHES THE DEFINITION OF "SCHOOLING"

(By Kirsten A. Conover)

Gulf Breeze, FL—When Dee Dee Noonan decided to become a teacher, salary wasn't an issue: She was in eighth grade.

Even with her first teaching job, she didn't consider the pay. "I loved teaching, I wanted to be a teacher, and—by golly—that's what I was going to do," she says.

But today, as Florida's Teacher of the Year, Mrs. Noonan sees higher salaries as one of many sure-fire ways to improve the nation's educational system.

"If we're going to attract the best and the brightest," says Mrs. Noonan in an interview at Gulf Breeze High School, "you're going to have to pay them competitive entry salaries."

The social-studies teacher goes on to say that salaries and benefits have improved in the past five years but are still not satisfactory. Teachers have been given "all this additional responsibility," she says—the nation's problems have become the schools' problems.

Noonan should know. She's been at the pulse of the high school classroom for 15 years, starting in her hometown of Huntsville, Ala., moving on to Las Vegas, Nev., where she married and had her two children (now 6 and 9), then settling in Florida.

Florida is often considered a magnifying glass for the nation—grappling with explosive population, drugs, immigration, poverty, racial tensions, and teacher shortages. It has some of the nation's highest dropout, crime, and teenage-pregnancy rates.

These problems have always been present, says Noonan, but "we haven't had them in the numbers that we have now." And it follows that because of those numbers, the role of schools has changed "drastically."

"Schools aren't supposed to provide you with just an academic education—they're also supposed to provide you with a social education and a moral education," says Noonan, who has a master's degree in school curriculum. She points to courses on sex, drugs, and AIDS. Now gun education will be taught in elementary schools. "We're also taking a look at dealing with crack cocaine babies," she says.

Like many educators, Noonan stresses the importance of reaching disadvantaged or "at-risk" children. This nip-it-in-the-bud attitude translates into support programs for young children.

Noonan also advocates national teacher certification and a restructuring of the teacher-education system. "Get rid of the dinosaurs," she exclaims—the "outdated" colleges of education that "don't teach you how to deal with these problems."

Even children not considered at-risk are under a lot of pressure, Noonan says. For example, a child with both parents living at home is likely to come home to an empty house because both parents work. "That gives kids an awful lot of time to do things maybe they shouldn't be doing. . . . So the schools are starting to pick up the slack."

"[Children] are bombarded with technology," she continues, "All these outside influences encourage them to do the very things that we're trying to keep them away from."

She also worries that students are being driven by the allure of the dollar. More than ever, they're holding down after-school jobs for spending money. Many say they want careers in business, not science, math, or education.

Are parents falling short? No, says Noonan, "many don't know how to get involved." Parents' attitudes and expectations count for a lot, she says, and it's up to schools and communities to work together to involve parents.

Involvement is something close to Noonan's heart. In the words of her principal, Richard Mancini, "She goes to great lengths to bring history alive to her students," and "goes way out of her way in terms of her involvement with students in and out of school."

Noonan speaks of herself as being research-oriented and field-oriented. She takes her law classes on field trips to courts and even maximum-security prisons.

Last January she took a group of students to Washington for a first-hand view of the government and to witness the inauguration. Some got to speak with the president and several cabinet members. Recalling the tears she saw in some students' eyes during the ceremony, Noonan considers the trip one of the most meaningful experiences she's had as a teacher.

"We do a lot of activities outside of school, and I really make a point to get to know my kids—it's important to me," says Noonan, who also heads the school's yearbook project.

She likes to know their families, their aspirations. "It helps me understand them and deal with them better in the classroom," she says, adding "I think that's why all teachers should try to have this type of relationship with their kids."

FIRST, SAY LEADERS, THE NATION MUST AGREE ON EDUCATIONAL GOALS

(By Lucia Mouat)

BOSTON.—Despite a general consensus that United States public schools need major reform, most Americans see the problems as everywhere but in their own backyard. They tell pollsters year after year that their own neighborhood schools and their own children are doing all right.

Chester Finn, former assistant secretary of education and now head of the Educational Excellence Network, points to results of a recent global survey of math and science performance among 13-year-olds.

"It didn't surprise me that American kids were at the bottom of the world in math performance," he says. "What did surprise me was their answer to one of the background questions: 'Do you think you're good at math?' Guess whose kids led the world thinking they were good at math while trailing the world in being good at math?"

In Dr. Finn's view, the president and governors meeting in today's summit would do the nation a service by "beaming out" the message to the American public that the problems in education are "not just somebody else's, 'they're yours, Joe and Sally.' There's kind of a discontinuity between the national perception of a problem and the awareness that it means that I, and my kids, and their school, have to do things differently."

The Monitor asked seven educational leaders, ranging from policymakers and academics to teachers and administrators, what one change could most improve public school performance. Three, including Dr. Finn, put agreement on national educational goals and ways to measure them at the top of their list.

"We need a clear sense of what is a minimally adequate, educated Amercian," says Finn.

"I think we're very close to agreement on what the goals should be," says Richard Mills, Vermont's Commissioner of Education. "A national agenda is just floating right there."

"The challenge now is to find a balance between local control and national results," says Earnest Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. "We need to give a lot of freedom to local schools to creatively pursue the goals set."

No one advocated a national curriculum or standardized test. And none of the educators argued that a national strategy for education reform is the whole answer. More changes are needed if student performance is to improve.

STUDENTS MUST WORK HARDER

Part of the unwillingness to demand more of today's students stems from the assumption that if standards are raised for everyone, the disadvantaged minority student will suffer, says Diane Ravitch, adjunct professor of history and education at Columbia University's Teachers College. Consequently little is usually demanded of students in either group. The results of such small expectations, she says, follows students into the job world where it often shows up in low productivity.

Parents should do more, says Dr. Ravitch. "They need to act as parents, to say 'I want you to accomplish something,' and to set limits on their kids' activities and TV-watching."

TEACHERS MUST DEMAND MORE

Patrick Welsh, author of "Tales out of School" and a teacher at T.C. Williams High School in Alexandria, Va., says youngsters who don't measure up are often passed along from grade to grade: "Korean kids will tell you that in their country education is a privilege and you don't mess around with it. In the American system of universal education, nobody pays the price. If a teacher steps in, in cities where there's a mix of kids, it's going to be low-income black kids who are penalized. The NAACP [National Association for the Advancement of Colored People] and the [National] Urban League will start screaming and no principal wants that. Teachers know the kids will just play the system. . . . We don't value education enough."

Mr. Welsh also argues that more poor teachers need to be weeded out and that better teaching is needed: "We need people who think smarter and who aren't just into rote memory and controlling kids."

Having time to watch one another teach would help many good teachers become better ones and to feel less isolated, he says.

MORE MONEY, SPENT MORE FAIRLY

"Improving the schools is going to cost money—people have to come to terms with that," says Clarie Sheff, superintendent of schools in Hull, Mass.

Speaking from the perspective of one who has witnessed repeated voter rejection of tax levies for schools and a new state budget crunch, she says a better and fairer way of financing schools must be found—and that the federal government should lead the way.

"Look at Bush saying he wants to be the 'education president' and then look at how he fund things," she says. "If he can bail out the savings and loans, why isn't he doing the same for schools? It's all talk and no action."

CLASSROOM "REALITY CHECK" FOR REFORM

Bernard Gifford, vice president of education at Apple Computer and former dean of the Graduate School of Education at the University of California at Berkeley, uses the analogy of a funnel. At the top are national academic groups, each acting independently, pouring in curriculum ideas that they think teachers should teach. "The problem is that the experts never get together and that they're always adding things. I've never seen any group of scholars recommend that anything be eliminated. . . . Teachers either become confused or cynical."

Dr. Gifford has a specific suggestion for the Bush summit: "I would ask the governors and the President to rate and rank every reform in terms of how it will actually impact on the quality of the relationship between pupil and teacher. . . . Many 'reforms' haven't had one iota of impact there. . . . We need to stop talking about reform from the top down and start talking about it from the bottom up."●

THE POPE'S TOUR THROUGH EAST TIMOR

● Mr. DURENBURGER. Mr. President, today Pope John Paul II made his first pastoral visit to East Timor, a former Portuguese colony that was invaded and forcible annexed by Indonesia in 1975. I focus upon this particular territory, of all the places the Pope is visiting, to restate my grave concern about the appalling abuse of human rights that continue to occur under the auspices of the Indonesian Government. The Pope's brief tour through East Timor presents an excellent opportunity for the rest of the world to shed light upon this unresolved situation. Although I am encouraged by the resumption of talks between officials of Indonesia and Portugal, who have met three times since last May under the guidance of the Secretary General Peres de Cuellar of the United Nations, the plight of the East Timorese people remains a travesty and no exceptional efforts have been made to effectively address the problems still plaguing this island.

The United Nations Security Council and the General Assembly have consistently refused to recognize Indonesian sovereignty over the past 15 years, and Portugal continues to remain the administrating power under international law. There has been a great deal of concern expressed about the Pope's visit to East Timor in fear that his trip would impart de facto recognition of Indonesian administration of the island. The Vatican has not recognized Indonesian sovereignty in the past, and has continued to keep the bishop of East Timor, who is not a member of the Indonesian Conference of Bishops, under its direct control. It has assured those concerned that this position has not changed.

In light of the Pope's visit, the world must be made aware of the grim and desperate human rights situation that has been observed and reported in East Timor. I have spoken out in the past against this situation by leading 47 of our Senate colleagues in sending a letter, coauthored by Senator LEVIN, to former Secretary of State Shultz, which outlined our concerns about human rights violations, the restrictions on international observation groups, and armed conflict in East Timor. More recently, 118 Members of the House of Representatives signed a letter to President Bush raising similar concerns on the occasion of Indonesian President Suharto's June 1989 visit to Washington. Since that time, few changes have been made and the situation persists.

Although the Indonesian Government largely opened East Timor to commerce and tourism in January of this year, this opening was incomplete as the Government has continued to place restrictions on access to and travel within the East Timor. International human rights organizations are still not allowed to enter this territory and the visits of foreign delegations are carefully controlled. The Government also maintains a firm hold on the press as well as on all lines of communication throughout the area.

Reports and statements from such organizations as Amnesty International, have made us more aware of the extent to which human rights are being violated in this territory. This organization has reported as commonplace such incidences as mass arrests for what appear to be political reasons, the torture and ill treatment of citizens in police and military custody, extrajudicial executions, and detainment of prisoners for their nonviolent or religious beliefs.

I would like to commend the head of East Timor's Roman Catholic Church, Bishop Carlos Ximenes Belo, for his courage in repeatedly condemning the human rights violations in East Timor. More recently, he described the atmosphere in East Timor in the period leading up to this papal visit as an "environment of terror." Under these circumstances, Pope John Paul's words on Monday, October 9, as summarized by Reuters News Agency, that "human rights and self-determination must be respected" are especially welcome.

At this time, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to this morning's latest AP newswire regarding East Timor and the papal visit. Regretfully, I must relay to you the grim news that fighting broke out this morning between the police and civilians before the altar where Pope John Paul II was finishing his benediction to about 600,000 people. The protesters, shouting "Viva Independence" and "Viva Papa," were met by baton-wielding police who hit the youths as they unfurled banners expressing their proindependence sentiments. At least four people were injured.

The Pope himself lent his support to the East Timorese by urging Indonesia in his homily to respect the human rights of the people of predominantly Catholic East Timor. He asked that Indonesia "act with wisdom and good will toward all" in search for a peaceful solution to East Timor's problems, and requested that they bring about "a speedy improvement of conditions of life" on this island.

As a Member of the United States Senate and an advocate of human rights throughout the world, I feel compelled once again to remind my colleagues about this situation in East Timor, and to personally urge the Indonesian Government to respect the rights and will of the people of East Timor. I fully support the people of East Timor in their request that a referendum be called on the status of the territory. I believe that every consideration be given to these people in their attempts to attain the right to self-determination and fundamental freedoms and that they be encouraged to continue efforts to preserve their own identity, their culture, language, and religion.

I would like to call to my colleague's attention an article that appeared in the Washington Post on October 10, regarding the Pope's visit to East Timor, as well as an article that appeared in the Economist on September 30, that also pertains to this issue.

Mr. President, I ask that the aforementioned articles from the Washington Post and the Economist be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The material follows:

THE POPE IN ASIA; NO TIME FOR TIMOROUSNESS

Pope John Paul is no stranger to explosive situations, but one that awaits him on his trip to Asia from October 6th to 16th will demand even more sensitive handling than most. The minefield is East Timor, a former Portuguese possession annexted by Indonesia in 1976 in the wake of Portugal's 1974 revolution.

Three-quarters of East Timorese 700,000 people are Roman Catholic. Most are opposed to Indonesian rule, some of them fighting a guerrilla war which obliges the Indonesian government to keep an army on the island. Bishop Carlos Ximenes Belo sent a letter to the United Nations secretary-general in May seeking support for a referendum that would allow the East Timorese to decide their own future. The Catholics at first feared that the Pope's visit would amount to tacit recognition of the Indonesians' right to be there. In fact, Vatican, like the UN, Portugal and some governments, does not recognize East Timor's annexation. Bishop Belo's diocese is administered direct from Rome.

Catholics make up only 3% of Indonesia's total population of some 178m, the vast majority of whom are Muslims. But the Catholic church is making gains; in 1941, when the Dutch still ruled the country, there were 540,000 Catholics, most of them Dutch. Now there are at least 4.4m. As in South Korea, the growth has been mainly amoung the middle class. One attraction is the excellence of Catholic schools, only 55% of whose pupils are, in fact, Catholic. The Catholic ritual also seems to attract many Indonesians, whose native religions are mystical in character.

Indonesian bishops had been hoping for a papal visit for a long time, not least because they reckoned that it would strengthen the church's position against attacks by strongly anti-Catholic (and anti-Christian) Muslin fundamentalists. The government also worries about the fundamentalists. To appease them the papal visit will be a state visit—the Pope is head of the Vatican state—rather than a pastoral visit to his flock. But the call on East Timor will be a pastoral one. Another potentially contentious issue was the languae the Pope should use to celebrate mass when in East Timor: the local Tetum or Bahasa-Indonesian. This has been resolved by a decision to say it in Latin.

The test of the soundness of this diplomatic footwork will be what happens on October 12th, when the Pope arrives. Jakarta Radio announced last week that security would be tightened during the visit to East Timor to "prevent undesirable elements form exploiting the event".

CONTROVERSY RISES OVER POPE'S EAST TIMOR TRIP—IN INDONESIA, PONTIFF TALKS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

(By Peter Wise)

LISBON, October 9.—The four hours Pope John Paul II spends in the disputed territory of East Timor on Thursday may prove to be the most politically controversial moments of the 10-day journey to Asia that he began last week in South Korea and continued in Indonesia today.

Portugal, the colonian ruler of East Timor until Indonesia invaded the island territory in 1975, is confident the Pope will use his visit to condemn alleged human rights violations by Indonesian security forces, including torture, summary executions and disappearances.

On arriving in Indonesia today, the pontiff told President Suharto and other Indonesian government officials in a speech that human rights and self-determination must be respected, Reuter reported, "At times nations are tempted to disregard fundamental human rights in a misguided search for political unity based on military or economic power alone. But such unity can easily be dissolved," the Pope said.

Lisbon government officials have also said they expect John Paul to appeal for a negotiated solution to the 14-year conflict in East Timor, which humanitarian organizations estimate has resulted in the deaths of at least 100,000 of the island's original population of 700,000 people.

But privately, the Portuguese government has expressed concern to the Vatican that Indonesia will seek to portray the visit as representing papal recognition of its sovereignty over East Timor, according to diplomatic sources in Lisbon.

For its part, the Pope has sought to relieve such concerns by saying his visit is purely pastoral and he has a duty to the largely Catholic population there. The Vatican does not recognize Indonesian sovereignty over East Timor and the Diocese that covers the island is administered directly from Rome.

Lisbon officials have voiced their fears to Rome, through diplomatic channels, that the Jakarta government will orchestrate the Pope's visit to show the world a false picture of peaceful stability and popular support for Indonesian rule in East Timore, the sources said.

Lisbon-based leaders of the Convergencia Nacionalista, a coalition of two resistance movements fighting a guerrilla campaign for East Timor's independence, said human rights groups and Catholic church sources in East Timor have reported a growing number of arrests and interrogations since April.

The resistance leaders said the alleged repression is aimed at preventing any sign of opposition to Indonesian rule emerging during the papal visit. They also said thousands of Indonesians were being sent to the territory to ensure that crowds greeting the pope were sympathetic to Jakarta.

Indonesian troops invaded East Timor in December 1975 after Portugal's colonial forces withdrew amid an outbreak of fighting between rival independence movements. The following year, Jakarta formally annexed the Hawaii-sized territory off northwestern Australia.

Jakarta claims that an East Timorese assembly chose integration with Indonesia in 1976, but the United Nations does not recognize Indonesian sovereignty. Portugal, still the administrating power under international law, is pressing for an act of self-determination that will allow the East Timorese to decide their own future.

Nationalist guerrillas have been fighting Indonesian rule from bases in the mountainous east of the island since 1975. Jose Guterres, a spokesman for the main resistance movement, Fretilin, said the guerrillas number 3,500 men armed with G-3 and Mauser automatic rifles.

Reports from East Timor have indicated that at least 20 Indonesian battalions—more than 15,000 men—are stationed in the territory following a military buildup that began before a visit by Suharto last November, according to Guterres. He said Indonesian troops were engaged in anti-guerrilla offensives involving artillery, air and naval bombardments.

Last year, almost half of the members of the U.S. Congress wrote a letter to then secretary of state George P. Shultz expressing concern about human rights violations in East Timor. In June, 118, members of the House of Representatives signed a similar letter to President Bush.

Indonesia strongly denies charges of human rights abuses. Speaking to the U.N. Special Committee on Decolonization in New York in August, Agus Tarmidzi, an Indonesian representative, described such allegations as "well-worn half-truths, distortions and outright falsehoods,"

In August, the U.N. Subcommittee for Human Rights in Geneva approved a motion acknowledging steps by Indonesia to allow more access to East Timor since January but lamenting that "more detentions, torture and summary executions have allegedly taken place since the end of 1988."

In a report on East Timor presented to both U.N. bodies, the London-based human rights group Amnesty International said it had "received reports of grave violations of human rights over the last year, including mass arrests for what appeared to be political reasons, unfair trials, torture of prisoners in police and military custody, extra-judicial executions, incommunicado detention and 'disappearances.'"

The Amnesty report said people had been arrested for involvement in the dissemination of documents calling for a referendum on the political status of the territory and detailing alleged human rights abuses. Some were documents signed by the head of the Roman Catholic Church in East Timor, Bishop Carlos Ximenses Belo, according to Amnesty.

In February, Belo wrote to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar asking for the United Nations to help bring about a referendum on the future of East Timor. Last December, in a pastoral note quoted in the Amnesty report, Belo said detainees were commonly subject to "blows, kickings and beatings." Some reports from East Timor have suggested that Indonesian authorities may seek the replacement of Belo because of his outspokenness.●

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER MEDICAL CENTER

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs be discharged from further consideration on H.R. 2987, the Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill [H.R. 2987] to rename the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Leavenworth, Kansas as the Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise today in support of my distinguished colleagues Senator KASSEBAUM and Congressman SLATTERY, who introduced the House bill, in renaming the veterans' affairs medical center in Leavenworth, KS, after a national hero and Kansan who served his country and the world—Dwight David Eisenhower.

Eisenhower's outstanding career was one of Kansas' greatest contributions to the Nation and the world. The unique political skills of this farmboy from Kansas helped forge and hold together an unprecedented world alliance that achieved victory and secured peace for Western democracy.

Eisenhower grew up in Abilene, KS. He came from a poor family, working in a creamery and selling vegetables to help his family meet expenses. His distinguished military career began when he entered West Point, and reached its zenith as the Commander in Chief of the combined allied expeditionary forces in Europe.

In December 1944, Eisenhower was given the newly created rank of five-star general, less than a year later becoming Army Chief of Staff. Following this tour of duty, he retired briefly from active service. But his country would not let him retire for long; President Truman called Eisenhower to serve once again—this time as supreme commander of NATO forces in Europe. Some time later, Eisenhower received his most distinguished promotion: the people of the United States elected him their President.

Once again, Eisenhower served his country well. He ran for President promising to go to Korea, and as President saw the signing of the truce that remains intact today. His term also saw the addition of Alaska and Hawaii to the Union. He sent the Army to Little Rock, AR, to enforce the landmark racial desegregation decision. The "open skies" policy of weapons verification with the Soviet Union was originally his brainchild.

Mr. President, the life and accomplishments of Dwight Eisenhower are far too distinguished and numerous, and time too limited to recite fully here. This Nation owes him special honor. Naming the Leavenworth VA medical center in Leavenworth, KS, in his memory is a fitting tribute. My good friend and fellow Kansan, Senator KASSEBAUM, introduced legislation July 25 to render this tribute and rename this medical center. Her determination and persistence have played a major part in bringing this effort to completion; Kansans and all veterans owe her thanks for her commitment.

This hospital serves our veterans. It assists those men and women who have given so much for our country, and in fact, to whom we owe the preservation of our freedom and democracy. As a veteran, I understand the needs of my fellow veterans, and the debt that this country owes them. This hospital is one way our Nation attempts to pay this debt.

Mr. President, I believe that Dwight Eisenhower would be proud to have his name on this hospital that serves fellow veterans. I think that Senator KASSEBAUM and I can speak for all Kansans when I say that we would be honored to rename the Leavenworth VA medical center after this distinguished hero.

October 14, 1990 is the centennial of Eisenhower's birth. I think the time is right to bestow this well-deserved honor. As part of the celebration I join Senator KASSEBAUM in seeking to rename the State's oldest veterans affair medical center after one of Kansas' greatest sons, Dwight David Eisenhower.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I have this opportunity to vote for final passage of H.R. 2987, the House version of a bill I introduced in the Senate to redesignate the Veterans' Administration medical center in Leavenworth, KA, as the "Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center." I am honored that my colleague Senator DOLE joined me as a cosponsor of this bill. The renaming of this historic facility would be fitting, for two reasons. First, President Eisenhower had very close ties with the State of Kansas. In the town of Abilene, KA, can be found not only the Eisenhower Museum and Library, but also his family home and final resting place.

Second, next year will commemorate the 100th anniversary of President Eisenhower's birth. As members of the Eisenhower Centennial Commission, Senator DOLE and I will be engaged in a number of activities throughout the country. In fact, the rededication of the Leavenworth hospital will act as a major event in kicking off the Eisenhower Centennial celebration in Kansas, which will be held in the last week of January 1990.

Dwight David Eisenhower has proved to be one of the most popular Presidents of all time, and his midwestern roots can be found in the legacy of his Presidency: a genuinely bipartisan domestic and foreign policy; a Federal Government living within its means; significant international exchanges founded on the notion that reasonable and sound negotiation can be effective; and a national commitment to education, science, and technology. He was a decent and good-humored man, a strong leader, with a vision both practical and farsighted.

For these reasons, I believe designating the Leavenworth VA hospital in President Eisenhower's honor would be a fitting tribute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 2987) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

LIBRARY SERVICES AND CONSTRUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calender item No. 233, S. 1291, a bill to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1291) to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act, and for other purposes, reported with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with amendments as follows:

SEC. [20.] 21. EFFECTIVE DATE PROVISION.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1989.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to rise today on behalf of S. 1291, the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989.

The Subcommittee on Education, Arts and Humanities held a joint hearing with the House Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education on April 11, 1989, at which testimony was received from a broad cross-section of individuals from the public library field. The support for reauthorizing LSCA was broad and enthusiastic. It became very clear that libraries play an important role in communities across America.

This act, which was first signed into law in 1956 by President Eisenhower, continues to be the single most significant source of Federal funds for our Nation's public libraries. The importance of libraries to an educated American citizenry is undeniable and it is crucial that these institutions—be they urban or rural, large or small—be kept strong, viable, and growing.

The LSCA has successfully provided much-needed Federal support to the States through a system of formula grants. While the total amount is a small percentage of all library aid, these moneys have been targeted toward particularly critical areas. These areas include services to the physically handicapped and the elderly and to communities with little or no access to a public library.

In more recent years, the LSCA has been expanded to provide a set-aside to support library services to American Indians and native Hawaiians and to address the specific needs of illiterate and multilingual populations. In addition, the problems in providing adequate library services to urban populations have been acknowledged to be just as profound as those of providing services to rural populations.

It is the intent of these 1989 amendments to ensure the continuity of these important library services by reauthorizing the LSCA for another 5 years. As the Committee on Labor and Human Resources began its review of LSCA in anticipation of this reauthorization, its was generally agreed that significant changes to the act should await the recommendations of the White House Conference on Library and Information Services.

The White House Conference, authorized in the last Congress, is to be held not later than September 1991. Preliminary conferences in the States will occur at which major issues currently facing the library community will be discussed at length. It is prudent to await the findings generated by this Conference so that they can be part of any future congressional discussion on changes to the LSCA.

The modifications then in this reauthorization bill are largely technical in nature and have been incorporated in response to requests from the Department of Education and the national public library community. However, the two areas of technology and preservation do receive increased emphasis in the bill because the projected needs in these areas are not adequately provided for in current law. The States are given greater latitude in using LSCA funds for purchasing and maintaining technological equipment and they are given the option of using title III funds for developing programs to address preservation needs. The added emphasis on preservation programs will hopefully encourage libraries to protect endangered materials and preserve them for future generations.

In addition, title I purposes have been expanded to include literacy and childcare activities; a new title VII has been added for the evaluation and assessment of LSCA by the Department of Education and various technical amendments have been included to increase flexibility and efficiency of current LSCA programs. Title V, which supports the acquisition of foreign language materials by public libraries, has also been amended by waiving the maximum grant available to major urban resource libraries. This action recognizes the increasing demand on these libraries for such materials and the escalating cost of them.

I commend these Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989 to my colleagues and ask that they join me in supporting this legislation which will reaffirm our commitment to our Nation's public libraries.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I join with the distinguished chairman, Senator PELL, in support of this legislation which reauthorizes programs that provide library services to individuals across the country.

The original Library Services and Construction Act was signed into law in 1956 for the primary purpose of assisting States in extending library services to rural America. For Kansas, this was a very important step. At that time, only one in six Americans had access to a public library.

Today, all 50 States enjoy the services that public libraries provide. Piled high in the stacks of books are dreams for our youth to hold, ideals to which to aspire. Found behind the doors of the local public library are gifts waiting to be snatched up and carried home. Aldous Huxley once noted that "Every man who knows how to read has it in his power to magnify himself, to multiply the ways in which he exists, to make his life full, significant and interesting."

I believe that, for the most part, LSCA is operating well. The bill we are considering today reauthorizes the original Library Services and Construction Act, or LSCA, and makes minor modifications and technical changes to the act to help our Nation meet the needs of our ever-changing society. It builds upon the initial purpose of the act and attempts to continue a tradition of providing services while encouraging innovation and preservation of resources.

The Library Services and Construction Act Amendments is composed of seven titles. The first title strengthens State library administrative agencies and major urban resource libraries. The second title, Public Library Construction, is a popular program which provides funds for the construction of public libraries. Title III provides funds for the development of interlibrary cooperation and resource-sharing programs which will permit individuals even greater access to resources currently available to them.

Title IV strengthens the programs available to native Americans and title V provides funds for libraries to purchase materials in foreign languages. Title VI addresses the problem of illiteracy now facing our Nation by designating funds for the development of literacy programs.

The last title is title VII which allows for the evaluation and assessment of library programs. The purpose of these funds is to provide a review of programs supported under the authority of the LSCA and the degree to which they are reaching their intended populations. Since the Library Services and Construction Act receives a relatively small share of Federal funds, I think it is important that we account for how those dollars are spent.

The focus of the act as it stands today is to encourage innovation and to reach out to groups such as the disadvantaged, elderly, and handicapped—who might not otherwise be able to enjoy the treasures to be found on library shelves. As Thomas Carlyle so wisely noted, "All that mankind has done, thought, gained or been: it is lying as in magic preservation in the pages of books."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in voicing my support for S. 1291, the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989. The passage of this bill represents the Senate's continuing commitment to our Nation's libraries.

In reauthorizing the Library Services and Construction Act, the Labor and Human Resources Committee talked to hundreds of librarians across the country who expressed their support for the existing program. As a result, the bill we are considering today takes into account their views and suggestions. This bill continues the programs under the act for an additional 5 years and also includes many improvements. I am particularly pleased that we are increasing the authorization level for "Title VI—Literacy Grants," to $10 million. In addition, libraries would be eligible to receive individual grants of $35,000 under this title to conduct adult literacy activities, an increase of $10,000.

The "Title I—Library Services Grants" have been used generally to expand programs serving the elderly, handicapped, and underserved areas. Under this reauthorization measure, libraries would be allowed to establish model literacy centers in cooperation with other entities such as public television. I am pleased that title I funds may now be used for these purposes, and I thank the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator PELL and Senator KASSEBAUM for including this language in the bill.

Since its enactment in 1956, the Library Services and Construction Act has remained the largest source of Federal assistance for our Nation's libraries. The 1989 reauthorization improves upon the commitment made in 1956. It is my hope that this legislation will be approved by the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senate's prompt consideration of this bill. I am a strong supporter of libraries and the opportunities they give to Americans throughout the country.

The purpose of the original act was to enable citizens, regardless of their location, to have access to library services. This act has encouraged local governments in Utah and elsewhere in the country to expand their library services. As we continue to emphasize the value of literacy in the United States, we have to provide library services to enable all citizens to have access to good literature and resource materials. This has been done in urban areas by establishing centrally located libraries. In rural areas this has been accomplished by establishing libraries and also by developing bookmobiles which can provide those services to outlying areas which cannot build and support a local library.

This bill will allow us to continue to provide these valuable services to the citizens of this country. This bill is just one step in our fight to increase the literacy level of our citizens.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1989. The Library Services Act was first signed into law by President Eisenhower in 1956 to assist States in providing library services to underserved areas.

One of the underserved areas today is the child care provider. Both in-home providers and center-based providers have a need for additional educational material for the children. Providers who work to provide an educationally stimulating environment spend an increasing amount of time and money to obtain the necessary materials. While the public library oftentimes has all the materials that a provider would want, what is the best way to bring the provider and the library together?

It is difficult for providers to take all their children to the library or to find time after hours to check out the desired materials.

It was for these reasons that I introduced an amendment to allow libraries to use their title I funds to provide bookmobiles or other appropriate vehicles to deliver books, tapes, videos, and educational toys to licensed or certified family providers, child care centers, or other providers that meet State eligibility requirements.

Mr. President, I want to thank the Committee on Labor and Human Resources for accepting my amendment and I look forward to hearing from child care providers on the utilization of this provision.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Library Services and Construction Act [LSCA]. This bill represents the largest Federal program which specifically funds libraries. The money go toward construction of facilities, general library services, library services for Indian tribes, foreign language materials acquisition, and library literacy programs.

There can be no questioning the importance of this bill to my own State of Vermont. Two-thirds of the libraries in Vermont serve populations of fewer than 2,000 people. These are geographically isolated areas without access to major metropolitan libraries. Yet, while geographically isolated, they are not isolated from access to information, thanks to the services rendered to them through the LSCA.

Title I of the bill provides my State of Vermont with education and training for its librarians, 90 percent of whom come to libraries with no training whatsoever.

In 1988, Title II of the bill provided Vermont with $100,000 for building construction and improvement. Last year, Vermont used this money to help finance a new town library where previously none existed. Federal funds only accounted for 10 percent of the total costs, but to a small State such as my own 10 percent is crucial.

Title III of the bill is probably the single most important title of LSCA for my State. Title III moneys go to facilitate interlibrary loans and access to information. Because of this money, each of the small libraries throughout the State can access the large research libraries such as the one situated at the University of Vermont. This telecommunications capability is at no expense to the university—all access is done through computer network. Clearly, this effective and essential activity could not have been provided without Federal money.

Furthermore, LSCA provided Vermont with $50,000 worth of computer printed catalog cards which otherwise would have had to be done by staff. It provided consultant services to libraries for computer training, catalog updates, and general services. Finally, LSCA has provided institutional libraries with long overdue services for the blind and handicapped.

This bill clearly expands services to States. It gives children and adults a glimpse into a whole new world by giving them access to information and books. I have outlined the financial assistance provided to Vermont through the LSCA—what I cannot do so easily but which is far more important is tally the countless number of children and adults who have benefited from this program.

B-1B "HARD RIDE" PROVES TO BE A THRILLING SUCCESS

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to my colleagues' attention an excellent article regarding the B-1 bomber that recently appeared in the Air Force Times. This article clearly shows that the B-1 can and is fulfilling its mission. I would encourage all my colleagues to read this article and to support the B-1 bomber.

[From the Air Force Times, Oct. 9, 1989]

B-1B "HARD RIDE" PROVES TO BE A THRILLING SUCCESS

(By David Fulghum)

MOUNTAIN HOME AFB, IDAHO.—With deadpan matter-of-factness, Maj. Robert W. Nicholson, Jr., described his feelings of fleeting mortality as granite cliffs flashed by the porthole of his B-1B.

"I was thinking about staying alive," said the instructor defensive systems officer describing a Sept. 21 flight during which his crew—members of the 319th Bombardment Wing from Grand Forks AFB, N.D.—flew the big bomber on "hard ride."

Hard ride only recently has been approved for use by operational units after an extensive test program, wing officials said.

Previously, "soft" and "medium" ride were used, which inflicted far less G force on the aircrew but might make the aircraft easier to track, they said.

As the system has proved its reliability, Strategic Air Command has removed restrictions on its use, wing officials said.

Trusting the B-1B's terrain-following radar system to perform feats faster than the eyes and hands of even the best pilots, they sizzled through a range of 5,000- to 10,000-foot mountains at a constant distance of less than 500 feet above the ground.

With solid rock only an instant away at their 630 mph penetration speed, crew members have developed tricks to lessen the tension, Nicholson said. Because only the pilot and co-pilot can see when a precipitous drop is coming, they call out "pushover" before they get to the top of a mountain or ridge, he said.

"It's too drastic if you (the defensive and offensive systems operators in back) don't know what is going on," Nicholson said.

In fact, low flight involves all four crew members, with the pilot and co-pilot calling out the location of approaching mountains, the offensive systems officer reporting their heights and the DSO suggesting the best way to fly around them, Nicholson said.

Because of the attention-riveting aspects of low flight on hard ride in the B-1B and the lack of room for error, Nicholson said, "there's no way I would (fly) in the aircraft" without complete trust in the system.

While it is easy to find critics of the B-1B in the halls of Congress, Nicholson's obvious enthusiasm was much more representative of the general feeling on the flight line here.

Air and ground crews were just short of euphoric about the performance of the big bomber as they finished the 8th Air Force's nearly month long Mighty Warrior '89 exercise.

For the first time, they tested the ability of large numbers of B-1Bs—attended by big-engined KC-135R Stratotankers—to complete a heavy combat schedule while flying from a bare-bones base and while isolated from much of their SAC home-base support, said Col. Harvard L. Lomax, the wing commander.

To deploy to a fighter base, "as we would to Europe . . . was novel," said Maj. Jeff Steig, tanker operations officer for the exercise.

Mountain Home is a base for F-111s and EF-111s. After the arrival of an advance party to set up tents, showers and other basics, seven bombers, four tankers and about 400 people were deployed there for 12 days of intensive flying and conventional bombing practice, he said.

After spraying to rid the area of black widow spiders and ants, the camp settled into a routine broken only by a single case of heat exhaustion. Entertainment was provided by busing camp members to university football games and shopping trips to Boise, Idaho; pingpong tournaments "if the wind wasn't bad"; and the chance for many—including aircrews—to watch live B-1B bombing for the first time.

The bomber force completed all 69 planned takeoffs on time and each crew flew eight or nine sorties, said Col. Walter L. Mosher, the wing's deputy commander for maintenance.

Moreover, it was all squeezed into a quarter of the normal training time, said Capt. Jeff Smith, a B-1 aircraft commander.

The schedule, which required a bomber to fly as often as four times in a single day, was met despite damage to four engines, said Lt. Col. John Priecko, commander of the 46th Bombardment Squadron.

Ice formed on air inlets, broke loose and was sucked into the engines, causing damage, Priecko said.

The ice formed after several aircraft descended through layers of rain clouds that began at 25,000 feet, Priecko said. If the B-1s had been at low level, air friction would have kept ice from forming, he said.

Problems arose when the aircraft were descending at low speed, Priecko said. Sensors to detect ice buildup missed some areas, he said, adding that improvements in the deicing system are in the works.

The supporting tankers flew 58 sorties—missing only one takeoff—pumped 1.2 million pounds of fuel, hauled 1,020 passengers and provided the logistics train to Grand Forks to quickly provide needed spare parts, Steig said.

"Two years ago, we couldn't have done this," Priecko said. "We're on a roll."

BOMBING WITH THE B-1B

Of the bombing sorties, four were scrubbed for possible mechanical problems, two because of thunderstorms in the range area and one because an unauthorized truck drove across the target, a preliminary report said.

Despite these problems, the crews put 76 percent of their bombs on the target at an average distance from the center of 128 feet, Mosher said. This was accomplished even though the B-1's speed has cut the time for a bomb run from six or seven minutes to two or three minutes, he said.

Ten years ago, that distance would have been a winning score; "now, it's average," Mosher said.

"The only reason it wasn't 100 percent hits was because we were trying out a lot of new techniques," said Maj. Glenn Pallazza, assistant chief of the offensive systems branch.

Squadron officers said the most embarrassing part of the exercise was an experiment to see how well crews could bomb by sight. Poor scores lowered the average and showed the crews' attempts to judge the release point by sight was the worst bombing method available.

A factor in increasing accuracy is that the radar used for bombing is so sensitive that it can spot the corner posts in chainlink fences, said Capt. Kevin Heard, an OSO. Such small checkpoints can be used as reference points for precisely locating targets, he said.

While a B-52 can hit a hangar-sized target, the phased-array radar on the B-1 can accurately bomb something as small as a trash bin, Heard said. The sensitivity results from the radar creating an artificial antenna a third of a mile long, he said.

Moreover, it is a sensitivity that the eye—stunned by movements of 1,000 feet per second—cannot match, Heard said.

The bombing improved as the exercise progressed, and the last bomb dropped on a Sept. 21 mission to an airfield in "East Slavia"—actually Tolicha Airfield on one of the bombing ranges north of Nellis AFB, Nev.—hit within nine feet of the target.

The bomb was dropped by Capt. Jerry Murphy, an instructor OSO who was assigned to the planning staff but wheeled his way onto a mission. After studying tapes of the other drops, he thought he saw a way to improve.

Murphy is vague with outsiders about the exact process that gave him such extraordinary accuracy.

The OSO said he used different offsets as aiming points than the other OSOs did. Squadron mates said he cranked a little "'Kentucky windage' into the computer." The result was a bomb dropped within a desk's length of where it was aimed.

"I think we've started breaking the code" that will allow them to routinely bomb with such precision, Murphy said.

Originally, B-1 crews started with B-52 Stratofortresses and FB-111 bombing data, Priecko said. Now, practitioners such as Murphy are learning the strengths and special capabilities of the B-2, he said.

The precision is so good, B-1 units "may pick up the role of destroying (single) buildings" instead of the area bombing done by heavy bombers in the past, Nicholson said.

"We're writing the book on (B-1) tactics," said Capt. John Ballentine, operations officer for Mighty Warrior.

In addition, tactics developed for the B-1 may be used by crews of the Air Force's newest bomber, the B-2A, said Brig. Gen. Patrick P. Caruana, newly appointed commander of the 42nd Air Division at Grand Forks.

Having flown the B-2 simulator, Caruana said it is a high-performance aircraft and will deliver its weapons essentially the same way the B-1 does.

BEATING FIGHTERS AND RADAR

To hit their targets, B-1s first must get through enemy defenses.

Prior to Mighty Warrior, various B-1 crews skirmished with Navy F-14 Tomcats, Canadian F/A-18 Hornets and the Air Force's F-15 Eagles and F-16 Fighting Falcons, Ballentine said. Afterward, they went over the missions while face to face with the fighter pilots they flew against, he said.

As a result, B-1 pilots are little worried by interceptors, Ballentine said. The radar signature of the B-1 is so slight and the defensive avionics good enough that radar missiles cannot lock on, he said.

While the B-1's defensive electronics have been the main criticism of the B-1 and they will never perform as hoped, they do function well enough to let the aircraft survive existing air defenses, Capt. Daniel P. Grenier said.

The ECM system on the aircraft now can sort threats by priority and react against them automatically. The system also knows when it is dangerous to use ECM, he said.

The philosophy of deception and camouflage is to ensure that the aircraft is never spotted, so that it does not have to overpower defenses, Grenier said.

Ballentine said his confidence in the ECM has doubled, and in his experience it invariably has forced pursuit aircraft to abandon their radar missiles and switch to infrared missiles or guns.

Flares can lure the heat-seeking missiles away from the bomber.

Moreover, with friendly fighter support to keep the defenders busy, the B-1 becomes even harder to attack, Grenier said. With the bomber flying four or five miles ahead of the escort, any defender turning behind the B-1 would itself become a target, he said.

"It proved the value of mutual support to us," Grenier said.

As for the big land-and ship-based surveillance radars, the B-1 crews again said they were not worried.

They are vulnerable only at high altitudes where they sometimes fly to conserve fuel en route to distant targets, a squadron pilot said.

However, to attack the B-1s at such altitudes would require one-way missions, because even long-range fighters such as the MiG-29 Fulcrums would use up all their fuel just reaching the bombers before they descended to low altitude and disappeared into the background, he said.

After flying in recent months against U.S. shipboard and land surveillance radars, crews think that with surprise, 95 percent of an attacking B-1 force can get through existing defenses undetected, Nicholson said.

"Offensively, we're better than we thought," Priecko agreed. The only radar that was effective in spotting the B-1 was the computer-enhanced variety aboard Aegis cruisers, he said.

During recent exercises with Air National Guard F-4 Phantom IIs escorting B-1s, the formation's position was revealed by the fighters' heavy smoke trail against a white cloud layer, Nicholson said. Other than this one visual sighting, the bombers got through U.S. defenses, he said.

"We surprised a lot of fighter people," said a senior pilot. "They can't find us and can't catch us.

The enemy gets one pass and then the B-1 is gone, Priecko said. The bomber is a big plane with lots of gas that allows it to outrun interceptors for hours, he said.

SPARE PARTS

A critical part of Mighty Warrior was to test how few spare parts a large B-1 detachment could deploy with and still keep its aircraft flying.

After experimenting with smaller deployments of up to five B-1s, Mosher—the 319th BMW's deputy commander for maintenance—and his team were able to predict their needs fairly well.

About 60 percent of the repairs were made the same day. The rate went up to 80 percent after one day and to 90 percent after two days, Mosher said. The longer delays resulted when parts had to be flown from Grand Forks, he said.

Of 250 types of items brought with them, including commonly used gaskets, screws and bolts, only 70 were used, said SSgt. Peter Bohannon, NCO in charge of the wing's war-readiness section. Of 130 parts requested, more than 100 were on hand, he said.

There have been some surprises in maintaining the B-1, Mosher said. Engine nozzles wear out faster than expected because of the high turbulence encountered flying low-level missions in the mountains, he said.

This was not a specific Mighty Warrior problem, Mosher said.

But high tire use was attributable to the exercise because Mountain Home's asphalt runways used them up at a faster rate than concrete runways, said Steig, whose transports hauled in spare parts.

Overall, the 15 percent attrition rate of missions scrubbed at the last minute because of maintenance problems just did not occur, said Capt. Alan Byerly, a maintenance officer.

In addition to canceling no missions, the detachment had less than 13 percent of its aircraft requiring repair at any time, Mosher said.

"What's shocking all of us is the reliability," he said.

They simply didn't have any major problems, said A1C Stephen Neal, a defensive avionics, navigation, communications systems specialist. No planes were grounded because of the much-maligned electronic countermeasures system, he said.

The biggest challenge came in the form of an unexpected technical order that grounded five of seven planes for 48 hours until inspections and repairs were made, Mosher said. During that time, the two remaining B-1s were flown up to four times a day by different crews, and no missions were scrubbed, he said.

PRIOR B-1B COMPLAINTS

Mosher and other maintenance officials talked about some of the problems that plagued the B-1 in the past.

Terrain-following software: The computer software problems essentially have been licked and aircrews are routinely flying their aircraft between 300 and 500 feet, even in the mountains.

The B-1s routinely are starting to use a new version of the software (designated 4.5), which almost eliminates unexpected "fly ups," Mosher said. (At any hint of malfunction during low-level flight, the B-1 is designed to automatically climb to an altitude above the highest terrain.)

Smith, who has about 60 flying hours with the new software, said enough imperfections have been removed from the software that he has had no fly ups that he did not initiate.

After wringing the system out "like never before" during Mighty Warrior, aircrews are so confident that they plan to begin terrain-following night flights in October, Ballentine said.

Restriction remain only on flying over heavy snowpacks and sand, materials that give readings different from other surfaces, Smith said.

Defensive electronics: The best plan is to never get in a position where ECM has to be used to foil an enemy air- or ground-launched missile, Nicholson said.

When the system is on, it does not emit signals that would give away the B-1's position until they are needed, Nicholson said. When jamming is used, it emits only in a certain direction, he said.

Moreover, when ECM emits jamming signals that could reveal its position, it does so only for a short time and then shuts down, Nicholson said.

While improvements in the defensive system continue, "we have what we need" to survive today's threat, Nicholson said. "But it's a chess game, (and) we have to stay a step ahead."

Stall-inhibiting system: SIS II has been improved so the B-1 can fly at low levels carrying more weight, Ballentine said. That means more fuel and an increased strike range for the bomber, he said.

It allows pilots "to press closer to the margins of the (flight) envelope than before" without getting into trouble, Smith said.

Overall, Mighty Warrior '89, for the B-1B and its aircrews, is both an end and a beginning.

It is an end in that the original crews—carefully selected from among top bomber, transport and training pilots—are completing their tours and being transferred.

They are being replaced by less rigorously selected aircrews, including the first second lieutenant to serve as B-1 co-pilot.

While the new crews are younger, they are more than a match in aggressiveness and enthusiasm for those they replace, Heard said. Moreover, since they are "growing up in the system," they have fewer bad habits to overcome and adjustments to make, he said.

Mighty Warrior is a beginning in that the B-1 can begin taking its place as a qualified bombing craft that routinely can drive on targets at 200 feet altitude and more than 600 mph.

The B-1B's performance in Mighty Warrior and in the months before is the "best evidence for the skeptical," Lomax said.

Mighty Warrior has put an end to the old joke that SAC bombers can fly anywhere in the world, but can only land at home.

THE UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON THE RIGHTS OF THE CHILD

HON. GEORGE MILLER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I recently had the honor of delivering the keynote address on September 30 at the Conference on the U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child, held by the East Bay Chapter of the United Nations Association of the U.S.A.

I am submitting my remarks at the Conference for the record:

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN GEORGE MILLER

Good morning. I am honored to be with you this morning, and I am pleased to be among so many activists who have dedicated your lives to improving the well-being of children.

THE U.N. CONVENTION AND THE STATUS OF CHILDREN

In November, the United Nations General Assembly will take up the proposed Convention on the Rights of the Child. This landmark treaty, if approved and ratified, would place many basic human rights for children in international law for the first time.

Much of the publicity surrounding the Convention has focused on the status of children across the globe, and especially on the status of children in the Third World. Whether it is the killing and maiming of children of children in Central America, the famine in Ethiopia and sub-Sahara Africa, or the tens of thousands of child soldiers killed in the Iran-Iraq war, the state of the world's children is shocking.

More than 38,000 children die every day due to a lack of food, shelter, or primary health care. Approximately 800,000 infants die each year of neonatal tetanus alone, which can be prevented by immunizing the mother.

More than one billion people—the majority of them children—either have no home or live in inadequate housing.

Over 100 million children throughout the world are forced to work under hazardous and often fatal conditions, many for almost no pay.

In the last Congress, I introduced legislation to help stop the worldwide exploitation of child labor. As a result of this legislation, the Secretary of State must now report to the Congress on which countries abide by internationally recognized child labor rights. This law also directed the U.S. delegation to the U.N. to call further attention to the exploitation of child laborers.

This legislation is just a beginning. It is my hope that the Congress will vote to ban the importation of items produced in violation of child labor rights.

U.S. CHILDREN IN CRITICAL CONDITION

However, you don't have to go abroad to discover that we need a broader recognition of children's rights. The House of Representatives Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, which I chair, was created in 1983 to develop an accurate picture of American children, and to document their needs and their status. Our goal is to develop a comprehensive strategy for assuring that the next generation of Americans comes to maturity as healthy, as well educated, as economically competitive, as mentally and physically developed, and as prepared to succeed as we can deliver them.

Now, after six years of studies, hearings and reports, we must confirm the sad finding that America's children are growing up in crisis—and it is a crisis that will afflict them for decades to come.

The much-heralded economic expansion of the 1980s seems to have left millions of our children behind:

Between 1979 and 1987, childhood poverty increased 24 percent. More than 13 million children are now living in poverty, making children America's poorest age group.

In 1985, more than one quarter of the nation's 1-4 year olds were not fully immunized against rubella, diphtheria, tetanus, and pertussis. Moreover, the percentage of children who received their immunizations in the first two years of life significantly between 1980 and 1985.

Increasing numbers of children and youth are suffering the effects of homelessness and sexual abuse.

The U.S. has the highest infant mortality rate in the industrialized world.

Drop-out rates in some urban high schools exceed 50 percent, pushing the number of drop-outs to over a million young people a year.

Drugs are slaughtering thousands of young people a year, turning many metropolitan areas into open prisons of desperation, crime, poverty, and unemployment, and destroying a generation of young men.

There isn't a single public institution that serves our children and families that is not in a state of full-blown crisis because of the combination of poverty, inadequate health care, drugs, AIDS, violence, and mental illness. And as these crises have been growing, we have contributed to them by slashing housing programs, cutting student loans, reducing federal support for anti-drug programs, and leaving huge gaps in the social welfare safety net.

The United States is one of the richest countries in the world, yet compared to other industrialized countries, we are extremely tight-fisted when it comes to children and families.

Sixty-seven nations—but not the U.S.—provide a monthly or weekly cash benefit to families for every child regardless of income and work status of parents. Single mothers often receive additional assistance.

Many European nations—but not the U.S.—provide maternity grants at the time of childbearing to assist with the cost of supplies and equipment for the new baby.

The United States and South Africa are the only major industrialized nations that do not guarantee some form of job-protected maternity leave and national health care.

Nearly 15 million American women of childbearing age have no private or government health insurance covering maternity. In contrast, 10 European nations have set uniform national standards for perinatal care.

Not only does the U.S. lack the policies of other nations, but those programs that do exist are frequently funded at low levels that serve only a fraction of the eligible women and children. We, as a society, are already paying a terrible price for abandoning our neediest and most at-risk citizens. We are paying a price in crime, in unemployment, in developmentally disabled babies, in premature deaths, in lower productivity among workers, in the billions we spend on prisons, on courts, on intensive care units—on cleaning up for the indifference we have allowed to become national policy.

I have recently introduced legislation that would seek to end this indifference. It would ensure that by the end of the Bush Administration:

Every eligible woman could receive prenatal health care and nutritional assistance;

Every impoverished child would be immunized, would have access to routine health care, and could attend Head Start.

Yet it is far from clear that this legislation will become law.

THE NEED FOR THE CONVENTION AND WHAT IT PROVIDES

I am sure that many of us believe that children have the right to demand adequate housing, health care, nutrition, education, and protection. Sadly, American society has been slow to recognize these rights.

This is why the U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child is so vitally important. If approved and ratified, it will represent an international consensus on what all nations owe their children and youth. The rights provided by the Convention include:

The right to food, and shelter;

The rights to education and basic health care;

The right to protection from sexual exploitation, family violence, illicit drugs, exploitative labor, and cruel or degrading punishment.

The convention would also provide:

(1) A legal framework for the protection of children and their families;

(2) A monitoring system to hold governments accountable for their treatment of children;

(3) A vehicle for mobilizing advocates and teaching children about peace and human rights.

The one area in which the Convention is lacking concerns the tragic practice of sending child soldiers into combat. Children are being recruited as soldiers in armed conflicts throughout the world. As many as 100,000 thousand child soldiers were killed in the Iran-Iraq war alone. Surprisingly, international law currently sanctions child soldiers as young as 15.

When final touches were being put on the treaty last year, several nations tried to raise the minimum combat age to 18, but the United States objected. Indeed, our government singlehandedly stymied efforts to get children off the world's battlefields. Thirty-five Members of Congress joined me in wrting to the Administration to express our outrage. Sadly, we have seen no evidence of a change in the President's position.

Despite the absence of an increase in the minimum combat age, however, the U.N. Convention deserves our unhesitating support. The treaty will serve as a moral lever for those in the Congress and around the world fighting to increase our government's commitment to children. By setting out a legal framework for protecting children and their families and establishing a monitoring system, we can hold governments throughout the world accountable for improving the lives of children.

Make no mistake about it: industrialized nations that agree to the Convention will not automatically invest in children nor will the Convention provide the essential resources to undeveloped countries. But like the Geneva Conventions, which have effectively set standards for conduct in war, the Convention on the Rights of the Child will set an international standard for the treatment of children.

Our tasks are clear. First, it is essential to ensure that the Convention receives approval by the U.N. General Assembly in November. Once approved, twenty of the U.N.'s member nations must ratify it before it becomes effective. Therefore, we must all strive to ensure first that the Convention is approved, then that it is ratified, and finally that it's contents are widely known. International private sector organizations have been instrumental in guiding the treaty to its current position. Now that we're onto the playing field, grassroots organizations, such as your, need to step up their campaign.

This week, Members of Congress are joining me in urging President Bush to give strong U.S. approval to the treaty. Your help is needed, too, to rally support for the convention. I urge all of you to write the President and your representatives in the Congress to tell them that you support the treaty. Moreover, after the Convention becomes international law, your efforts to ensure that the treaty is widely known will be central to its effectiveness.

SALUTE TO THE ALLIED COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Allied Council of Senior Citizens of Wisconsin which will be celebrating its 25th anniversary on October 14, 1989.

I have been privileged to work with the Allied Council on many important issues facing today's senior citizens. I have been impressed with the dedication and enthusiasm they bring to each cause they approach. They have worked on a wide range of issues including affordable health care for the elderly, crime prevention programs, and the cleanup of the Milwaukee River estuary. Their concern reaches beyond their membership to all future generations of senior citizens.

For 25 years the Allied Council of Senior Citizens has represented the unique social and political interests of Wisconsin's senior population. They have insured that their membership has a voice in local, State, and Federal legislation which affects their daily lives. They continue to fight hard to guarantee that senior citizens have the means to live their lives in peace and dignity.

Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to honor the members of the Allied Council of Senior Citizens of Wisconsin on their 25th anniversary. I look forward to continuing working with all of them on the many critical problems facing America's senior citizens.

CONGRATULATIONS ST. MARY'S COLLEGE OF MARYLAND

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate St. Mary's College of Maryland for its outstanding performance in a recent survey of American colleges sponsored by U.S. News & World Report. St. Mary's was ranked first out of 74 regional liberal-arts colleges located in the northern United States. This well-deserved national recognition is a source of pride for me and for all Marylanders.

The college's historical roots reach far back into Maryland's past. Founded in 1840 in St. Mary's City, the State's first capital, St. Mary's is the oldest public college in Maryland. Because it is a State school, St. Mary's stands out from many of the other institutions of higher learning honored in this survey. State funding enables St. Mary's to offer affordable tuition prices, yet the college remains dedicated to scholarship and maintains the environment to foster such dedication. In an age of skyrocketing costs for postsecondary education, St. Mary's commitment to provide low-cost education for its students is indeed special.

The five categories according to which the colleges were ranked were academic reputation, student selectivity, retention patterns, faculty quality, and financial resources. Of the 74 northern colleges, St. Mary's was found to be the most selective about its student population. This selectivity, combined with considerable faculty accessibility, small class size, and an exclusively liberal arts curriculum, are elements of the St. Mary's educational experience worthy of the highest praise.

This kind of distinction has the positive effect of nurturing the excellence it seeks to honor. I have every confidence that St. Mary's College will strive to maintain, if not exceed, the standards commended in the U.S. News & World Report study. St. Mary's' growing reputation will encourage more students to apply for admission and generate increased funding, enhancing further the quality of the college community.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the hard work and the dedication to quality of the administrators, faculty, students, and support personnel of St. Mary's College. I would like to thank them for making St. Mary's an example of academic excellence at a time of difficulty for American education. Once again, my congratulations and my heartfelt thanks to everyone.

ESOP's—AN AMERICAN SUCCESS STORY

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to pass along a message—the Employee Stock Ownership Plan [ESOP] is not broken—so, let's not fix it. In fact, ESOP's are an American success story that benefit our economy and democracy. The following article clearly addresses the focus of current legislation, and I urge you to read it closely.

If you want to take a positive step to help working Americans, support ESOP's and ensure that ESOP laws are utilized properly, then you may be interested in legislation that I introduced.

My bill, H.R. 3364, will aid in the establishment of ESOP's by doing three things: First, require the ESOP to hold at least 20 percent of the corporation's stock before the ESOP lender interest exclusion is available; second, limit the ESOP lender interest exclusion—even if the 20 percent threshold is met—to loan proceeds of $100 million or less, and; third, allow an exception of the $100 million limit for ESOP's which would hold over 50 percent of the corporation's stock. In addition, my bill does not change current law on the deductibility of dividends paid on ESOP stock or affect voting rights requirements.

[From the Journal of Commerce, Oct. 2, 1989]

DON'T MEDDLE WITH ESOPS

(By Louis O. Kelso and Patricia Hetter Kelso)

House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., wants to take back a tax incentive that encourages loans to employee stock ownership plans, or ESOP's, by exempting half the interest received from income tax.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, wants to limit this exclusion to ESOPs that provide employees with at least 30% ownership of the company and grant employees full voting rights.

Both legislators think that banks and other qualified lenders are munching too greedily on this particular tax carrot. Rep. Rostenkowski estimates an $8 billion loss to the U.S. Treasury if Wall Street proceeds with plans to trade tax-sheltered ESOP debt publicly.

Both Rep. Rostenkowski and Sen. Bentsen are friends of ESOP's; they simply want to correct what they regard as an abusive loophole, while engaging in the Procrustean task of cutting the federal budget deficit to fit the Gramm-Rudman Act. Even popular programs like the ESOP must sacrifice a few pounds of flesh to the deficit, they say.

But ESOP tax incentives are in a class apart. They are Congress' sharpest tools for eliminating the chief cause of future budget deficits—welfare payments, open and disguised, to the growing numbers of Americans who are falling behind in their struggle to earn an adequate living.

More than half of all federal and state taxes are levied to support the unemployed and their families. Another 15% to 20% of federal and state taxes are levied to support boondoggles—economic activities artificially contrived to foster full employment.

Successful ESOP companies—and they're the majority—pay more taxes after establishing ESOP's than before. They also hire more people. A spectacular case in point is Tennessee's North American Rayon Co., rescued from extinction by an ESOP just before Christmas 1985. Its payroll has grown from 1,100 to 1,400. The average employee's ESOP account is between $8,600 and $9,000.

ESOPs are thus the answer to Sen. Bentsen's rhetorical question: "Does anybody think we can compete abroad with countries whose cost of capital is half of what ours is?" ESOPs were designed to lower the corporations' capital costs. Loans channeled through ESOPs provide money for expansion, working capital, modernization or other capital expenditures. As the debt is repaid with pretax dollars, an equivalent amount of stock is paid for and simultaneously allocated to employees.

Sen. Bentsen complains that ESOP tax incentives were granted to "benefit employees," not to reduce taxes for banks and other financial institutions and improve corporate financial statements. But one of the beauties of a properly designed ESOP is that the corporation cannot use it to benefit itself without also benefiting its employees.

Sen. Bentsen also wants Americans to save more. The ESOP is the most efficient savings generator ever devised. ESOP stock is savings that painlessly build up in each employee's account over a working lifetime.

ESOPs work in many other ways to make companies more competitive. Take one of the biggest costs, pensions—now so wastefully and expensively funded because contributions are invested in low-yield secondhand securities of other companies. Cashed in at retirement, ESOP stock can supplement or substitute for conventional pension plans.

As for the congressional charge that ESOP financing has become big business with big profits for Wall Street, it is less than 1% as big as the pension fund business. Why would Congress want ESOPs to remain a cottage industry? As it is, less than 3% of 1988's $750 billion of voluntary capital transactions were ESOP-financed. The other 97% were financed in ways that make the rich richer and do nothing for working people, who as consumers as well as producers make or break our economy.

None of Wall Street's non-ESOP financings are governmentally punished if they fail to build capital ownership into at least 30% of employees—a requirement that would keep employees from obtaining even a small ownership stake in the biggest corporations.

Indeed, non-ESOP financings generate no capital ownership for employees at all, except for the few managers needed to help negotiate with deals. When Rep. Rostenkowski worries about high corporate debt, he is confusing short-term ESOP debt that automatically converts itself into employee-owned equity with long-term non-ESOP debt that reduces the number of stockholders, reduces equity and totally neglects employees.

In "Brave New World Revisited," Aldous Huxley advised: "If you believe in democracy, make arrangements to distribute property as widely as possible."

There is a message in that for Sen. Bentsen and Rep. Rostenkowski and other members of Congress. It is: The ESOP isn't broken. It's working for our economy and for our democracy. So please don't fix it!

TRIBUTE TO KIRKWOOD, MO, ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 125TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to a city which epitomizes all that we sentimentally ascribe to the image of a hometown. Kirkwood, MO, is a community reminiscent of the art of Norman Rockwell with its strong sense of tradition and community. It is with great pride that I salute my hometown, Kirkwood, MO, on the occasion of its 125th anniversary.

Kirkwood is one of the many midwestern towns that grew up because of the railroads in the late 19th century, and the old train station still stands in the center of town as a monument to the city's origins. Two St. Louis real estate developers, Richard Elliott and Hiram Leffingwell, began the first planned community west of the Mississippi, and in 1865 the group of houses and businesses that sprang up around the train station received their charter of incorporation from the State of Missouri. Against the backdrop of reconstruction, a young Kirkwood began to expand in all directions. Despite its proximity to urban St. Louis, Kirkwood has always maintained its own sense of identity and history, and it has justly earned its title, "Queen of the Suburbs." I know that somewhere, Mr. Elliott and Mr. Leffingwell are proud of the community they envisioned.

The old train station has seen six generations pass, and it has witnessed its children going off to five different wars. Although the station has seen six generations of change, connecting the advent of the telephone with that of the space shuttle, it has also seen six generations of constancy. Senior citizens now watch their grandchildren play baseball or soccer in the same park where they once played. The pews and vestibules of its churches rest the knees and souls of the old families, as well as the newcomers. The oldest high school football rivalry west of the Mississppi, the annual turkey day game between the Kirkwood Pioneers and the Webster Groves Statesmen is now in its fourth generation, with its competitive fire undiminished. And while the trolley on Main Street has been replaced by cars on Argonne, Lindbergh Boulevard will always be called Kirkwood Road between Big Bend and Manchester.

Today, Kirkwood is a modern, medium-sized suburb of more than 30,000 people. It has its share of people of wealth, as well as those on hard times, though the charity of its citizens has traditionally done much to alleviate the latter. Whether it is the Greentree Festival, or year-round, residents enjoy over 300 acres of park land, including the very large city park, with its community center and theater. Kirkwood Library is one of the best muncipal libraries in the Midwest, with over 116,000 books, and Kirkwood High School's journalism program has been called the best in the country. Its parochial and public schools constantly score in the upper percentiles of students tested, and now Kirkwood is home to Meramec Community College, one of the Nation's prototypical 2-year institutions merging students just out of high school with those reentering the job market, and those just interested in learning. The little train station just west of St. Louis has engendered a thriving community with a strong legacy from the past and a sense of purpose for the future.

Mr. Speaker, there is so much I could say about Kirkwood that would be lost upon anyone who has never been there, and still more that would mean nothing to anyone who has never lived in Kirkwood, but I will say this: There are few things nearer to the heart of the American spirit than the hometown with its strong sense of belonging and community. On the occasion of its 125th anniversary, I submit that Kirkwood is exactly that, home in all of its majestic simplicity.

BILL PRESENTMENT AND VETOES

HON. LYNN MARTIN

OF ILLINOIS

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Rules Subcommittee on the Legislative Process, on which I serve as the ranking Republican member, recently held a hearing on the subject of the pocket veto and H.R. 849 introduced by the subcommittee chairman, Mr. DERRICK. H.R. 849 would clarify that a President may only pocket veto a bill at the end of a Congress and require the Clerk of the House to notify the Speaker in writing whenever the President does not sign or return a bill within 10 days.

I am still not satisfied that this is a proper area for a legislative solution since the courts will ultimately have to resolve the constitutional issues involved, regardless of what we do. To date, various courts have spoken with mixed voices on the issue of whether the President can pocket a veto between sessions of a Congress or even within the same session when one or both Houses have recessed for more than 3 days.

Nevertheless, this debate raises some related issues which I think should be addressed if we do move on H.R. 849. One is the expeditious presentment of the bills to the President once they have finally passed both Houses. The time now varies widely depending not just on practical considerations, but on political considerations as well. I do not think the timing of presentment should be a matter for political discretion.

It should only be a ministerial function once Congress has acted. The officers involved in processing legislation should act expeditiously to present a bill to the President once the Congress has exercised its political judgment by finally clearing a bill. And most legislation is indeed sent to the President within a week after the Congress has acted.

But there are instances in which bills are held up for much longer periods for other than technical or practical reasons. At the end of the last Congress, for example, two bills which were eventually pocket vetoed, were not presented to the President until over 3 weeks after our October 22 adjournment—well after the November 8 elections.

And in this Congress, the congressional disapproval resolution on the FSX fighter plane was held up for over 6 weeks before it was finally sent to the President, and the minimum wage bill for 2 months.

Mr. Speaker, another related problem is the manner in which vetoed bills are handled once they are returned by the President. Despite the constitutional mandate that the originating House proceed to reconsider a vetoed bill after the President's veto message has been entered on the Journal, a procedural device has been used in recent years to give priority to motions to refer or postpone rather than to proceed to a vote on overriding the veto.

Prior to the use of this device, it was customary for the Speaker to put the question on reconsideration immediately after the reading of the veto message. In that way, the previous question would precedence over motions to postpone or refer. If the previous question was adopted, the House would proceed to a vote on override; and if defeated, it would then be in order to offer the alternative motions.

To deal with these problems, I am today introducing a bill which incorporates the pocket veto provisions of the Derrick bill, with modification, and adding provisions to ensure the expeditious presentation of bills to the President and permit an expeditious vote on overriding a veto. Under the latter provision, the Speaker would be required to immediately put the question on reconsideration of a vetoed bill, and the previous question motion could only be preempted by a motion to postpone to a day certain of up to 10 legislative days. A motion to refer would still be in order if the previous question was defeated.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think these additional provisions will provide greater balance to the Derrick bill by not only protecting against Presidential abuse of the pocket veto, but by ensuring that the Congress acts fairly, responsibly and expeditiously both in presenting legislation to the President and in considering a vetoed bill returned by the President.

At this point in the RECORD I include a summary of my bill, and an article from Roll Call on the delays in presentment.

The materials follow:

H.R. 849

WHY DID IT TAKE SIX WEEKS TO GET THE FSX BILL FROM ONE END OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE TO THE OTHER? MICHEL IMPLIES DEMOCRATS DELAYED ARCANE ENROLLING PROCESS TO PUT OFF VETO BY BUSH

(By Carin Dessauer)

House Minority Leader Bob Michel (R-Ill) recently demanded to know why a joint resolution that passed the Senate on May 16 and the House on June 7 did not get to President Bush's desk until July 19.

Michel's letter to House Speaker Tom Foley (D-Wash) and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell (D-Maine) on Senate Joint Resolution 113, which expressed Congressional disapproval of the White House agreement with the Japanese on developing the FSX fighter, points up a little-known quirk of government procedure.

The quirk is that the Constitution makes no mention of how long Congress can take to send a bill that it's passed on to the President.

With the FSX resolution, the delay in sending the legislation to the White House meant a delay in the President's vetoing it.

When Michel wrote his letter, the resolution still had not been sent up Pennsylvania Avenue—six weeks after it had been passed by both Houses. When it did reach the White House shortly after the letter was sent, Bush, as expected, vetoed it.

By tradition, after legislation passes both Houses, it is "enrolled" on artificial parchment, heavy sheets of paper held together with a brass pronged clip. It is then signed by the leaders of both Houses and sent to the White House.

The process should only take a few days, or, at most, two weeks.

But in the case of the FSX resolution, which would have put restrictions on a Japanese-US agreement to co-produce the fighter, the delay seemed to have political reasons behind it.

Michel wrote in his letter to the Democratic leaders: "Some have speculated that this Resolution is being held in the Senate in anticipation of passage of a defense authorization bill, to which the FSX resolution could be attached, thus forcing the President to veto the entire defense authorization in order to accommodate his desire to veto the FSX disapproval."

Michel added: "I hope that the signing of this legislation is not being delayed to achieve some partisan advantage. Once the Congress has acted, it would seem to me that the procedures for sending legislation to the President are purely ministerial in nature and should not be used to serve ulterior motives. There has been enough abuse of procedure. . . ."

While the Constitution specifies that a president has ten days to consider whether to sign legislation, it places no time constraints on Congress. Nowhere in the Constitution or in Congressional rules is there regulation of the procedure by which legislation goes from the Capitol to the White House.

Staffers in the offices of the Parliamentarians and the Clerks say that the flow is normally smooth and that few delays occur. "As soon as the legislation is enrolled and signed, it can be sent," one staffer said. But the same staffer admitted that from time to time, legislation is delayed for political purposes.

Another bill that was delayed on its way to the White House this year was minimum wage legislation. It passed the House on March 23 and the Senate on April 12, but did not arrive at the White House until June 13. The President, as expected, vetoed the bill—the same day he received it.

Rep. Terry Bruce (D-Ill), a primary sponsor of the FSX legislation, denies that dilatory tactics were used on the fighter resolution.

And Speaker Tom Foley (D-Wash) told Roll Call that the reason for not sending the FSX legislation to the White House sooner was that the President was out of the country.

A staffer with the Secretary of the Senate told Roll Call that his office was told by the Senate leadership to hold onto the legislation after it was passed. "We were not given any reason to hold it," said the staffer, who did admit that over the years legislation has been held for political purposes.

NATIONAL BOXING GOODWILL AMBASSADOR

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, when it comes to security, there probably isn't a safer building in the world than the Longworth Building. That's because of our champion prize fighting friend Jim Balukevich.

What follows is a brief description of just why Mr. Balukevich is such a distinguished citizen of our country.

NATIONAL BOXING GOODWILL AMBASSADOR

The one individual that unofficial title brings to many minds (and who has, incontestably, earned such honorable recognition) is Jim Balukevich . . . long time member of the Washington, D.C. Boxing Commission, and founder of the D.C. Boxing Hall of Fame.

This transplanted New Englander was born at Nashua, New Hampshire, where he eventually captained its 1933-34 H.S. basketball team; winning a college basketball scholarship as a result thereof. He turned it down to join the U.S. Army, and it was while stationed at Schofield Barracks, Oahu, Hawaii, that he went out for the boxing team . . . and wound up winning a bronze medal in the Hawaiian Division Boxing Tournament, in 1938.

An interesting sidelight of his Hawaii duty was his election to the social-political post as the wartime "Cock-Eyed Mayor" of the island town of Kaunakakai (pronounced cow-na-cock-eye), succeeding Hollywood's Warner Baxter. Ironically, Jim was subsequently made "Mayor for a Day" of his old hometown, Nashua (while on furlough from Camp Davis, N.C., in 1940), and received a replica of the key to the same city from Mayor James Donchess during a return visit last year.

Alaska duty followed, from which he was shipped to Corregidor (in the Philippines). It was Jim's outfit that liberated Saipan on June 15, 1944, which explains retired Ben Blaz (now a Congressman) referring to Balukevich as "The Liberator of the Islands" (Marianas, Guam, Saipan and Tinian), and Jim was again made a Mayor . . . this time of Garapan (Saipan's biggest city). The title "Mayor" suits this gentleman, really, as his present employment in D.C. keeps him in constant touch with politicians of all persuasions on Capitol Hill, and he attends scores of congressional affairs and parties. It is, therefore, genuinely fitting that he is also often referred to as "The National Veteran Boxers Association's Man in Washington."

Jim is a George Washington University graduate and remains active in its psychology chapter, as well as being a member of the National Honor Society in Psychology. Representative Fred Grandy (formerly of "Love Boat") recently added to Jim's academic credentials by presentation of an honorary degree from the University of Okoboji, a college of physical education in Iowa; also adding a spoof of Ph.D. in "Uplifting Behavior." At this point, it does well to point out that this goodwill ambassador—for all seasons—has been the deserving recipient of many, many awards and citations for boxing-related as well as community endeavors, and was inducted into the D.C. Boxing Hall of Fame, in 1987.

His travels throughout the country attending V.B.A. functions and promoting the welfare of the veteran boxer also compliments his memberships in the American Association for the Improvement of Boxing (A.A.I.B.) and the West Coast's Cauliflower Alley Club (Mike Mazurki, President). He is in constant demand as a "Presenter" and speaker at boxing, wrestling and other sports events, and constantly criss-crosses the U.S. voicing his welcome opinions on legislation re boxing bills to strengthen the sport. He advocates the establishment of a National Federal Boxing Commission, and Congressman Bill Richardson has recommended that he serve as commissioner when it someday becomes a reality. He has seen many fighters come and go but still ranks Joe Louis as "the best boxing champ I ever met . . . and I doubt there will ever be gentlemen like Joe in boxing again."

This 74-year old former boxer is also a member of the "Honorable Order of Kentucky Colonels," an Honorary Lieutenant Colonel Aide-de-Camp in the Alabama State Militia, an Admiral of the Georgia Navy, a member of No. Carolina's "The Order of the Long Leaf Pine," a designated Ambassador of Good Will of the Cherokee Nation, a Deputy Marshal of Dodge City, a graduate of the U.S. Army Language School at the Presidio of Monterey, California (Russian), and a sport historian and artist on Capitol Hill. And somehow, he's also managed the time to contest and win the Senior Olympics Middleweight Boxing Championship (65-69 age group) in 1980, 1982 and 1984 (held at the Bob Hope U.S.O. Center, Hollywood, California, and the National Skip-rope Championships in 1981, 1982, and 1984 . . . proof positive that "A boxer may retire from the ring, but he never retires his love of the sport."

On November 10, 1989, Jim Balukevich's many laurels and accolades will be enhanced by his induction, it was read into the Congressional Record that "he is the kind of person that personifies the very best that the manly sport of boxing embodies." Anyone knowing this gentleman will readily re-echo those of this extra fine human being are at the helm.

The boxing world offers its congratulations, and I'm honored having his friendship.

SUMMIT HERALD'S 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Members of this House to the 100th anniversary of the Summit Herald, one of the oldest weekly newspapers published in New Jersey.

Founded in October 1889, by David M. Smythe, the Summit Herald has grown in circulation and reputation as a local newspaper dedicated to covering the wide variety of activities that take place in the city of Summit and the surrounding area. It has chronicled the growth of Summit and its suburban neighbors with accuracy and a sense of community responsibility.

Since David Smythe founded the newspaper in a building at Morris and Springfield Avenues, Summit, it has been operated by several outstanding editors. They include Edward Winthrop Gray and John W. Clift; Clift's son, Fred, sold the newspaper to Norman S. Garis, Fred L. Palmer, and J. Edwin Carter, and in 1946, Carl S. Hulett and Eve Forbes bought the Herald. After Mr. Hulett's retirement in 1967, Mrs. Forbes and Norman E. Rauscher were responsible for the operations of the Herald. It was later sold to the late Helen Vance Levenson, who moved the Herald to 80 South Street, New Providence, where it now operates under the ownership of Ingersoll Publications. The present editor is Yvonne Stecher.

Since its founding a century ago, the Herald has seen Summit grow from a small township of slightly more than 2,500, to a suburban city of 22,000. The Herald has chronicled Summit's change from a farm area to a residential town.

During the last 100 years the Herald has been in the forefront of positive and momentous change in all areas of life. The Herald was a leader in updating local news coverage and has won several national and State Press Association awards over the years. It initiated the Summit Herald Camp Fund in 1949 and the Summit Christmas Fund in the early 1950's for needy local families.

I join the residents and business people of the Summit area in paying tribute to one of the city's most indispensable traditions, a newspaper devoted to the free exchange of ideas and a positive force in the communities it serves.

BAN ON IMPORTED AND DOMESTIC ASSAULT WEAPONS OPPOSED

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, recently I cosponsored legislation which would ban the importation and domestic manufacture of certain semiautomatic assault weapons.

Since cosponsoring H.R. 1190 on September 18, I have received nearly 1,500 telephone calls and letters in my Washington and western Kentucky district offices from constituents expressing their views about the legislation. Of these constituents, approximately 900 oppose the legislation and my cosponsoring H.R. 1190.

While I remain a cosponsor of and committed to H.R. 1190, I believe it only fair to convey to my colleagues the views of my constituents opposed to the proposal as I did last week for those constituents of mine who support the legislation.

As such, I would like to share with my colleagues a letter I recently received from 10 of my constituents, only 2 of whom are members of the National Rifle Association, who state in no uncertain terms their opposition to H.R. 1190.

The letter from my 10 constituents follows:

SEPTEMBER 19, 1989.

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HUBBARD: We are very disappointed in your recent decision to support H.R. 1190 by co-sponsoring that anti-Constitutional legislation. It is our understanding that your decision was reached as a result of your recent mail poll and the tragedies of Louisville and Stockton. We have talked to several people who think that H.R. 1190 strictly pertains to true assault weapons, i.e., select fire or fully automatic weapons. It is a virtual certainty that the outcome of this poll would have been different if the facts were known to the average participant of your poll. We offer as reference a call-in poll conducted by WTVF [Channel 5] in Nashville, Tenn. on September 15, 1989. The result of that poll were 58% opposed to banning semiautomatic weapons. No doubt that several western Kentuckians participated in that poll.

While the killings in Louisville and Stockton were tragic, it is not the basis for trying to legislate away the Second Amendment rights provided for the law abiding citizens of this country to keep and bear arms. This right was certainly not intended by our forefathers to be limited to hunting arms, but arms necessary to maintain a free country from any potential dictatorial government. This includes the arms of the day, which certainly includes semi-automatic firearms.

As bad as the aforementioned shootings were, anyone proficient with firearms knows that both incidents could have had a much higher death toll if the shooters were using plain ordinary shotguns which are more lethal at close range than any rifle, semi-automatic or otherwise. To ban semi-automatic firearms will not only violate the Constitutional rights of the people, but could educate the lunatics of the country about an even more deadly weapon.

Also, if you are so concerned about senseless killing, why not address a real killer, which is alcohol. The bus crash in northern Kentucky killed more innocent people than any shooting spree. Last Saturday night on I-24 in your own western Kentucky area a reportedly drunk driver going the wrong way on the interstate killed two people and injured four more. One of the innocent victims was a sixteen year old girl. Certainly these alcohol related killings are more common than some maniac on a shooting spree, yet you are not banning alcohol. Where is your indignation concerning that menace? We certainly view a drunk driver as more of a death threat to us than someone on a shooting spree.

In summary, we would like to say that you have disappointed many western Kentuckians. We request that you honor your campaign platform to oppose gun control. If you cannot do that we will cast our support to a candidate at the next election who can. You have been a long time friend of the gun owner. Please show us you still are and withdraw your support from H.R. 1190.

Sincerely,

Gary Haddock, Hopkinsville; Grant McKibben, Jr., Hopkinsville; Robert Dunnagan, Cadiz; Lindsey Champion, Cadiz; Sherry M. Grace, Crofton; Sue A. Jones, Hopkinsville; Daniel S. Heltsley, Hopkinsville; John W. Berry, Pembroke; Michael Berry, Pembroke; Joe Shelton, Pembroke.

Please note that of the above signed only two are NRA members, so opposition to your bill is not limited to the NRA.

AN ENVIRONMENTAL "NOBEL PRIZE"

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House of Representatives should join in saluting Richard and Rhoda Goldman of San Francisco who have established the Goldman Environmental Prize to honor grassroots environmentalists around the world.

The Goldmans have been avid environmentalists throughout their lives and have made truly significant contributions to preserve and protect our natural resources. The Goldman Environmental Prize is a magnificent addition to the Goldmans' life-long support of environmental activists and causes.

The Goldman Environmental Prize will be very much like the MacArthur fellowships. Annually, $360,000 will be divided among six "ecological warriors", one from each inhabited continent. This is by far the largest cash prize for environmental activists in the world. The first winners will be announced next spring—during the celebrations for Earth Day.

Honoring grassroots activists around the world is a brilliant idea. The work of these people is absolutely crucial if our environment—our global environment—is to be preserved for future generations. This work finally will be recognized in a fitting and appropriate way. Equally important, the award should encourage others to get involved in environmental issues—and follow the footsteps of the Goldman Prize winners.

I am pleased that the Goldman award is an international one. The threats to our environment are global—the greenhouse effect, the destruction of our rain forests, the pollution of the oceans and waterways, the proliferation of hazardous wastes, the extinction of wildlife—and the response to these and other threats must also be global. The Goldman award underscores the importance of international cooperation. It will link environmental activists together throughout the world. This will become a powerful force to preserve our planet.

Mr. Speaker, the Goldmans deserve our thanks and our congratulations.

TRIBUTE TO THEATRE X

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to honor Wisconsin's premier experimental theater group, Theatre X, on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of its founding.

For 20 years Theatre X has challenged theater patrons around the world with its unique style of original theater. The Theatre X troupe has performed to critical acclaim throughout much of Europe, and maintains an annual residency at the Mickery Theater in Amsterdam. On the national level, Theatre X has toured extensively and maintained residencies with highly esteemed theater groups such as Seattle's New City Theater and San Francisco's Life of the Water. Theatre X is one of Wisconsin's finest contributions to the vitality and quality of the arts. We are pleased and proud to have Theatre X represent Milwaukee's cultural community through its work.

Founded in 1969 by Conrad and Linda Bishop, John Schneider, Flora Coker, John Kishline, and Deborah Clifton, Theatre X has the distinction of being one of the longest-surviving experimental theater groups in our country. Its longevity is due, in part, to the excellence of its original works and to the dedication and skill of its members. Theatre X has become, in the words of the National Endowment for the Arts, "a piece of living history."

Theatre X has been dedicated, from its inception, to exploring the cogent social and personal issues of contemporary life. The "X" of Theatre X represents the unknown factor—like an algebraic expression, Theatre X can change in relationship to the world around them. This flexibility and insistence on exploring the meaning of contemporary life results in a unique and challenging style of theater. By challenging our world, Theatre X helps us to come to a better understanding of the forces that shape the world we live in.

The work of Theatre X has not gone unnoticed. "A History of Sexuality," written by Theatre X members John Schneider, John Kishline and Milwaukee writer Julia Romanski, was nominated in 1988 for Outstanding Achievement on the American Stage. "I Can't Stop Loving You," written by Theatre X Members John Kishline and Wesley Savage, was nominated for 1 of the 10 best new plays of 1988 by the American Association of Drama Critics. John Schneider was the 1988 recipient of one of eight National Endowment for the Arts grants given "to encourage the development of professional playwrights of exceptional talent." Theatre X deserves these awards, and merits more.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor Theatre X on its 20th anniversary, and wish them well for continued success.

THANKING THE FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, September 22, after causing widespread destruction in South Carolina, Hurricane Hugo entered North Carolina and passed through my congressional district. The hurricane force winds caused hundreds of thousands of people to be without power, and caused millions of dollars of damage to homes and businesses. By October 3, every county in my district had been declared a Federal disaster area, making us eligible for disaster assistance from the Federal Emergency Management Agency [FEMA].

This past weekend, I visited the FEMA Disaster Assistance Center in Hickory. While there, I was handed a letter from one of my constituents whose house was destroyed when it was struck by six trees. I was moved by the letter because she expresses so much confidence and gratitude for the efforts of the Federal Government. I would like to quote her letter, "You can go 40 years—maybe longer—thinking what government is all about is taxes and rules, and appreciating neither. Then suddenly disaster strikes * * * And it dawns on you, the system—at least this part of it—is set up to care. You feel held, nurtured * * * It makes you want to cry."

Far too many times the system that we are so proud to serve is harshly criticized. Most recently, FEMA has been subject to this criticism in the handling of its hurricane relief efforts in the Carolinas, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico. I realize there are problems in the process; however, the efforts I witnessed this weekend impressed me. I wanted to share these words of praise from my constituent and also thank the people working in the Disaster Assistance Center offices across the Carolinas, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. WALLACE E. JONES

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 12, 1989

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to a man who has devoted himself and his life to the service of God and his fellow man. On November 5, 1989, Dr. Wallace E. Jones will be celebrating his 30th anniversary as pastor of Fee Fee Baptist Church; this is a major milestone in a long and distinguished career. Dr. Jones' dedication to his faith and his brethren should be an inspiration to us all.

The term pastor is taken from the latin word for shepherd, and I can think of no better word to describe Dr. Jones' vocation: to guide and care for his own small flock, leading as a patient father in a congregational family.

I would certainly be remiss if I did not mention Dr. Jones' distinguished record of service within the Baptist Church, for his accomplishments are far too many to list here. Most notably, though, Dr. Jones has been president of the St. Louis Baptist Pastor's Conference, president of the Missouri Baptist Convention, chairman of the nominating committee for the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board, a member of the constitution committee for the Missouri Baptist Church, and a featured speaker at numerous Missouri Baptist events. Yet for all these and dozens of other positions and honors, Dr. Jones' career has always centered around Fee Fee Baptist Church, and its community of worshippers who have found God through this church and its leader.
